Dear Gary:

Pursuant to Senate Rule 34 and section 102(f) of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978, I am filing with the Office of Public Records the enclosed blind trust document which has been approved by the Senate Select Committee on Ethics.

With best wishes,

Cordially,

TED STEVENS

Enclosure

TRUST AGREEMENT

THIS TRUST AGREEMENT made and entered into this 13th day of May, 1997, between Senator Theodore F. Stevens whose home address is 4409 W Street, N.W., hereinafter called the Grantor, and M.A. Schapiro & Co., Inc., whose business address is One Chase Manhattan Plaza, New York, New York 10005, hereinafter called the Trustee.

WITNESSETH

GRANTOR is a United States Senator for the State of Alaska. To avoid any conflict of interest, or appearance of any such conflict, which may arise from his duties and powers in such office and any other office to which he may subsequently be appointed to the extent provided for by Section 102(f)(4)(A) of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978 (Pub. L. 95-521, as amended) [hereinafter referred to as the "Act"], Grantor hereby creates a trust to be administered in accordance with the requirements of the Act, which shall become effective on the date this agreement bears.

The Trustee is an eligible person, as specified in Section 102(f)(3)(A) who meets the requirements of such section.

Grantor, therefore, hereby delivers to the Trustee, and the Trustee hereby acknowledges receipt of, the property listed in the annexed Schedule A, subject to the provisions of this Trust and the Act, and other applicable Federal laws.

The primary purpose of this Trust is to entrust to the Trustee decisions as to when and to what extent the original assets of the Trust are to be sold or disposed of and in what investments the proceeds of sale are to be reinvested, without any participation in, or knowledge of, such decisions by any interested person. Accordingly, the Grantor and the Trustee agree as follows:

FIRST: (A) This Trust shall terminate upon the first to occur of the following: (1) Grantor's ceasing for any reason to serve as a U.S. Senator and in any other position to which he may have been subsequently appointed or elected in the Federal Government and Grantor thereafter giving Trustee written notice directing that this Trust be terminated; or (2) Grantor's death or incompetence. The period between the date of this agreement and the termination of the Trust shall be called the "Trust Term".

(B) Notwithstanding Paragraph (A) of this Article FIRST, this Trust Agreement may in addition be terminated through revocation.

SECOND: The Trustee shall administer this trust in accordance with the requirements of the Act and, in the exercise of its authority and discretion to manage and control the assets of this Trust shall not consult or notify any interested party.

THIRD: (A) Each asset listed in the annexed Schedule A is free of any restriction with respect to its transfer or sale, except as fully described in such Schedule A, and none of the assets listed are prohibited by any law or regulation.

(B) During the Trust Term, the interested parties shall not pledge, mortgage, or otherwise encumber their interests in the property held in trust hereunder.

FOURTH: The Trustee shall not knowingly or negligently disclose to the public or to any interested party any information as to the acquisition, retention, or disposition of any particular securities or other Trust property; except that, the Trustee shall promptly notify the Grantor, the U.S. Senate Select Committee on Ethics, and the Secretary of the Senate, Office of Public Records when the holdings of a particular asset transferred to the Trust by any interested party have been completely disposed of or when the value of that asset becomes less than $1,000.

FIFTH: The income tax return of the Trust shall be prepared by the Trustee or his designee, and such return and any information relating thereto (other than the Trust income summarized in appropriate categories necessary to complete an interested party's tax return), shall not be disclosed to the public or to any interested party. To effectuate the provisions of this Article FIFTH, the Trustee shall use its best efforts to provide the interested party, promptly after the close of each taxable year of the Trust during the Trust Term, with that information concerning the Trust, including information on income, expenses, capital gains and capital losses, which is necessary for the interested party to prepare and file tax returns required by the laws of the United States and the laws of any State, district or political subdivision; provided however, that in no event shall the Trustee disclose publicly or to any interested party any information whatsoever which might identify the securities or other property which comprise the assets of the Trust or identify the securities or other property which have been sold from the assets of the Trust.

SIXTH: An interested party shall not receive any report on the holdings and sources of income of the Trust other than provided by Article FOURTH of this trust; except that the Trustee shall:

(A) Make quarterly reports of the total cash value of such interested party's interest in the Trust,

(B) Report the net income or loss of the Trust and make other reports necessary to enable the interested party to complete an individual tax return required by law (in accordance with Article FIFTH of this Trust), and

(C) Provide an annual report for purposes of Section 102(a)(1) of the Act of the aggregate amount of the Trust's income attributable to the beneficial interest in the Trust of such interested party, categorized in accordance with the provisions of such section.

FBI - Stevens-5337

SEVENTH: There shall be no direct or indirect communication between an interested party and the Trustee with respect to the Trust unless:

(A) It relates to a request for a distribution from the Trust of cash or other unspecified assets of the trust, or

(B) The communication is in writing and is filed by the person initiating the communication at the office of the U.S. Senate Select Committee on Ethics within five days of the communication, and it relates only:

(1) To the general financial interest and needs of the interested party (including, but not limited to, an interest in maximizing income or long-term capital gain),

(2) To the notification of the Trustee of a law or regulation subsequently applicable to the reporting individual which prohibits the interested party from holding an asset, which notification directs that the asset not be held by the Trust, or

(3) To directions to the Trustee to sell all of an asset initially placed in the Trust by an interested party which in the determination of the Grantor creates a conflict of interest or the appearance thereof due to the subsequent assumption of duties by the Grantor (but any such direction is not required).

EIGHTH: The interested parties shall not take any action to obtain, and shall take appropriate action to avoid receiving, information with respect to the holdings of, and the sources of income of, the Trust, including obtaining a copy of any Trust tax return filed by the Trustees or any information relating thereto, except for the reports and information specified in Article SIXTH of this Trust.

NINTH: The Trustee shall not knowingly and willfully, or negligently:

(A) Disclose any information to any interested party with respect to this Trust that may not be disclosed pursuant to any provision or requirement of Title I of the Act or this Trust.

(B) Acquire any holding the ownership of which is prohibited by, or not in accordance with the terms of, this Trust, including the acceptance of any contribution in cash or in kind to the trust from an individual other than the Grantor.

(C) Solicit advice from any interested party with respect to this Trust, which solicitation is prohibited by any provision or requirement of Title I of the Act or this Trust, or

(D) Fail to file any document required by Title I of the Act.

FBI - Stevens-5338

(A) Solicit or receive any information with respect to this Trust that may not be disclosed pursuant to any provision or requirement of Title I of the Act or this Trust. or

(B) Fail to file any document required by Title I of the Act.

ELEVENTH: Subject to such amounts as the Trustee may from time to time reserve for the payment of such income taxes as may be due and payable by the Trust, and for payment of expenses and compensation as provided for in this Trust, during the Trust Term the Trustee shall pay to the Grantor such amounts as the Grantor shall direct from time to time.

TWELFTH: In addition to the rights, duties, and powers conferred upon the Trustee by law, the Trustee shall have the following powers, rights, and discretion with respect to any Trust property held by him:

(A) To sell, exchange, or otherwise dispose of the property in such manner and upon such terms as the Trustee in its sole discretion shall deem appropriate.

(B) Except as limited by specific enumeration in this Trust Agreement or subsequent notification pursuant to Article SEVENTH, paragraph (B)(2), to invest and reinvest the principal and any undistributed income, in property of any kind.

(C) Except as limited by specific enumeration in this Trust Agreement, to participate in any reorganization, consolidation, merger, or dissolution of any corporation having stocks, bonds or other securities which may be held at any time, to receive and hold any property which may be allocated or distributed to it by reason of participation in any such reorganization, consolidation, merger, or dissolution.

(D) To exercise all conversion, subscription, voting, and other rights of whatsoever nature pertaining to any such property and to grant proxies, discretionary, or otherwise, with respect thereto.

(E) To elect, appoint, and remove directors of any corporation, the stock of which shall constitute Trust property, and to act through its nominee as a director or officer of any such corporation.

(F) Except as limited by specific enumeration in this Trust Agreement, to manage, control, operate, convert, reconvert, invest, reinvest, sell, exchange, lease, mortgage, grant a security interest in, pledge, pool, or otherwise encumber and deal with the property of this Trust for Trust purposes and in behalf of the Trust to the same extent and with the same powers that any individual would have with respect to his own property and funds (but such actions may not take into account any interests of an interested party or other individual outside of those interests held by the Trust).

(G) Except as limited by specific enumeration in this Trust Agreement, to borrow money from any person or corporation (including the Trustee hereunder) and for the purpose of securing the payment thereof, to pledge, mortgage, or otherwise encumber any and all such Trust property for Trust purposes upon such terms, covenants, and conditions as it may deem proper and also to extend the time of payment of any loans or encumbrances which at any time may be encumbrances on any such Trust property irrespective of by whom the same were made or where the obligations may or should ultimately be borne on such terms, covenants, and conditions as it may deem proper (but such actions may not take into account any interests of an interested party or other individual outside of those interests held by the Trust).

(H) To register any property belonging to the Trust in the name of its nominee, or to hold the same unregistered, or in such form that title shall pass by delivery.

(I) To abandon, settle, compromise, extend, renew, modify, adjust, or submit to arbitration in whole or in part and without the order or decree of any court any and all claims whether such claims shall increase or decrease the assets held under this Trust Agreement.

(J) To determine whether or to what extent receipts should be deemed income or principal, whether or to what extent expenditures should be charged against principal or income, and what other adjustments should be made between principal and income, provided that such adjustments shall not conflict with well-settled rules for the determination of principal and income adjustments, or the Uniform Principal and Income Act, if in effect in the State of New York.

(K) To determine whether or not to amortize bonds purchased at a premium.

(L) Except to the extent otherwise expressly provided in this Trust Agreement, to make distributions to or at the request of an interested party in kind or in cash or partly in each and for such purposes to fix, insofar as legally permissible, the value of any property.

(M) To pay such persons employed by the Trustee to assist it in the administration of the Trust, including investment counsel, accountants, and those engaged for assistance in preparation of tax returns, such sums as the Trustee deems to be reasonable compensation for the services rendered by such persons. Such persons may rely upon and execute the written instructions of the Trustee, and shall not be obliged to inquire into the propriety thereof.

(N) No person may be employed or consulted by the Trustee to assist it in any capacity in the administration of the Trust or the management and control of Trust assets, including investment counsel, investment advisers, accountants, and those engaged for assistance in preparation of tax returns, unless:

(1) if any such employment or consultation is known to any interested party, the person is a signatory to this Trust instrument as a party, subject to the prior approval of the U.S. Senate Select Committee on Ethics,

FBI - Stevens-5340

(2) such person, under all the facts and circumstances, would be determined to be independent of any interested party with respect to the trust arrangement pursuant to the requirements of 102(f)(3)(A)(ii),

(3) such person is instructed by the Trustee to make no disclosure to the public or to any interested party which might identify the securities or other property which comprise the assets of the Trust or identify securities or other property which have been sold from the assets of the Trust, or of any other information which may not be disclosed by the Trustee, and

(4) such person is instructed by the Trustee to have no direct communication with any interested party, and that any indirect communication with an interested party shall be made only through the Trustee pursuant to Article SEVENTH of this Trust.

(O) Except as specifically limited in this Trust Agreement, to do all such acts, take all such proceedings, and exercise all such rights and privileges, although not otherwise specifically mentioned in this Article TWELFTH, with relation to any such Trust property, as if the Trustee were the absolute owner thereof, and in connection therewith to make, execute, and deliver any instruments and to enter into any covenants or agreements binding the Trust.

THIRTEENTH: The Trustee shall not at any time be held liable for any action taken or not taken or for any loss or depreciation of the value of any property held in the Trust whether due to an error of judgment or otherwise where the Trustee has exercised good faith and ordinary diligence in the exercise of its duties such as would have been exercised by a prudent man.

FOURTEENTH: No Trustee hereunder shall be required, in any jurisdiction, to furnish any bond or other security, or to obtain the approval of any court before applying, distributing, selling, or otherwise dealing with property.

FIFTEENTH: Except as provided in Article SIXTH of this Trust, the Trustee shall make no accounting to the Grantor until the date of termination of this Trust, and, at such time, it shall be required to make full and proper accounting and turn over to the Grantor all assets of the Trust then held by it the said Trustee.

SIXTEENTH: The Trustee shall be compensated in accordance with the table in the annexed Schedule B, or as provided for by the laws of the State of New York.

SEVENTEENTH: The Trustee (and any substitute or successor) shall have the right, by a duly acknowledged instrument delivered to the Grantor to resign as Trustee in which event the Grantor shall designate and appoint a substitute or successor Trustee (subject to the prior written approval of the U.S. Senate Select Committee on Ethics) in his place and stead, which shall have all of the rights, powers, discretions, and duties conferred or imposed hereunder upon the original Trustee.

FBI - Stevens-5341

EIGHTEENTH: Any amendment of the terms of this Trust Agreement, including the appointment of a substitute or successor Trustee, shall require the prior written approval of the Committee, upon a showing of necessity and appropriateness unless it relates to the testamentary provisions of this trust. Any such substitute or successor Trustee shall have all of the rights, powers, discretions, and duties conferred or imposed hereunder upon the original Trustee.

The term "interested party" as used in this Trust means the Grantor, his spouse, any minor or dependent child, and their representatives.

The validity, construction, and administration of this Trust shall be governed by the Act (and regulations thereunder) and the laws of the State of New York.

Dated this 13th day of May, 1997.

PART II. EARNED AND NON-INVESTMENT INCOME

Report the source (name and address), type, and amount of earned income to you from any source aggregating $200 or more during the reporting period. For your spouse, report the source (name and address) and type of earned income which aggregate $1,000 or more during the reporting period. No amount needs to be specified for your spouse (see page 3, Part B of the Instructions). Do not report income from employment by the U.S. Government for you or your spouse.

Individuals not covered by the Honoraria Ban:
For you and/or your spouse, report honoraria income received which aggregates $200 or more by exact amount, give the date of, and describe the activity (speech, appearance or article) generating such honoraria payment. Do not include payments in lieu of honoraria reported on Part I.

PART VI. REIMBURSEMENTS

Report necessary travel related expenses from each source aggregating more than $285 in value during the reporting period received by you, your spouse and/or dependent child in connection with your provision of services at a speaking engagement, fact-finding event, or other event (personal, campaign, or otherwise). Disclosure is required regardless of whether those expenses were reimbursed to the individual or paid directly by the sponsoring organization. A description of the itinerary, including date(s) and the nature of expenses is required. If you are reimbursed for more than one trip from the same sponsor (and the trips added together are worth more than $285), then you must report each trip individually, even if the reimbursement for each separate trip does not equal more than $285. Report Gifts of travel in Part V.

Exclude: Travel related expenses provided by federal, state, D.C., and local governments; or by a foreign government; reimbursements from campaign funds which are reported to the FEC; reimbursements to a spouse or dependent child totally independent of his or her relationship to you; and reimbursements reported to the Office of Public Records pursuant to Senate Rule 35. For further information, see Instructions.

Ted Stevens

In 2004 the interests of Ted Stevens in JLS Properties, Jillian Square Apartments, Centerpoint I, Centerpoint II, Centerpoint Financial Center and Grantsville Development listed on Part IIIB were sold. Cash and promissory notes, for the sales prices disclosed on Part IV, were received. The note received in connection with the sale of JLS, Jillian Square, Centerpoint I and II was from Leonard Hyde and Jon Rubini, and provided for interest at the rate of 8% with payments due quarterly. The note received from the sale of Grantsville was from Nickel, Inc. and provided for interest at the rate of 4% and is payable in full on June 1, 2005. All the cash and notes resulting from the above described sales were conveyed to the Theodore F. Stevens Blind Trust which was created in 2004. Senator Stevens had no interest in those LLC's or the notes at year end and so the value of each is listed as "0".

Centerpoint Financial Center LLC was formed effective January 1, 2004 by means of distribution from Centerpoint II. Senator Stevens sold his interest effective that day.

TRUST AGREEMENT

THIS TRUST AGREEMENT made and entered into this 3rd day of December, 2004, between Hon. Theodore F. Stevens, whose home address is Northland Drive, Alyeska Basin, Lot 9, Block 18, Girdwood, Alaska 99587 (P.O. Box 100879, Anchorage. Alaska 99510), hereinafter call the Grantor, and Wells Fargo Alaska Trust Company, N.A., whose business address is P.O. Box 196127, Anchorage, Alaska 99519-6127, hereinafter called the Co-Trustee and J. Patrick Beattie, whose address is 10700 Prospect Drive, Anchorage, Alaska 99507-6495, hereinafter called the Co-Trustee.

WITNESSETH

GRANTOR is a United States Senator for the State of Alaska. To avoid any conflict of interest, or appearance of any such conflict, which may arise from his duties and powers in such office and any other office to which he may subsequently be appointed to the extent provided for by section 102(f)(4)(A) of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978 (Pub. L. 95-521, as amended) [hereinafter referred to as the "Act"], Grantor hereby creates a trust to be administered in accordance with the requirements of the Act, which shall become effective on upon the execution of this agreement.

The Co-Trustees are eligible persons, as specified in Section 102 (f)(3)(A) who meets the requirements of such section.

Grantor, therefore, hereby delivers to the Co-Trustees, and the Co-Trustees hereby acknowledge receipt of, the property listed in the annexed Schedule A, subject to the provisions of this Trust and the Act, and other applicable Federal laws.

The primary purpose of this Trust is to entrust to the Co-Trustees decisions as to when and to what extent the original assets of the Trust are to be sold or disposed of and in what investments the proceeds of sale are to be reinvested, without any participation in, or knowledge of, such decisions by any interested person. It is the express intention of the Grantor that the Co-Trustees will have full authority to freely communicate with each other as to all aspects of the management of this Trust, while strictly adhering to the limitations in the Act regarding communications with the Grantor. Accordingly, the Grantor and the Co-Trustees agree as follows:

FIRST: (A) This Trust shall terminate upon the first to occur of the following -- (1) Grantor's ceasing for any reason to serve as a U.S. Senator or in any other position to which he may have been subsequently appointed or elected in the Federal Government and Grantor thereafter giving each Co-Trustee written notice directing that this Trust be terminated; or (2) Grantor's death or incompetence. Upon termination in the event of Grantor's death, the Co-Trustees shall distribute the remaining trust estate to the personal representative for the Grantor's estate. Upon termination in the event of the Grantor's incompetence, the Co-Trustees shall distribute the remaining trust estate to the Grantor's court appointed conservator. The period between the date of this agreement and the termination of the Trust shall be called the "Trust Term."

(B) Not withstanding Paragraph (A) of this Article FIRST, this Trust agreement may in addition be terminated through revocation.

SECOND: The Co-Trustees shall administer this trust in accordance with the requirements of the Act and, in the exercise of their authority and discretion to manage and control the assets of this Trust, shall not consult or notify any interested party.

THIRD: (A) Each asset listed in the annexed Schedule A is free of any restriction with respect to its transfer or sale, except as fully described in such Schedule A, and none of the assets listed are prohibited by any law or regulation.

(B) During the Trust Term, the interested parties shall not pledge, mortgage, or otherwise encumber their interests in the property held in trust hereunder.

FOURTH: The Co-Trustees shall not knowingly or negligently disclose to the public or to any interested party any information as to the acquisition, retention, or disposition of any particular securities or other Trust property; except that, the Co-Trustees shall promptly notify the Grantor, the U.S. Senate Select Committee on Ethics, and the Secretary of the Senate, Office of Public Records when the holdings of a particular asset transferred to the Trust by any interested party have been completely disposed of or when the value of that asset becomes less than $1,000.

FIFTH: An income tax return for the Trust shall be prepared by the Co-Trustees or their designee, and such return and any information relating thereto (other than the Trust income summarized in appropriate categories necessary to complete an interested party's tax return), shall not be disclosed to the public or to any interested party. To effectuate the provisions of this Article Fifth, the Co-Trustees shall use its best efforts to provide the interested party, promptly after the close of each taxable year of the Trust during the Trust Term, with that information concerning the Trust, including information on income, expenses, capital gains and capital losses, which is necessary for the interested party to prepare and file tax returns required by the laws of the United States and the laws of any State, district or political subdivision; provided however, that in no event shall the Co-Trustees disclose publicly or to any interested party any information whatsoever which might identify the securities or other property which comprise the assets of the Trust or identify the securities or other property which have been sold from the assets of the Trust.

SIXTH: An interested party shall not receive any report on the holdings and sources of income of the Trust other than provided by Article FOURTH of this trust; except that the Co-Trustees shall –

(A) Make quarterly reports of the aggregate account market value of such interested party's interest in the Trust,

(B) Report the net income or loss of the Trust and make other reports necessary to enable the interested party to complete an individual tax return required by law (in accordance with Article FIFTH of the Trust), and

(C) Provide an annual report for purposes of section 102(a)(1) and section 102(d)(1) of the Act and Senate Rule 34 of the aggregate amount of the Trust's value and income attributable to the beneficial interest in the Trust of such interested party, categorized in accordance with the provisions of such sections and of such Rule.

SEVENTH: There shall be no direct or indirect communication between an interested party and the Co-Trustees with respect to the Trust unless –

(A) It relates to a request for a distribution from the Trust of cash or other unspecified assets of the trust, or

(B) The communication is in writing and is filed by the person initiating the communication at the office of the U.S. Senate Select Committee on Ethics within five days of the communication, and it relates only –

(1) To the general financial interest and needs of the interested party (including, but not limited to, an interest in maximizing income or long-term capital gain),

(2) To the notification of the Co-Trustees of a law or regulation subsequently applicable to the reporting individual which prohibits the interested party from holding an asset, which notification directs that the asset not be held by the Trust, or

(3) To directions to the Co-Trustees to sell all of an asset initially placed in the Trust by an interested party which in the determination of the Grantor creates a conflict of interest or the appearance thereof due to the subsequent assumption of duties by the Grantor (but any such direction is not required).

EIGHTH: The interested parties shall not take any action to obtain, and shall take appropriate action to avoid receiving information with respect to the holdings of, and the sources of income of, the Trust, including obtaining a copy of any Trust tax return filed by the Trustee or any information relating thereto, except for the reports and information specified in Article SIXTH of this Trust.

NINTH: The Co-Trustees shall not knowingly and willfully, or negligently:

(A) Disclose any information to any interested party with respect to this Trust that may not be disclosed pursuant to any provision or requirement of Title I of the Act or this Trust,

(B) Except for the assets initially transferred into this Trust, as set forth in Schedule A, attached, acquire any holding the ownership of which is prohibited by, or not in accordance with the terms of this Trust, including the acceptance of any contribution in cash or in kind to the trust from an individual other than the Grantor,

(C) Solicit advice from any interested party with respect to this Trust, which solicitation is prohibited by any provision or requirement of Title I of the Act or this Trust, or

(D) Fail to file any document required by Title I of the Act.

TENTH: The Grantor shall not knowingly and willfully, or negligently:

(A) Solicit or receive any information with respect to this Trust that may not be disclosed pursuant to any provision or requirement of Title I of the Act or this Trust, or

(B) Fail to file any document required by the Title I of the Act.

ELEVENTH: Subject to such amounts as the Co-Trustees may from time to time reserve for the payment of such income taxes as may be due and payable by the Trust, and for payment of expenses and compensation as provided for in this Trust, during the Trust Term the Co-Trustees shall pay to the Grantor, on a regular basis, such proceeds as are agreed by the Grantor and the Co-Trustees to be appropriate.

TWELFTH: In addition to the rights, duties, and powers conferred upon the Co-Trustees by law, the Co-Trustees shall have the following powers, rights, and discretion with respect to any Trust property held by them.

(A) To sell, exchange, or otherwise dispose of the property in such manner and upon such terms as the Co-Trustees in their sole discretion shall deem appropriate;

(B) Except as limited by specific enumeration in this Trust agreement or subsequent notification pursuant to Article SEVENTH, paragraph (B)(2), to invest and reinvest the principal and any undistributed income, in property of any kind;

(C) Except as limited by specific enumeration in this Trust agreement, to participate in any reorganization, consolidation, merger, or dissolution of any corporation having stocks, bonds, or other securities which may be held at any time, to receive and hold any property which may be allocated or distributed to it by reason of participation in any such reorganization, consolidation, merger, or dissolution;

(D) To exercise all conversion; subscription, voting, and other rights of whatsoever nature pertaining to any such property and to grant proxies, discretionary, or otherwise, with respect thereto;

(E) To elect, appoint, and remove directors of any corporation, the stock of which shall constitute Trust property, and to act through its nominee as a director or officer of any such corporation;

(F) Except as limited by specific enumeration in this Trust agreement, to manage, control, operate, convert, reconvert, invest, reinvest, sell, exchange, lease, mortgage, grant a security interest in, pledge, pool, or otherwise encumber and deal with the property of this Trust for Trust purposes and in behalf of the Trust to the same extent and with the same powers that any individual would have with respect to his own property and funds (but such actions may not take into account any interests of an interested party or other individual outside of those interests held by the Trust);

(G) Except as limited by specific enumeration in this Trust agreement, to borrow money from any person or corporation

(including the Co-Trustees hereunder) and for the purpose of securing the payment thereof, to pledge, mortgage, or otherwise encumber any and all such Trust property for Trust purposes upon such terms, covenants, and conditions as it may deem proper and also to extend the time of payment of any loans or encumbrances which at any time may be encumbrances on any such trust property irrespective of by whom the same were made or where the obligations may or should ultimately be borne on such terms, covenants, and conditions as it may deem proper (but such actions may not take into account any interests of an interested party or other individual outside of those interests held by the Trust);

(H) To register any property belonging to the Trust in the name of its nominee, or to hold the same unregistered, or in such form that title shall pass by delivery;

(I) To abandon, settle, compromise, extend, renew, modify, adjust, or submit to arbitration in whole or in part and without the order or decree of any court any and all claims whether such claims shall increase or decrease the assets held under this Trust agreement;

(J) To determine whether or to what extent receipts should be deemed income or principal, whether or to what extent expenditures should be charged against principal or income, and what other adjustments should be made between principal and income, provided that such adjustments shall not conflict with well-settled rules for the determination of principal and income adjustments, or the Uniform Principal and Income Act, if in effect in the State of Alaska;

(K) To determine whether or not to amortize bonds purchased at a premium;

(L) Except to the extent otherwise expressly provided in this Trust agreement, to make distributions to or at the request of an interested party in kind or in cash or partly in each and for such purposes to fix, insofar as legally permissible, the value of any property;

(M) To pay such persons employed by the Co-Trustees to assist them in the administration of the Trust, including investment counsel, accountants, and those engaged for assistance in preparation of tax returns, such sums as the Co-Trustees deem to be reasonable compensation for the services rendered by such persons. Such persons may rely upon and execute the written instructions of the Co-Trustees, and shall not be obliged to inquire into the propriety thereof;

(N) No person may be employed or consulted by the Co-Trustees to assist them in any capacity in the administration of the Trust or the management and control of Trust assets, including investment counsel, investment advisers, accountants, and those engaged for assistance in preparation of tax returns, unless –

(1) if any such employment or consultation is known to any interested party, the person is a signatory to this Trust instrument as a party, subject to the prior approval of the U.S. Senate Select Committee on Ethics,

(2) such person, under all the facts and circumstances, would be determined to be independent of any interested party with respect to the trust arrangement pursuant to the requirements of 102(f)(3)(A)(ii),

(3) such person is instructed by the Co-Trustees to make no disclosure to the public or to any interested party which might identify the securities or other property which comprise the assets of the Trust or identify securities or other property which have been sold from the assets of the Trust, or of any other information which may not be disclosed by the Co-Trustees, and

(4) such person is instructed by the Co-Trustees to have no direct communication with any interested party, and that any indirect communication with an interested party shall be made only through the Co-Trustees pursuant to Article SEVENTH of this Trust;

(5) except as specifically limited in this Trust agreement, to do all such acts, take all such proceedings, and exercise all such rights and privileges, although not otherwise specifically mentioned in this Article TWELFTH, with relation to any such Trust property, as if the Co-Trustees were the absolute owners thereof, and in connection therewith to make, execute, and deliver any instruments and to enter into any covenants or agreements binding the Trust.

THIRTEENTH: The Co-Trustees shall not at any time be held liable for any action taken or not taken or for any loss or depreciation of the value of any property held in the Trust whether due to an error of judgment or otherwise where the Co-Trustees have exercised good faith and ordinary diligence in the exercise of their duties such as would have been exercised by a prudent man.

FOURTEENTH: The Co-Trustees hereunder shall not be required in any jurisdiction, to furnish any bond or other security, or to obtain the approval of any court before applying, distributing, selling, or otherwise dealing with property.

FIFTEENTH: Except as provided in Article SIXTH of this Trust, the Co-Trustees shall make no accounting to the Grantor until the date of termination of this Trust, and, at such time, it shall be required to make full and proper accounting and turn over to the Grantor all assets of the trust then held by it the said Co-Trustees.

SIXTEENTH: The Co-Trustees shall receive reasonable compensation for services hereunder pursuant to their fee schedules as published from time to time, current copies of which are attached in the annexed Schedule B, or as provided for by the laws of the State of Alaska. The Co-Trustees are authorized to deduct such fees as well as all other expenses and costs of administration, from the funds in their hands.

SEVENTEENTH: Either of the Co-Trustees (and any substitute or successor Trustee) shall have the right, by a duly acknowledged instrument delivered to the Grantor, to resign as a Co-Trustee in which event the Grantor shall designate and appoint a substitute or successor Trustee (subject to the prior written approval of the U.S. Senate Select Committee on Ethics) in his place and stead, which shall have all the rights, powers, discretions, and duties conferred or imposed hereunder upon the original Trustee.

EIGHTEENTH: Any amendment of the terms of the Trust Agreement, including the appointment of a substitute or successor Trustee, shall require the prior written approval of the Committee, upon a showing of necessity and appropriateness unless it is related to the testamentary provisions of this trust. Any such substitute or successor Trustee shall have all the rights, powers, discretions, and duties conferred or imposed hereunder upon the original Trustee.

NINETEEN: The Co-Trustees shall have the right to employ the services of other departments or divisions of the corporate trustee or of any affiliate of the corporate trustee in connection with the performance of its duties hereunder, including, but not limited to, purchasing securities transactions through an affiliated broker and purchasing insurance through an affiliated agency. The Grantor understands that the corporate trustee or its affiliate may have an underwriter's stake in such transaction or may charge fees or commissions for services rendered which include a profit and the Grantor specifically authorizes the corporate trustee to undertake such transactions on behalf of the trust estate and to pay such fees for commissions from the trust estate so long as the transactions are on terms and under circumstances comparable to those generally available through nonaffiliated entities. In utilizing the services of affiliates of the corporate trustee, the Co-Trustees shall proactively instruct such affiliates as to the restrictions and obligations regarding disclosure and communications with the Grantor that are imposed upon the affiliates of the corporate trustee by the Act. Any provisions in this paragraph are subject to the requirements of paragraphs 12(M) and 12(N) of this Agreement. In addition, any person or entity employed by the Co-Trustees is subject to the same duties, restrictions, and requirements as the Co-Trustees under the Act.

TWENTIETH: The Grantor recognizes that some persons may be hesitant to serve as Trustee hereunder because of concern about potential liability. Therefore, the Grantor directs that: (i) no Trustee shall incur any liability by reason of any error of judgment, mistake of law, or action of any kind taken or omitted to be taken in connection with the administration of any trust created hereunder if in good faith reasonably believed by such Trustee to be in accordance with the provisions and intent hereof, except for matters involving such Trustee's own willful misconduct t or gross negligence proved by clear and convincing evidence, and (ii) any Trustee shall be fully indemnified by the trust estate against any claim or demand by any trust beneficiary or trust creditor, except for any claim or demand based on such Trustee's own willful misconduct or gross negligence proved by clear and convincing evidence. Expenses incurred by a Trustee in defending any such claim or demand shall be paid by the trust estate in advance of the final disposition of such claim or demand, upon receipt of an undertaking by or on behalf of such Trustee to repay such amount if it shall ultimately be determined that such Trustee is not entitled to be indemnified. Nothing in this paragraph or Agreement shall limit the authority or actions of the Senate Select Committee on Ethics or the Department of Justice, including under Section 102(f)(6)(C) of the Act, or any other provision of the Act, or any other rule, regulation, statute, or law.

TWENTY FIRST: A Co-Trustee shall have the authority: (a) To deal with matters involving the actual or threatened contamination of trust assets, including real estate, oil gas and minerals, collateral for secured loans/mortgages and interests in closely-held entities (sole proprietorships, partnerships, limited liability companies or corporations and any assets owned by such business entities) by hazardous substances, or involving compliance with environmental law(s), and

(i) To periodically inspect, monitor and obtain environmental audit assessment reports on any property, as it deems necessary, to determine compliance with any environmental law affecting such property, with all expenses of such inspection, monitoring and reporting to be paid from the income or principal of the trust;

(ii) To respond (or take any other action necessary to prevent, abate or "clean-up") as it shall deem necessary, prior to or after the initiation of enforcement action by any governmental body, to any actual or threatened violation of any environmental law affecting any of such property, the cost of which shall be payable from trust assets;

(iii) To refuse to accept property as a trust asset if it is determined that such property is contaminated by any hazardous substance or that such property is being used or has been used for any substances which could result in liability to the trust or otherwise impair the value of trust assets;

(iv) To decline to foreclose on any real estate secured loan or mortgage in the event the collateral is found to be contaminated by hazardous materials;

(v) To settle or compromise at any time any claim against this trust related to any such matter asserted by any governmental body or private party;

(vi) To decline to serve as a Co-Trustee or, having undertaken to serve, resign at any time it believes there is or may be a conflict between it in its fiduciary capacity and in its individual capacity because of potential claims or liabilities which might be asserted against this trust because of the type or condition of trust assets.

(b) A Co-Trustee shall not be liable to any beneficiary or other party interested in this trust, or to any third parties, for any claim against this trust for the diminution in value of trust property resulting from such matters, including any reporting of or response to (1) the contamination of trust property by hazardous substances, or (2) violations of environmental laws related to the trust; provided that the Co-Trustee shall not be excused from liability for its own negligence or wrongful or willful acts;

(c) When used in the document the term "hazardous substance(s)" shall mean any substance defined as hazardous or toxic or otherwise regulated by any federal, state or local law(s), rule(s) or regulation(s) relating to the protection of the environment or human health ("environmental law(s)").

(d) The Grantor, on behalf of himself and his successors, heirs and assigns, hereby indemnifies and holds harmless the Co-Trustees from and against any and all claims, liabilities, penalties and costs, including attorneys' fees, arising from any claim, demand, order or other action related in any way to (1) the actual or threatened contamination of trust property by any hazardous substance(s), or (2) the generation, use, treatment, storage, disposal, release (actual or threatened) or discharge on or from trust property or in connection with operations conducted on trust property of any hazardous substances in violation of any environmental law(s).

TWENTY SECOND: The Co-Trustees are authorized (but not directed) to acquire and retain investments not regarded as traditional for trusts, including investments in real property, improved or unimproved, and including investments that would be forbidden or would be regarded as imprudent, improper, or unlawful by the "Prudent Person" rule, "Uniform Prudent Investor Act," or any other rule or law which restricts the capacity of the fiduciaries to make investments." In addition to the investment powers conferred above, the Co-Trustees are authorized (but are not directed) to acquire and retain investments not regarded as traditional for trusts, including investments that would be forbidden or would be regarded as imprudent, improper or unlawful by the "prudent person" rule, "Uniform Prudent Investor Act," or any other rule or law which restricts a fiduciary's capacity to make investments. The Co-Trustees in the exercise of their sole and absolute discretion, may invest in any type of property, wherever located, including any type of security or option, improved or unimproved real property, a closely held business, including any limited liability corporation, and tangible or intangible personal property, and in any manner, including direct purchase, joint ventures, partnerships, limited partnerships, limited liability companies, corporations, mutual funds, business trusts or any other form of participation or ownership whatsoever. In making investments, the Co-Trustees may disregard any or all of the following factors:

(a) Whether a particular investment, or the trust investments collectively, will produce a reasonable rate of return or result in the preservation of principal.

(b) Whether the acquisition or retention of a particular investment or the trust investments collectively are consistent with any duty of impartiality as to the different beneficiaries. The Grantor intends that no such duty shall exist, and hereby waive any such duty which otherwise would exist.

(c) Whether the trust is diversified. The Grantor intends that no duty to diversify shall exist, and hereby waive any such duty which otherwise would exist.

(d) Whether any or all of the trust investments would traditionally be classified as too risky or speculative for trusts. The entire trust may be so invested. The Grantor intends the Co-Trustees to have sole and absolute discretion in determining what constitutes acceptable risk and what constitutes proper investment strategy.

The Grantor's purpose in granting the foregoing authority is to modify the "prudent person" rule, "Uniform Prudent Investor Act," or any other rule or law which restricts a fiduciary's ability to invest insofar as any such rule or law would prohibit an investment or investments because of one or more factors listed above, or any other factor relating to the nature of the investment itself. The Grantor does this because the Grantor believes it is in the best interests of the beneficiaries of the trust created hereunder to give the Co-Trustees broad discretion in managing the assets of the trusts created hereunder. Accordingly, the Co-Trustees shall not be liable for any loss in value of an investment merely because of the nature of the investment or the degree of risk presented by the investment.

The term "interested party" as used in this Trust means the Grantor, his spouse, any minor or dependent child, and their representatives.

The validity, construction and administration of this Trust shall be governed by the Act (and regulations there under) and the laws of the State of Alaska.

Washington, D.C. 20007

Dear Senator Stevens:

You are in the process of establishing a blind trust in order to insulate your assets from yourself and avoid any perception of conflicts with regard to your investments and your job as a Senator in the United States Senate. In that regard you have asked me to consider being a co-trustee with the Wells Fargo Alaska Trust Company (Wells Fargo) in order to assist in the investment of your assets that will be placed in the trust. I am happy to perform such a function.

My fee for this service will be based on an hourly rate, and will be based solely on the hours spent working with the bank trustee on the handling of your investments. My hourly rate for this work will be $85.00. Invoices for this work will be submitted directly to Wells Fargo. If you have any concerns regarding this fee arrangement, please call me to discuss.

Warm regards,

J. PATRICK BEATTIE

Re: Co-Trustees of the Ted Stevens Qualified Blind Trust

Dear Mr. Chairman and Vice Chairman:

As you may know, I have determined that I should place a number of my personal financial investments into a qualified blind trust. In making this determination, I have concluded that seeking the participation of two independent trustees would serve my interests in administering the qualified blind trust. The two trustees will be independent of me and my family and will serve with shared and equal responsibilities for the management of the trust and its assets.

In that context, I have selected Wells Fargo Alaska Trust Company, N.A. and J. Patrick Beattie, both of Anchorage, Alaska, to serve as the Co-Trustees of the qualified blind trust. Wells Fargo Alaska Trust Company, N.A. is a large investment and trust management company with a number of years of experience as a professional fiduciary. Wells Fargo Alaska Trust Company, N.A. will be represented in this matter by Ms. Maribeth Conway, the Vice President and Regional Trust Manager for Wells Fargo Alaska Trust Company, N.A. The other Co-Trustee will be Mr. J. Patrick Beattie, a Certified Public Accountant and the now-retired head of the Anchorage office of KPMG, one of the nation's largest public accounting firms. Both Co-Trustees have agreed to serve and their service will be compensated.

Both Co-Trustees are independent of me and my family and are independent of each other as well. While they will serve jointly in the administration of the trust, they are otherwise independent of each other for purposes of the application of the Ethics in Government Act to qualified blind trust fiduciaries.

With best wishes,

Cordially,

TED STEVENS

Amendment for Senator Stevens

2005 Calendar Year

SECRETARY OF THE SENATE
06 JUN -9 PM 3:54

Attached is an amendment to Senator Stevens' 2005 Financial Disclosure. The amendment corrects the valuation of assets in item line #6 from 15,001-50,000 to 1,001-15,000.

I can be reached at 224.1023 should there be any questions.

Thank You,

Robyn Engibous

7/23/07

I was complaining didn't treat me fairly in Proposal gave it to same company make large contributions to George Bush's campaign.

↳ Specific ken
got on line type in campaign they list people that make contributions
→ george Bush. - NOT sure

↳ State never researched

George Bush Appts Director for National Science Foundation - person of U.S says by the way.

Mr E. B. Don't Remember - wrote letter
NSF that Represents the U.S. Congress
The Protector to make sure every thing gets - Couple Lawyers to make sure → w/i Compliance

Filed Complaint - They said they looked into it and it was all legitimate
NO dealings with Veco.

NO idea why there's was better than mine - My contract was Fair
They didn't consider it

veco has every Right to do what they can
IF people in charge. threw veco w/ get it again

U.S govt Everyone s/ have equal Right

↳ I had mentioned

Worked For Congress - oversaw Problems NOT sure what his -

he said w/ investigate - Didn't Find

Inspector general(?) maybe complained think
OIG → Thinks that who I complained

Had to keep calling him Back. 6 mos
Later - He said NO. → If I find letter. wrote an official letter

Sent: Sat Dec 11 10:59:41 2004
Subject: Artic Project

Dear [redacted]

[redacted] spent 4 months and a lot of money in the submission of our Artic Research Support and Logistics Services Proposal and now I just saw that the current contract was extended because no one submitted a proposal to your department? Thats a bunch of crap!
I have the top people in the world working for me. How corrupt can a department get. I guess I forgot to attach my check for a million dollars to the people reviewing the proposals like VECO did. My mistake, I guess I will know the next time.

Girdwood, AK

- Lived here since [redacted] Stayed home during summer of 2000 to 2001 to remodel her own home (bathroom, yard, etc.). Noticed Stevens remodeling his own home

- Used to be one story. Looked like they paid little attention. Doesn't remember seeing him much
- said house was not very nice.

- Never met Ted [redacted] Stevens
- Never been inside house

- Lights on front yard - had to have big cherry picker truck - very involved - took more than one day.

- Jane [redacted] saw Veco trucks sitting up picking for Ted Stevens at his house - she did not see because that was before she moved here

- Thought "it's about time" to fix up house & she was curious.
- [illegible] who did the work.

To the best of my knowledge, information and belief, based upon due diligence and reasonable inquiry, no one has directed the destruction of any documents responsive to the subpoena duces tecum and no such documents have been destroyed.

4. The documents made by the Company and produced in compliance with the subpoena duces tecum are memoranda, reports, records or data compilations of acts, events, conditions, opinions or diagnoses that were made at or near the time, by or from information transmitted by, a person with knowledge and that have been kept in the course of the Company's regularly conducted business activity. It has been the Company's regular practice in that business activity to make those memoranda, reports, records or data compilations. Neither the source of information, nor the method of circumstances of preparation, indicate a lack of trustworthiness for those memoranda, reports, records or data compilations.

5. I understand that the furnishing of these documents to counsel for the United States in response to the subpoena duces tecum and the execution of this Affidavit, are at the sole discretion and election of myself and the Company, and are in lieu of personally producing the documents before the grand jury which right to appear is expressly waived.

6. I am authorized by the Company to execute this Affidavit, and I have reviewed all of its terms with counsel for the Company before signing and swearing to it.

You have been served with a grand jury subpoena duces tecum, to produce certain enumerated records before the grand jury in Anchorage, Alaska at 9:00 a.m., Tuesday, September 11, 2007. If you need additional time to comply with this subpoena please contact our office for an extension.

You have the right to appear before the grand jury. To minimize your inconvenience in complying with this subpoena, you may mail the requested documents certified to our office, or provide the documents to the agent(s) serving the subpoena in lieu of personally producing the documents before the grand jury.

Should you decide to provide the documents by certified mail, the officer responsible for complying with this subpoena must execute the enclosed affidavit before a notary public. This affidavit must accompany the documents being forwarded.

Please be advised that disclosure of this subpoena may impede an ongoing criminal investigation.

If you have any questions regarding the subpoena or the method by which that subpoena may be satisfied, please contact me collect at (907) 271-5071.

Sincerely,

TS said he wanted to send a book to [redacted] for his birthday [redacted]. I went to the gift shop downstairs and bought 1 copy each of Cheryl Shaw Barnes' Washington Mouse series ("Marshall, the Courthouse Mouse"; "House Mouse, Senate Mouse" and "Woodrow the White House Mouse") these are all autographed copies.

I also got a copy of "The Train of States" which is a picture book about all 50 states.

We could send all of these to [redacted] or we could send one and keep the others on hand as gifts. Also, do you want to send a check for [redacted]

[redacted]"it never rains but wht it pours"-we,ve got our share of rain-I feel for those people who checked out of their hotel and found as they tried to check in the plane was cancelled-with little kids running around!

The print out shows I have a seat reserved from Miami to DC but [redacted] As you know neither of us have seats assigned from here to Miami.

I tried to get thru to [redacted] I don"t know how to track him down. And the Congressional desk isn"t answering as you know.

Our problem is we were told here that if you don't have a seat assignment you are on standby-meaning we won"t know until about 2'20 whether we will leave on that plane. And the gal in charge today said this island is really plagued by mainline people who overbook these return trips.

I am cracking my brain to determine how we can get on that blasted plane. My plan is to take the bags over about 10:30 and try to check in.

[redacted] could not get [redacted] a reservation until Monday! She was seeking a thru trip to Alaska so that may be worse than our trio to DC.

If [redacted] have any ideas on how we can be assured of getting out of here let me know. I curse myself for changing the originalk reservation for tomorrow. [redacted] appointment was postponed so there is no emergency and [redacted] said she'd go up to be with [redacted] if she needs help- [redacted]

Thanks for all your effort. I think the cats will be OK. Teds

Today we received the following fish from Alaska.

15 sides of Red Salmon (about 2 lbs each)
1 whole King Salmon (head off) and two sides of King Salmon (about 2.5 lbs each)

They are not vacuum packed. They are just wrapped in plastic. The Senator asked what you would suggest be done with them.

Hi [redacted]

I sent you an e-mail earlier about the DVD player you would like to get for the Senator for Christmas. There are some accessories that you may want to get with it. They are in this link, let me know if you want any of them and I will order them along with the DVD player.

There was only one [redacted] 9/11 print in the Senator's closet in SH522. It was packaged as if ready to be shipped and there was a memo from [redacted] taped on the outside that said there were two prints. However, under that memo was another one that talks about shipping one of the prints to Girdwood. So, maybe that's where the second print is?

Do you want me to send this print to the Greens? It is signed.

think saw [redacted]

generally there would be a folder everyday [redacted] from Stevens with work in it - some portion was personal

[redacted] would call her - official reason why she would call either he left something at home & need to pick it up - couple times a week would call Infrequent contact w/ [redacted] - couple times a yr maybe talked to [redacted] a few times - [redacted]
[redacted] Sen. gave [redacted] for [redacted]
[redacted] so nature of conv. would be how many [redacted]
doesn't recall any contact w/ [redacted] or family never talked w/ [redacted] directly / talked w/ sec.

in exchange for used Land Rover - family new but used transaction possibly 2000 to 2001

[redacted] calling USAA to have Mustang removed & Land Rover added dont know where LR purchased
LR was shipped to [redacted] from Alaska - [redacted]
Stevens paid for shipping b/c [redacted] was couple thousand

no knowledge of 2005 Jeep Grand Cherokee - may have been gone by then Stevens loved the Mustang / he didn't drive it [redacted] part of his thrill was that he was going to [redacted] [redacted] - never heard of

Kenai River Classic

Stevens attended on yearly basis around July 4th [redacted] assoc. w/ that - knowledge of this through reading articles understood they had auction there

[redacted] being first duly sworn, deposes and says:

1. I am associated with [redacted] (the "Company") as [redacted] [redacted]n this position I have the responsibility for the Company's compliance with the subpoena duces tecum issued to me on Dec. 14, 2007, which calls for the production of certain documents before a Grand Jury of this Court.

2. I personally have conducted or supervised compliance by the Company with the subpoena duces tecum. To the best of my knowledge, information and belief, based upon due diligence and reasonable inquiry, the documents enclosed herewith, bearing the numbers "NA", constitute all the documents in the possession, custody or control of the Company that fall within the terms of the subpoena duces tecum.

3. No documents responsive to the subpoena duces tecum have been withheld by the Company pursuant to a claim of privilege or otherwise. To the best of my knowledge, information and belief, based upon due diligence and reasonable inquiry, no one has directed the destruction of any documents responsive to the subpoena duces tecum and no such documents have been destroyed.

4. The documents made by the Company and produced in compliance with the subpoena duces tecum are memoranda, reports, records or data compilations of acts, events, conditions, opinions or diagnoses that were made at or near the time, by or from information transmitted by, a person with knowledge and that have been kept in the course of the Company's regularly conducted business activity. It has been the Company's regular practice in that business activity to make those memoranda, reports, records or data compilations. Neither the source of information, nor the method of circumstances of preparation, indicate a lack of trustworthiness for those memoranda, reports, records or data compilations.

5. I understand that the furnishing of these documents to counsel for the United States in response to the subpoena duces tecum and the execution of this Affidavit, are at the sole discretion and election of myself and the Company, and are in lieu of personally producing the documents before the grand jury which right to appear is expressly waived.

6. I am authorized by the Company to execute this Affidavit, and I have reviewed all of its terms with counsel for the Company before signing and swearing to it.

When we arrived to Yuzhno-Sakhalinsk to our surprise everybody (oil companies and some Russian officials) seemed to be cold towards us. During our initial meetings with the Russian officials and oil industry representatives we figured out that Natchiq and [redacted] Shelf Department had spread rumors that the reason we were bringing Senator Stevens over was the last minute effort to get the contract for VECO/Montazh JV. (The final decision who gets the contract has not been announced by SEIC.) At the time of our arrival the contract was going to Natchiq. Even [redacted] of Exxon commented that Natchiq did a good selling job on everybody including Exxon and SEIC. In fact [redacted] words to [redacted] were: 'You are trying to drive attack with a sledge hammer.' That seemed to be a general attitude with some ex-pats. It took [redacted] a lot of explanation to do to [redacted] and [redacted] with Exxon, to [redacted] who was filling in for [redacted] with Sakhalin Energy (SEIC), [redacted] with Mobil, [redacted] with ARCO and even [redacted] with ABC (Department of Commerce affiliation) that a training program would be a lot bigger deal than SEIC's small contract.

On a previous trip we left video tapes on a mix module with every oil company manager and some Russian officials but we don't think anybody has watched it [redacted] insisted that everybody would watch it. Literally [redacted] had to force every mentioned person in above paragraph to watch it in front of him. Without fail everybody that [redacted] had made watch the video was impressed and got an idea.

[redacted] believes that one big help as far as Exxon concern was [redacted] phone call to [redacted] in Houston. Evidentily, [redacted] explained to [redacted] that he had originated and shared with VECO the idea of the training program in Sakhalin [redacted] also thinks that [redacted] talked to [redacted] in Houston because [redacted] second visit with [redacted] was 180° warmer.

Every day we went to have lunch at the Pacific café, favorite place of the oil companies executives who had their own tables. By the end of our stay we became part of that "elite" group sharing our meals with them.

Simultaneously, we started to arrange meetings with the Russian authorities. We started with [redacted] Duma First Deputy. By her request we brought a wheel-chair for a boy without a leg and arm. After numerous meetings and lunches and dinners together we won [redacted] confidence and friendship.

Shortly before Senator Stevens arrival [redacted] asked me to come to see her. She would not hold a meeting in her office but in a secure place. She explained that she had had a meeting with [redacted] to find out what was going on. Per [redacted] VECO had a bad reputation because VECO had done some bad job on a pipeline. (We assume she is talking about VECO's project in Sakhalin in the beginning of 1990-s) [redacted] who is close to the Governor and the oil companies, said to [redacted] she would support Natchiq.

We believe, in the end we managed to put the rumors to rest and break the ice.

The way we convinced everone about VECO's true intentions and good reputation was through the numerous meetings with [redacted] people from her department and other officials and through our JV partners and SMNG management [redacted] was most helpful. She did some "intelligence" job with the top officials. She definitely is VECO's ally.

Gradually as we we have been working hard on convincing everybody they stared to slowly warm up to VECO's idea of the trainng program.

Definitely, Natchiq had worked very hard on [redacted], the Governor and his Administration and the oil companies. At the time of our departure from Sakhalin they had [redacted] an engineer [redacted] other ex-pats and Sakhalin employees. They have a direct line with Exxon through [redacted] who is a close friend with [redacted] Enviromental Engineer permanently based in Yuzhno and whose Russian [redacted] works for Natchiq as well. Their office is located at ABC and they do favors for [redacted]

One of the big things that broke the ice with the [redacted] was the wheel chair. [redacted] pushed this project. [redacted] used the presentation with the chair to promote VECO. This event was marked by the mass media and was warmly accepted.

Senator Stevens trip would have been a failure if we did not come a week earlier. In the beginning the only person who understood Senator's position in a Senate and the importance of his visit for Sakhalin was [redacted] How can one expect the Russians understand Senator's importance if even [redacted] with Exxon did not have an understanding of Senator's position and power at the time of our arrival.

So the week prior to Senator's arrival we had to break the ice, convince everybody about the importance of his trip for Sakhalin and to explain the goals of the trip which were to start a training program of the Sakhalin craftsmen and managers in Alaska on modules and construction projects which would eventually move to Sakhalin. The second priority was to help Sakhalin with their supply of energy.

The Governor's priority is just the opposite. His # 1 priority is the energy problem. If there is a power problem this winter the Governor will not be reelected. And it's anybody's guess who would be the next Governor. All the alternatives would not be good for the oil industry in Sakhalin besides [redacted] Her chances are probably minimal.

If there is not a shoratge of the electric power this and next winters the Governor will have a good chance to be reelectd. SEIC really wants the Governor to be reelected. Exxon thinks it will be good as well. For Exxon it does not make as big a difference who is elected because the general population is pro oil development. Exxon is willing to wait and to invest as little money as possible. Stratigically Exxon is in a better position than SEIC because they do not have investments or assets in Sakhalin as SEIC does.

Our summary of Senator Stevens visit in the end was very positive for the training program, energy problem and VECO's image.

Senator was very positive on the training program. The oil companies indicated that they would be willing to supple some private money. Ted said this would help to get the Federal money for the training program. Ted mentioned that the possible ratio would be 75% US federal money to 25% that would come in some form from the Sakhalin based oil companies. Both, Senator and the Department of Commerce would have to have assuarances that this money would be spent for the training program only.

Senator Stevens believes that he can help to cure the energy problem with the investment of around $20.000.000 in the equipment to help with the coal supply to 2 main power houses in Sakhalin. One is in Yuzhno and the other one is in Vakhrushevo (both in the southern part of the Sakhalin Island).

[redacted] met with [redacted] with SEIC after he returned to Sakhalin from Houston. It was a very positive meeting. [redacted] said confidentially that SEIC would speed up their $20.000.000 due in the end of December for the Sakhalin Administration as a bonus to help the development of the Sakhalin inftastructure. (Prior to

this meeting, [redacted] had a conversation with [redacted] who asked [redacted] to help the Administration through Senator Stevens to speed up the payment of the bonus.) Ten million dollars will be paid next week and another 10 million dollars the following week. [redacted] said that it would be a real strong possibility that VECO coud build the water flood module in Alaska in the beginning of 2001.

Senator called [redacted] from Washington D.C. to ask if we would look at the coal mines. So, [redacted] and I delayed our departure from September 10 to September 13, 1999, to accomplish Ted's request.

The next day, September 9, we arranged a meeting with [redacted] First Deputy Governor, his right hand man and whose makes most of the decisions for the Governor and things to happen. That was our second meeting with him during our stay.

[redacted] indicated that the most urgent help which would be much appreciated by the Sakhalin Administration in the energy crisis would be in the form of equipment (bulldozers, back hoes and trucks). He put us in touch with the Sakhalin Coal Corporation management. The next day, [redacted] Corporation Deputy Director provided us with the list of the required Caterpillar equipment.

[redacted] made the arrangements for us to go to the town of Nevelsk, 1.5 hour drive south of Yuzhno. The Mayor of Nevelsk, gave us a tour of 2 coal pits and a coal processing plant (concentrating mill).

[redacted] findings on the southern region (Nevelsk) are that they do need the dirt and coal mooving heavy equipment which consists of back hoes, heavy bulldozers with reepers and a combination of heavy duty trucks for off road for hauling dirt and coal in the open mines, as well as lighter trucks to transport the coal from the mines to the processing plant which is 15 km from the open mines.

The processing plant was built in 1929 and reminds a surrealistic picture. Seems, a time machine moved you a century back in history. It is a very dismal facility with the holes in the walls, hardly moving conveyor, few unhappy women inside and hazardous conditions for health. But it was working when we were there. We saw some coal loaded on the rail road which looked like it operated. The railroad will deliver it to the both power houses. However, this (brown) coal is not of high quality as the coal from the north region, as we were told. From one source we heard that this coal would be mixed with the coal from the northern region or with the coal shipped from the main land.

On Friday we took 5-hour trip one way on a dirt road (350 km) to Shaktersk, the coal mine town and a port in Uglegorsk Region. We shared a car with [redacted] President of Sakhalin Coal Corporation. [redacted] and his assistant were following us in another car.

We had two reasons to visit Uglegorsk Region. First, to see more coal mines which have better quality (rock) coal and which contains 0.3% of sulphurs.

We toured Solntzevskoye coal pit.

During our conversation with the Director of the mine he knew that they have to violate a lot of rules during the coal mining. They are required to produce as much coal as quick as possible with insufficient equipment. It means that they have to loose a lot of coal, mix it with dirt, etc. Also, they are violating safety rules. They have no time and equipment to reinforce the hills. They work under the constant fear of landslide. Not long ago a truck driver was killed during such landslid.

The second reason was to inspect the port facility in the town of Shahtersk. The dock is next to the processing plant, open coal storages, a railway spur and left overs of the conveyor line.

The processing plant was built in 1948 and is in a much better shape that in Nevelsk. We were there on Friday, in the middle of the day. The plant was deserted.

With the present capacities the port is able to load only a 100-ton vessel at a time. The water is very shallow by the existing dock.

The Sakhalin Coal Corporation is building a new dock. They have built 80 meters of piling and steel filled up with rocks towards the sea. In the spring of the next year they will build another 40 meters of the dock and put the concrete on the whole length of the dock (we have drawings). The new dock will allow a 10,000 ton barge to be loaded right by the dock. The depth of the water is 5-6 meters.

To get the coal loaded on sea going vessels there would have to be a conveyor system installed from the coal storage to the new dock. The coal could be shipped by sea and by rail.

On our last day, September 13, we got appointments with the Governor and his First Deputy. We had to cancel our Reeve flight in the morning and book the last Aeroflot flight from Yuzhno to Anchorage in the evening. How Aeroflot almost did not let us fly back to USA is another separate story. The Governor and his Deputy confirmed that if would help to mine and deliver coal quicker with the additional heavy equipment (we have a list) and with the new conveyor system at the port of Shahtersk.

It will help a lot if a coal specialist could come and inspect the coal facilities and write a detailed report.

September 29, 1999

The Honorable Ted Stevens
United States Senate
522 Hart Building
Washington, DC 20510-0201

Dear Senator Stevens:

Enclosed is the Sakhalin Equipment Supply Study. Ted, I have had VECO people working on this study since my return from Sakhalin. They have completed an in-depth study and have located Caterpillar equipment west of the Rocky Mountains. The equipment is good used equipment and would last at least five years, at which time the power plants are expected to be converted to gas. They investigated new equipment, but it was determined to be too expensive.

As you can see, if we have an answer on the funding by the end of October, we could make the schedule work. Please let us know if we can be of further assistance.

Sincerely,

Enclosure

Dear [redacted]

In response to our telephone conversation this morning regarding a technology transfer program between Sakhalin and Alaska, we respectfully submit the following comments. The technology transfer program would provide western technology training for Russian managers, engineers, supervisors and craftsmen. Alaska has many advantages, and is uniquely situated to provide the technology transfer anticipated by this program.

- Advantage of Current Module Construction – It is important that the technology transfer have a practical, real-life component. To have a current process-module project available to provide this hands-on experience will be a vital component of this program. VECO has a current project requiring at least 150 000 man-hours over the next two years (2000/2001) to provide processing facilities. This project has a scope of work that is identical to the processing facilities anticipated in the Russian Far East.

- Engineering/Procurement/Construction Advantage – Production module fabrication requires a broad range of skills. To provide training to meet the requirements of this industry, it is necessary for the contractor to have a broad range of engineering, procurement and construction capabilities. The contractor should have the capability to work in all aspects of module development including: project management, project controls, quality controls, planning, scheduling, procurement, logistics, fabrication, production operations technology, preventative maintenance programs, and oil and gas field construction experience.

- Advantage of Proximity– Alaska has a four-hour business day overlap with the East Coast of the US and the same with the Russian Far East. Afternoon in Alaska equals morning in the Russian Far East. This allows the contractor to keep good contact with the project in Russia.

- Air Link Advantage – There are direct flights between Alaska and the Russian Far East. The travelling time to and from Russia is significantly decreased when compared to other US locations. This is not only a cost savings, but is a great psychological advantage for people separated from friends and family during training.

- Arctic Experience Advantage – The production modules will need to be designed and built to sustain the arctic environments. Experience with construction in arctic conditions needs to be an essential element of the technology transfer. The remote logistics and local hazards of arctic construction must be understood and be a part of the technology training program. Experience with arctic condition and materials such as foundations in permafrost, low temperature steel, and insulation systems is critical.

- Human Advantage – Training in Alaska will be a natural for Russians living in the Russian Far East. Alaska and the Russian Far East enjoy similar temperatures and geographic conditions. Physical challenges of living in similar high latitude and northern climates will be reduced if the program is implemented in Alaska.

- Cultural Advantage – Historical and cultural similarities between Alaska and Russian Far East will reduce the culture shock of the program participants. Alaska was purchased from Russia, and both share a great deal of history and culture. The frontier experience of being geologically far from the center of federal government provides a unique bond between Alaskans and Russian Far Easterners.

- Russian Content Advantage – The support from major oil companies will require that the training meet the "Russian content" under the Petroleum Sharing Agreements. Companies that can provide training within a framework that is at least 50% owned by Russians will qualify as meeting Russian content. This will be important for full industry support.

- Business Support Advantage – There is a significant amount of business that happens between Alaskan and Russian companies. The State of Alaska Division of Trade and Development, U.S. Department of Commerce Alaska Export Assistance Center and the University of Alaska through the American Russian Center provide business support between Russia and Alaska. The Alaska governor and state legislatures support business development between Russia and Alaska. Local and state support is important for the technology transfer program to succeed. Labor issues, housing and transportation issues will need to be coordinated with local and state agencies.

We trust these few thoughts will help you to include appropriate language into the technology transfer legislation. Please let us know if we can be of any further assistance.

Sincerely,

RE: Russian Training Program

Staff met with representatives from the Departments of State, Commerce and Labor today to discuss the Russian Training program for Alaska. You will recall that you told staff the initial phase of the program should involve six to eight people to ensure the program is successful and to avoid getting too far ahead of the private sector. The representatives voiced support for this approach and agreed that the program should be organized through the University of Alaska.

The next step is to get the University and the private sector companies to agree on a final project proposal. Timing is critical because of the existing RFP in the Federal Register (currently set to close on March 3). If you still support the idea of having the program operated by the University, then staff can proceed to finalize agreements between the University and the private sector companies. If you agree on the approach, we can encourage the companies and the University to formalize and finalize the project within the next two to three weeks.

Staff recalls your message to slow the process down. However, given the current March 3 deadline on the RFP and the apparent momentum within the Departments, it may be a good idea to seize the opportunity available to organize the Alaska participants and finalize the program. Just because an agreement is reached by the Alaska participants doesn't mean the program has to be accelerated beyond the desires of the private sector. The program could be designed around the time frame and needs of the individual companies based on the actual business environment in the RFP and the type of projects that will be pursued. An agreement between the University and the companies within the next two to three weeks may still take months to put in place and implement, thus giving the companies time to get ready for this first phase of the project.

Additionally, you should be aware that the Departments have been receiving inquiries about the proposal in the Federal Register. Some of the Departments feel that based on the scaled down size of this new approach there will be money left over. Therefore, they are continuing to accept applications and plan to fund other projects with the aim of training Russian oil workers in Alaska. There are 3 ways to handle the RFP:

1. Cancel the notice (rarely done but possible and probably not necessary)
2. Issue revisions to the original notice - i.e. extending the closing date
3. Continue to accept applications but wait until this project is finalized before obligating funds for any other projects

Staff recommends requesting revisions to the notice (extending the closing date to March 15).

Do you have a preference in how the RFP should be handled?

Ted, I'm enclosing the response that I received from Sakhalin Energy. As you can see, they are going to bigger companies than we have in Alaska. I don't think the companies are any more capable than we are; but it seems like oil companies always want to go with the big boys. Aker is a Norwegian company; Kvarner is really out of London; and Mitsui is, of course, Japanese. Not one is an American company, despite two of them having Houston addresses.
I talked to [redacted], who is over the waterflood project, and he feels like they would get more of the Russian content by building them in Russia. The waterflood project would be the seed project to start a fabrication yard in Russia that could later build more and bigger modules. I asked [redacted] for a list of the Russian companies that have fabrication yards in Russia, but I haven't yet received the list.
With reference to [redacted] memo of February 10 and the three choices for handling the RFP: I favor number 1 (cancel the notice), as I do not believe there is a chance of Alaska building any modules or doing any fabrication for Sakhalin. If that choice is too cumbersome, then I would favor number 2 (issue a revision extending the closing date). Personally, I feel that choice number 3 (continuing to accept applications) would be a waste of money. I'll try to get more information about their plans; but, again, I don't see a chance that we'll ever build modules in Alaska for Sakhalin Energy.
Later, after Exxon drills their well this summer on Sakhalin, there might be a shot for doing something for Exxon. Even though the Russian Training Program, and building modules in Alaska, was [redacted] idea, I think there is a good possibility that Exxon will do the same thing as Sakhalin Energy. It stands to reason that if there is a fabrication yard in Russia with the experience of the waterflood module, there is a good chance that Exxon will use the same yard.

Ref: USAID Grants

Dear Al:

I strongly urge you to request an extension through the 2005 federal fiscal year of the USAID grants that your Department has been administering.

As I mentioned in our conversation, it would be an egregious loss to both the private and public sector interests of the State of Alaska to have the funds reprogrammed for the benefit of operations in another state.

Funds from these grants are being used to train Russian welder trainers in advanced welding technology and a cadre of welders trainees are present learning these skills with others awaiting the next skills training program. The Sakhalin I and II consortia, headed up by ExxonMobil and Shell, have committed to a 70% local hire target for hydrocarbon development on the island. We have companies such as Peak Oilfield Service Co., the VECO Corporation, ASCG Incorporated, and others that are active players on the island. They need trained Russian welders to satisfy the requirements of their contracts. Senator Ted Stevens and USAID understand this and have acted to make the funds available for the training.

Another grant has laid the foundation for enhancing aviation security and fostering critical support of the establishment of a direct air link to Yuzhno-Sakhalinsk from Anchorage. Presently executives and managers of Alaska companies operating on Sakhalin must use Korean Airlines to Seoul in order to get to Yuzhno-Sakhalinsk. This impedes economic growth and trade development and places a heavy strain on these Alaskan businessmen and women. Moreover, within the near future, offshore oil leases in Magadan will be coming up for auction, and mining activity is planned to accelerate. The Chukotka region has also announcement plans for petroleum and minerals development. In the absence of adequate transportation infrastructure, opportunities for Alaska companies to gain market share in these projects will be thwarted. I could go on, but in the interests of time, which is extremely short, I will not.

You should also know that USAID is on record as being supportive of authorizing an extension of the grants. The following is an extract of a message sent by Jess Bratton, USAID Moscow to Charlene Derry with FAA on December 23…

> "Orion informed me that he has no objection to granting an extension. However, the request must come from the grantee, the State of Alaska, DECD. Together with the extension request the DECD should submit a summary of the program results to date and a work plan for 2005."

Once again Al, I strongly urge you to reconsider your position and to proceed quickly with a request for an extension of the USAID grants. They are playing a key role in job development and project opportunities for Alaska companies.

Best regards,

Dear Senator Stevens:

I wish to inform you of the involvement of VECO Alaska Inc. in the National Science Foundation's Relocatable Atmospheric Observatory (RAO) project. If this project proceeds, VECO will provide engineering and construction expertise to fabricate and construct the large antenna structures and to participate on an ongoing basis in the scheduled relocations of the RAO. Please find enclosed, for your information, a background paper and briefing charts on the RAO.

The RAO project (estimated at $40M) will provide a number of specific benefits to the State of Alaska. My company, using our engineering experience stemming from our activities on the North Slope, will perform a significant portion of the design and construction over a period of 2 to 3 years. In addition, the first location of the RAO is scheduled to be at the Poker Flats Rocket Range near Fairbanks and subsequent locations could include the HAARP facility at Gakona. I believe these locations may not only provide new benefits for Alaskan science and scientists, but will draw scientists from around the U.S. to participate in the groundbreaking research made possible by the RAO.

As the background paper and briefing point out, the RAO is a key component to a better understanding of space weather and its impact on man-made systems. Such an understanding can help us in a wide variety of areas, including operating satellites and power systems to better withstand solar effects, improve space and ground-based communications systems, and space-based sensors.

I respectfully request your support of the RAO program in this year's legislative cycle. I have taken the liberty to include some suggested language for inclusion in the report supporting the HUD, VA, and Independent Agencies Appropriations Bill.

Thank you for your time and consideration.

Sincerely,

"Over the last two years, the National Science Foundation (NSF) has included funding for the Polar Cap Observatory (PCO) to conduct basic research in the polar cap, the critical unexplored region of sun-earth interactions. In response to congressional concerns, NSF is reformulating the PCO concept. In particular, by making the system relocatable, NSF substantially increases the number of scientific and other missions it can perform, including both polar and non-polar research. The committee is encouraged by NSF's effort to develop the RAO concept."

RE: Alaska BAT Program

I tried to call you earlier today regarding a new matter which I wanted to bring to your attention. Recently, VECO Alaska, Inc., one of the VECO Companies which operates primarily in Alaska, requested authorization from the Bureau of Apprenticeship and Training ("BAT") to establish an apprenticeship and training program. As you know, in Alaska there is a tremendous need for qualified training programs for individuals seeking employment in the construction and oil field service industries.

Federal Regulations allow for a reduction in the wages and benefits paid to apprentices enrolled in a BAT training program. Pursuant to the regulations, employers can pay apprentices 60% of both the prevailing wage and prevailing benefits established for journeyman. Of course, the wage and benefit reduction makes sense given the fact that apprentices are in training and are significantly less productive than journeyman.

VECO Alaska's application to establish a BAT program includes the allowable reduction for both wages and benefits. However, to date, BAT has stated that the VECO Alaska program could only include a reduction in the wages paid to apprentices. Despite the Federal Regulations, BAT has stated that VECO Alaska must pay 100% of the prevailing benefits to apprentices enrolled in its program.

I have asked our attorney, [redacted] to fax you copies of the materials we recently submitted to BAT asking that it reconsider its position regarding the benefits reduction. As you can see from the materials, the reduction in benefits is authorized by the applicable regulations and is necessary for VECO Alaska to fully implement its training program. Without the allowable reduction in both wages and benefits, VECO Alaska will be required to either cancel the training program or, at a minimum, dramatically reduce the training opportunities for individuals interested in enrolling in the program.

At this point we are not asking that either you or Senator Stevens take any action on this matter. We just wanted to make you aware of it in the event BAT continues in its refusal to comply with the applicable regulations. If that turns out to be the case, we may ask for your help.

In closing I want to emphasize a few things. First, this matter does not have anything to do with the training program for the Sackalins we have been discussing. The VECO Alaska program will apply

$30 + million Annually

Seek funding for project this year (2001), DOE said no funding, no sole-source contract. DOE indicated that a small amount of funding "earmarked" for the AHTNA Team should be in the range of 3 to 5 million dollars, 10 million dollars would be better.

- Coordination of political efforts

Congressional support for securing project, engage U.S. Energy and Natural Resources Committee for support (U.S. Senator Frank Murkowski and U.S. Senator Pete Domenici).

Coordinated effort for engaging congressional assistance should be done all at the same time and each team member must be working off the same action plan.

DOE is hosting a SBA/DOE conference June 20th through June 22nd of this year. Mr. Demer and Mr. Mouringhan would like to meet our whole team at conference. Rob Jordan can coordinate schedules for each company representative.

I'm hoping you and your staff can give me some assistance with VECO's Pakistan partnership, Asia Petroleum Ltd. (APL).

We need the World Bank to assist the shareholders of APL to persuade the Government of Pakistan (GOP) to sign the Implementation Agreement for the Hub Power Plant Fuel Oil Pipeline Project. The Government has continually delayed signing the agreement; and this puts both the shareholders of APL and the World Bank at risk should the GOP execute some change in terms or if the power plant were to convert to gas.

We would like a World Bank representative to attend the APL board meeting on September 30, 1999, in Islamabad for discussions with the GOP officials and the board members. Could you have your staff work with [redacted] of VECO Corporation, [redacted] of VECO Corporation, [redacted] We have made some preliminary contacts with your staff to expedite this process.

[redacted]

- [redacted] on regarding ~~the~~ a couple of [redacted]

- Arnade property - several emails back + forth as well as w/ [redacted] - not sure on # of emails but felt it was over a short period of time

* regarding the language of the appropriations

[redacted]

- met w/ TS + TS's lobbyist [redacted] b6 b7C

→ has met [redacted] but not sure when + [redacted] doesn't know him well

→ ASLC

- asked for funding a # of times
- have received funding thru a number of bills ~~(also HHS appropr.)~~

→ City of Seward -

- met a number of times
- met various council members, Mayor Varga
- discussed appropriations

→ Reviewed language before [redacted] involved and then when she became involved then ~~&~~ may not have been involved

- Sen. Stevens advised at ~~meetings~~ mtgs & w/ Seward that it was old language for NPS parcels + never thought the ~~&~~ was going to be left over

- Also present at meeting from Sen. Steve
  - [redacted] Sen Stevens + [redacted] came later
  - City was upset but [redacted] said no picotags on the land so city couldn't expect too much but [redacted] felt they wanted at least the mayor wanted it
  - Not sure about the City being upset over the language of vacating Washington St.

- After mtg [redacted] had convo w/ [redacted] felt [redacted] was discussing issue w/ [redacted]
  - [redacted] then and she had [redacted] w/ the issues

b7C

- Emails after mtg
  - [redacted] language for bill and may have ha a price amount which [redacted] would have taken it out because the Senator wouldn't have allowed it

[redacted] recalled city was never going to buy property and [redacted] recalls that she + [redacted] bout ASLC if they would b willing purchase [redacted] property + [redacted] said they would as long as the ASLC board agreed

2004 - NPS mandate to purchase the parcels

(6)

- Any communications w/ NPS?
  - someone in DC, not sure who, about the status of negotiations
- received email about the estimates + offers
  - Also found out from NPS, [redacted] was also speaking to NPS - [redacted] draft letter from DC contact to Sen. that they did not want to purchase some of the properties b6 b7C
  - May have spoken to local NPS personnel regarding appropriat
- the local support (AK) differed than the DC NPS
  - AK = very supportive
  - DC = not very supportive

→ Kept some emails + correspondence regarding ASLC as well as a memo w/ timeline - Gave copies to chief of staff

→ Recalled talking to Sen about the appropriations - Sen. became unsolved after mayor mtg. when he learned that all the land had not been purchased - This spawned further conversation regarding the vacation of WA st + whether the city would get compensation for vacating

- they went back to NPS to see if they wanted the land (last 3 properties) + NPS said no, they didn't need it for the multi-agency complex
- Sen. Stevens wanted to write some thing into law then he was afraid the city of Seward would get no benefit and the $ could be taken back + DOI could have taken the $ + put into general act.

→ Why not just city of Seward?

* went back to Vacating of WA St. + city didn't want to → Why continue to purchase Arcade property if NPS said didn't need it?

- Just don't know how to answer the question but [redacted] told [redacted] that NPS had wanted to purchase those properties

→ [redacted] stops by when in town

- Sen Stevens had final approval on the language and the week after city mtg it was an on-going conversation - drafts and approved by him

* Sen. aware [redacted]

- Was discussed [redacted] + Senator felt ok to do long as decisions went thru Board of Director + not mandatory to buy

b7C

→ Had convo ~~Es~~ about property + [redacted] had said he was sure the ASLC would purchase the property ~~of~~ because only way to expand ASLC

- Not aware of payoffs or inappropriate payments to [redacted] or [redacted]

Ted Stevens

In 2004 the interests of Ted Stevens in JLS Properties, Jillian Square Apartments, Centerpoint I, Centerpoint II, Centerpoint Financial Center and Grantsville Development listed on Part IIIB were sold. Cash and promissory notes, for the sales prices disclosed on Part IV, were received. The note received in connection with the sale of JLS, Jillian Square, Centerpoint I and II was from Leonard Hyde and Jon Rubini, and provided for interest at the rate of 8% with payments due quarterly. The note received from the sale of Grantsville was from Nickel, Inc. and provided for interest at the rate of 4% and is payable in full on June 1, 2005. All the cash and notes resulting from the above described sales were conveyed to the Theodore F. Stevens Blind Trust which was created in 2004. Senator Stevens had no interest in those LLC's or the notes at year end and so the value of each is listed as "0".

Centerpoint Financial Center LLC was formed effective January 1, 2004 by means of distribution from Centerpoint II. Senator Stevens sold his interest effective that day.

PART VI. REIMBURSEMENTS

Report necessary travel related expenses from each source aggregating more than $285 in value during the reporting period received by you, your spouse and/or dependent child in connection with your provision of services at a speaking engagement, fact-finding event, or other event (personal, campaign, or otherwise). Disclosure is required regardless of whether those expenses were reimbursed to the individual or paid directly by the sponsoring organization. A description of the itinerary, including date(s) and the nature of expenses is required. If you are reimbursed for more than one trip from the same sponsor (and the trips added together are worth more than $285), then you must report each trip individually, even if the reimbursement for each separate trip does not equal more than $285. Report Gifts of travel in Part V.

Exclude: Travel related expenses provided by federal, state, D.C., and local governments; or by a foreign government; reimbursements from campaign funds which are reported to the FEC; reimbursements to a spouse or dependent child totally independent of his or her relationship to you; and reimbursements reported to the Office of Public Records pursuant to Senate Rule 35. For further information, see Instructions.

The Honorable Ted Stevens
United States Senate
Washington, D.C. 20510

Dear Senator Stevens:

This responds to your recent letter to the Select Committee on Ethics regarding your receipt of the Dwight D. Eisenhower Leadership Prize (the "Prize"). The Prize includes a one-time cash grant of $25,000. You have asked the Committee if, pursuant to the Senate Gifts Rule (Rule 35), you may accept this cash grant.

According to your letter and to information provided to the Committee by the Eisenhower Institute (the "Institute"), the Institute sponsors the Prize in honor of the memory of the late President Dwight D. Eisenhower. The Institute is a nonpartisan, not-for-profit entity which does not lobby and which takes no positions on legislation. The Prize was first awarded in 1991. The prior recipients of the Prize are: Secretary of Defense Cohen (1998), Nobel Laureate Elie Wiesel (1997), Former President Bush (1996), Former Senator Dole (1995), Former Senator Bentsen (1994), General Colin Powell (1993), and Lieutenant General Brent Scowcroft (1992).

Award recipients are chosen annually by the Chair of the Institute, the President of Gettysburg College and the Executive Committee of the Institute. In selecting the Prize recipient the Institute looks to its published guiding principles to select someone whose lifetime accomplishments reflect President Eisenhower's legacy of (i) integrity and leadership, (ii) promoting broader understanding of America's role and responsibilities in world affairs, and (iii) fostering leadership development and public service in America and its youth.

In material provided to the Committee, Ms. Mary Eisenhower Atwater, grand-daughter of President Eisenhower, discussed the basis for your selection as the Prize recipient:

> "(You have been) a pillar in American political culture for over 30 years. (Your) intuition, dedication, and experience have also served as a bridge, a bridge that brought the great territory of Alaska closer to her family in the United States, and also a bridge that has brought the integrity, brilliance, devotion, and hope of the '50's carefully and gently through the quagmires of the recent events."

The Committee understands that you did not solicit the Prize nor did you participate in anyway in the process through which you were selected. The Committee further understands that neither you nor any member of your family is affiliated with either the Prize or the Institute.

Senate Rule 35 prohibits a Member, officer or employee of the Senate from receiving any gift of a value of $50 or more, or gifts (of $10 or more) from one source aggregating $100 or more in one calendar year; there are a number of exceptions to Rule 35 pursuant to which certain gifts exceeding these dollar value limits may be accepted. One such exception, set forth at paragraph 1(c)(11) of Rule 35, provides that a Member, officer or employee may accept

> Honorary degrees (and associated travel, food, refreshments, and entertainment) and other bona fide, nonmonetary awards presented in recognition of public service (and associated food, refreshments, and entertainment provided in the presentation of such degrees and awards). [Emphasis added.]

In elaborating upon this provision the Committee has stated--in the Senate Ethics Manual, 1999 ed. at page 43--that "Members, officers, and employees who are the intended recipient of a cash award that is bestowed in connection with an event not open to the public may accept the honor of the award, but the proposed cash award should be given directly to a designated charity."

The Prize is not "open to the public" as that term has been construed previously by the Committee for purposes of the Gifts Rule. Thus, absent a decision by the Committee to grant a waiver you could not accept the cash component of the Prize in conformity with the requirements of Rule 35. The Committee has authority to grant a waiver of Senate Rule 35 relating to acceptance of gifts pursuant to Rule 14(a)(3) of its Rules of Procedure. Paragraph 1(c)(21) of Rule 35 provides an exception to the limits of the Rule for "[a]nything for which, in an unusual case, a waiver is granted by the" Committee.

Based on the specific facts before it in this matter, as set forth above and as summarized below, the Committee has determined that it will grant a waiver of Senate Rule 35, the Gifts Rule, to allow you to personally accept and retain the $25,000 cash grant which accompanies the 1999 Dwight D. Eisenhower Leadership Prize. In granting this waiver the Committee notes its consideration of the following factors presented by this particular matter: neither the Prize nor the Institute has a direct interest in or takes positions on legislation; the Prize is an established program of recognition under which the Prize has been awarded on a regular basis in the past; the Institute looks to its published guiding principles to select the Prize recipient; the selection process for the Prize appears to be designed to minimize the potential for arbitrary or preferential decision making; the Prize has not "targeted" elected officials as recipients; the Institute, which sponsors the Prize, is a not-for-profit, nonpartisan entity and the Prize is bestowed on a nonpartisan basis; the Prize is being bestowed upon you based on your sustained accomplishments over the course of your long career; you did not solicit the Prize or participate in any way in the selection process; and neither you nor any member of your family is affiliated with the Institute or the Prize.

Note that, should you decide to accept the Prize's cash grant, the value of that grant should be reported on Part V, relating to gifts, on your annual financial disclosure form.

If you have any further questions about this matter, please do not hesitate to contact the Committee.

Sincerely,

Bob Smith
Chairman

Harry Reid
Vice Chairman

Report necessary travel related expenses from each source aggregating more than $250 in value during the reporting period received by you, your spouse and/or dependent child in connection with your provision of services at a speaking engagement, fact-finding event, or other event. Disclosure is required regardless of whether those expenses were reimbursed to the individual or paid directly by the sponsoring organization. A description of the itinerary, including date(s) and the nature of expenses is required. If you are reimbursed for more than one trip from the same sponsor (and the trips added together are worth more than $250), then you must report each trip individually, even if the reimbursement for each separate trip does not equal more than $250. Report Gifts of travel in Part V.

Exclude: Travel related expenses provided by federal, state, D.C., and local governments; or by a foreign government; reimbursements from campaign funds which are reported to the FEC; reimbursements to a spouse or dependent child totally independent of his or her relationship to you; and reimbursements reported to the Office of Public Records pursuant to Senate Rule 35. For further information, see instructions.

Report necessary travel related expenses from each source aggregating more than $250 in value during the reporting period received by you, your spouse and/or dependent child in connection with your provision of services at a speaking engagement, fact-finding event, or other event. Disclosure is required regardless of whether those expenses were reimbursed to the individual or paid directly by the sponsoring organization. A description of the itinerary, including date(s) and the nature of expenses is required. If you are reimbursed for more than one trip from the same sponsor (and the trips added together are worth more than $250), then you must report each trip individually, even if the reimbursement for each separate trip does not equal more than $250. Report Gifts of travel in Part V.

Exclude: Travel related expenses provided by federal, state, D.C., and local governments; or by a foreign government; reimbursements from campaign funds which are reported to the FEC; reimbursements to a spouse or dependent child totally independent of his or her relationship to you; and reimbursements reported to the Office of Public Records pursuant to Senate Rule 35. Description: ☐ Original notes re interview of

Two original affidavits regarding [redacted] [redacted] one from SA [redacted] one from SSA [redacted]

AFFIDAVIT

I, [redacted] being duly sworn, depose and say:

1. I am a Special Agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) and have been so employed for more than [redacted] years. I am currently assigned to the FBI's Anchorage Field Office where I serve as the [redacted]

2. The information contained in this affidavit is based entirely on my own personal observations and interactions with [redacted]

3. On September 3 , 2006, I accompanied Special Agent (SA) [redacted] to [redacted] [redacted] residence, located in [redacted] Alaska.

4. SA [redacted] and I met with [redacted] for approximately 2 hours. The three of us sat outside [redacted] residence where SA [redacted] and I identified ourselves and advised [redacted] [redacted] of the reasons why we wanted to interview him.

5. The results of our interview was documented in an FD-302, dated September 5 , 2006.

b7C

6. During the interview [redacted] SA [redacted] and I assured [redacted] that we were not there to interview him on any matter relating to [redacted] SA [redacted] and I advised [redacted] that our sole reason for interviewing him was to learn what he knew regarding [redacted] to U.S. Senator Ted Steven's Girdwood residence.

7. At no time did I or SA [redacted] offer [redacted] or [redacted] or anyone else related to [redacted] a promise of immunity. As an FBI Agent, we do not possess the authority to offer any witness or subject a promise of immunity.

8. On August 20, 2008, SA [redacted] and I met again with [redacted] and [redacted] [redacted] at their residence. During this meeting, I told [redacted] that the Affidavit dated March , 2008, which he purportedly prepared [redacted] Specifically, I told [redacted] [redacted] that at no time did I or SA [redacted] ever promise [redacted] or anyone else immunity. [redacted] acknowledged that no promise of immunity was ever given by me or SA [redacted] and [redacted] expressed their concern for [redacted] SA [redacted] and I restated our promise to not ask any questions regarding [redacted] and that we had lived up to our word. [redacted] apologized for signing the Affidavit and stated that he [redacted] case against U.S. Senator Ted Stevens. I told [redacted]

FURTHER, AFFIANT SAYETH NAUGHT

[redacted] 12/15/08

[redacted] Supervisory Special Agent
Federal Bureau of Investigation

AFFIDAVIT

I, [redacted] declare the following is true and correct:

1. I am a Special Agent with the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI), United States Department of Justice. I have been employed as a Special Agent with the FBI since [redacted] I have been assigned to the FBI Anchorage Division. Over the past [redacted] years, I have been involved in an ongoing federal investigation into corruption within the State of Alaska. I am familiar with most aspects of this investigation, including that portion involving a witness known as [redacted]

2. Throughout my contact with [redacted] from approximately [redacted] to [redacted] lived in a cabin in [redacted] Alaska with [redacted] Family Member A and several other individuals.

3. This affidavit is made in support of the government's position that the government never offered nor provided immunity to [redacted] his family, or friends.

4. On September 3, 2006, Supervisory Special Agent [redacted] and I met with [redacted] at his home in [redacted] Alaska. We interviewed [redacted] and he willingly provided a variety of information pertinent to an ongoing FBI investigation. At one point [redacted] advised he wanted to cooperate but he wanted to keep his family separate and away from his cooperation with the government. Supervisory Special Agent [redacted] responded to [redacted] statement by advising we would avoid asking him questions about his family. [redacted] continued to provide information about the ongoing investigation involving [redacted] VECO Corporation, and state and federal legislators.

5. On March 14, 2008, I spoke with [redacted] telephonically. [redacted] advised that he had heard that Family Member A would be the next person arrested by the FBI. [redacted] asked me if the FBI was investigating or planning to arrest Family Member A. I advised [redacted] that I could not confirm or deny that information.

6. On March 16, 2008, I spoke with [redacted] telephonically. [redacted] advised he was very concerned about Family Member A, and that Family Member A was concerned about the FBI investigations and that it was due to Family Member A's relationship and history with [redacted]

7. On March 17, 2008, I spoke with [redacted] telephonically. [redacted] advised that Family Member A wanted to meet with the FBI.

8. On March 18, 2008, I spoke with [redacted] and Family Member A's [redacted] telephonically. [redacted] and Family Member A's [redacted] advised that Family Member A told them that Family Member A had not done anything wrong or illegal, and that the meeting with the FBI would be a waste of time. In addition, Family Member A's [redacted] advised that the only way Family Member A would cooperate with the FBI is if he were provided full immunity. I told [redacted] and Family Member A's [redacted] that the FBI did not have the power to provide immunity, only the government prosecutors could enter into an immunity agreement, and that it was unlikely Family Member A would receive immunity.

9. On August 13, 2008, I spoke with [redacted] telephonically. [redacted] advised that he was contemplating using a lawyer that Family Member A hired to be a family attorney. [redacted] was concerned he could later be charged with something related to conduit campaign contributions. I advised I could not guarantee anything, but told [redacted] he could get an attorney or he could talk with the government attorneys about immunity. Later that day, I found out for the first time tha [redacted] had signed an affidavit related to immunity.

10. On August 13, 2008, Special Agent [redacted] and I met with [redacted] in Wasilla, Alaska. [redacted] discussed the affidavit he signed on [redacted] that claimed immunity for [redacted] friends, and family. [redacted] said he signed the affidavit, but that Family Member A drafted the affidavit. [redacted] said that he felt pressured to sign it because he was in the middle of a "mess" because of his relationship with Family Member A's [redacted] and Family Member A. [redacted] recognized that the contents of the affidavit were not accurate. [redacted] believed he previously told agents that he did not want Family Member A's [redacted] involved with his cooperation with the government, but recognized he did not receive immunity for himself or anyone else. b6 b7C

11. On August 20, 2008, Supervisory Special Agent [redacted] and I met with [redacted] and Family Member A's [redacted] at their home in [redacted] Alaska. [redacted] and Family Member A's [redacted] apologized for the affidavit and its inaccuracy.

12. On multiple occasions in August, September, and October 2008, government attorneys and I met with [redacted] to prepare for trial. During some of those meetings, we questioned [redacted] about his affidavit. [redacted] confirmed the affidavit was not accurate, and that he was never promised immunity for himself or any other person. [redacted] was willing to say he signed the affidavit, but was uncomfortable testifying that Family Member A drafted the affidavit because he did not want to get Family Member A in trouble.

13. Between late August and early September 2008, [redacted] came to the United States Attorney's Office (USAO) in Anchorage, Alaska for trial preparation. On two or more occasions, [redacted] b3

14. Between mid-September and October 2008, one or more government attorneys and I met with [redacted] in the DOJ Public Integrity Section Office. On one or more occasions, [redacted]

15. On a few occasions, [redacted] the Public Integrity Section in Washington, DC to [redacted] On each occasion, I provided him information and restrictions. I told him how to contact me if he needed something. I informed him the office was secure, and that he could not wander around. I advised him not to look at anything other than what we provided him. In addition, I checked on him every 10 to 30 minutes. At no time was [redacted] cellular phone taken away from him so he may have made calls to outside individuals without the government's knowledge.

16. During [redacted] review sessions both at the USAO and the office of the Public Integrity Section, I never provided [redacted] with a timeline. To my knowledge, no one ever provided him a timeline. To my knowledge, [redacted] was only shown [redacted]

17. At one point, [redacted] that he wanted to discuss or review later. I provided those to [redacted] for his use. I never [redacted] for him, and I never [redacted] To my knowledge, no one else did that to [redacted]

18. I never told [redacted] to reread documents until he recalled something correctly. To my knowledge, no one ever told [redacted] to reread documents until he recalled something correctly. In fact [redacted] told [redacted] not to follow the trial in the media because he [redacted]

b7C

19. The rooms in which [redacted] at the USAO in Anchorage, Alaska and the office of the Public Integrity Section did not contain evidence relating to the Stevens trial to my knowledge. In fact, I know that the attorney-agent work room for the Stevens trial at the Public Integrity Section was a completely different room than the one in which [redacted] If there were folders in the same room as [redacted] then those folders probably contained the photographs of Stevens' Girdwood home that we anticipated showing to [redacted]

20. On November 14, 2008, [redacted] left me multiple voice messages. The messages advised [redacted] was in town and he was there to help "smooth things over" for the meeting the government was going to have that day with Family Member A. I called [redacted] advised he wanted to show his support of Family Member A and wanted Family Member A to work things out with the government. [redacted] believed it was important for Family Member A to come to the table with the government and get things ironed out. [redacted] advised Family Member A was an integral part of the family and if anything happened to him, the family would fall apart.

21. On November 15, 2008, I received a facsimile containing a three-page unsigned letter from [redacted] This letter contained a multitude of inaccuracies, many of which I have outlined above. I once again re-iterate that I never gave or offered [redacted] his family, or friends immunity.

I declare under the penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct.

[redacted] I don't know about the steam. She is right about the city water. I hope the work proceeds in the time frame you want. I have had inquiries about Redmond. Seems some people bought property out there on the highway at a high cost and they are now trying to keep Dick from getting his property because they say he hasn't paid anything for it and that the got 1.5 acres at Indian for the homestead he didn't own. Another group, headed by the Forest Service allege that Dick has decide to put up a windmill "farm" and ruin the vista on the drive to Hope. I told my staff to stiff them all. What we are trying to do is to correct a wrong. I think Dick is entitled to what he earned and didn't get under the homestead act and that whatever he does on the land is probably subject so so many restrictions from the wetlands people and the zoning people that before he is through he'll say it wasn't worth fighting for. I just believe right is right. The future will take care of itself. We are still battling, now don't know for sure that we'll be going West tomorrow. Enjoy the peace and quiet for me. teds

[redacted] g first duly sworn, deposes and says:

1. I am associated with [redacted] npany") as [redacted] _____. In this position I have the responsibility for the Company's compliance with the subpoena duces tecum issued to me on 03-03, 2008, which calls for the production of certain documents before a Grand Jury of this Court.

2. I personally have conducted or supervised compliance by the Company with the subpoena duces tecum. To the best of my knowledge, information and belief, based upon due diligence and reasonable inquiry, the documents enclosed herewith, bearing the numbers _____, constitute all the documents in the possession, custody or control of the Company that fall within the terms of the subpoena duces tecum.

SEE ATTACH

3. No documents responsive to the subpoena duces tecum have been withheld by the Company pursuant to a claim of privilege or otherwise. To the best of my knowledge, information and belief, based upon due diligence and reasonable inquiry, no one has directed the destruction of any documents responsive to the subpoena duces tecum and no such documents have been destroyed.

4. The documents made by the Company and produced in compliance with the subpoena duces tecum are memoranda, reports, records or data compilations of acts, events, conditions, opinions or diagnoses that were made at or near the time, by or from information transmitted by, a person with knowledge and that have been kept in the course of the Company's regularly conducted business activity. It has been the Company's regular practice in that business activity to make those memoranda, reports, records or data compilations. Neither the source of information, nor the method of circumstances of preparation, indicate a lack of trustworthiness for those memoranda, reports, records or data compilations.

5. I understand that the furnishing of these documents to counsel for the United States in response to the subpoena duces tecum and the execution of this Affidavit, are at the sole discretion and election of myself and the Company, and waive my right of personally producing the documents before the grand jury which right to appear is expressly waived.

6. I am authorized by the Company to execute this Affidavit, and I have reviewed all of its terms with counsel for the Company before signing and swearing to it.

FURTHER AFFIANT SAYETH NAUGHT.

Re: Grand Jury Subpoena

Dear [redacted]

You have been served with a grand jury subpoena duces tecum, to produce certain enumerated records before the grand jury in Anchorage, Alaska at 9:00 a.m., Tuesday, January 9, 2007. If you need additional time to comply with this subpoena please contact our office for an extension.

You have the right to appear before the grand jury. To minimize your inconvenience in complying with this subpoena, you may mail the requested documents certified to our office, or provide the documents to the agent(s) serving the subpoena in lieu of personally producing the documents before the grand jury.

b7C

Should you decide to provide the documents by certified mail, the officer responsible for complying with this subpoena must execute the enclosed affidavit before a notary public. This affidavit must accompany the documents being forwarded.

Please be advised that disclosure of this subpoena may impede an ongoing criminal investigation.

If you have any questions regarding the subpoena or the method by which that subpoena may be satisfied, please contact me collect at (907) 271-5071.

Sincerely,

[redacted]

IN RE GRAND JURY INVESTIGATION _____	))))))))))	AFFIDAVIT OF COMPLIANCE WITH GRAND JURY SUBPOENA DUCES TECUM

[redacted], being first duly sworn, deposes and says:

1. I am associated with [redacted] (the "Company") as [redacted]. In this position I have the responsibility for the Company's compliance with the subpoena duces tecum issued to me on Dec. 14, 2006, which calls for the production of certain documents before a Grand Jury of this Court.

2. I personally have conducted or supervised compliance by the Company with the subpoena duces tecum. To the best of my knowledge, information and belief, based upon due diligence and reasonable inquiry, the documents enclosed herewith, bearing the numbers _____, constitute all the documents in the possession, custody or control of the Company that fall within the terms of the subpoena duces tecum.

3. No documents responsive to the subpoena duces tecum have been withheld by the Company pursuant to a claim of privilege or otherwise. To the best of my knowledge, information and belief, based upon due diligence and reasonable inquiry, no one has directed the destruction of any documents responsive to the subpoena duces tecum and no such documents have been destroyed.

4. The documents made by the Company and produced in compliance with the subpoena duces tecum are memoranda, reports, records or data compilations of acts, events, conditions, opinions or diagnoses that were made at or near the time, by or from information transmitted by, a person with knowledge and that have been kept in the course of the Company's regularly conducted business activity. It has been the Company's regular practice in that business activity to make those memoranda, reports, records or data compilations. Neither the source of information, nor the method of circumstances of preparation, indicate a lack of trustworthiness for those memoranda, reports, records or data compilations.

5. I understand that the furnishing of these documents to counsel for the United States in response to the subpoena duces tecum and the execution of this Affidavit, are at the sole discretion and election of myself and the Company, and are in lieu of personally producing the documents before the grand jury which right to appear is expressly waived.

6. I am authorized by the Company to execute this Affidavit, and I have reviewed all of its terms with counsel for the Company before signing and swearing to it.

[redacted] is aware that [redacted] and State Senator John Cowdery are very good friends. Cowdery has come into the VECO offices a few times. [redacted] is a friend of nearly every politician in the state. [redacted] Ralph Seekins on one occasion.

[redacted] was aware that Cowdery owned a boat that sank in the harbor near Whittier. He recalled that Cowdery asked either VECO or [redacted] to buy the boat, but VECO [redacted] declined. He is also not aware of VECO paying for storage, towing or salvage costs of the boat. [redacted] was shown copies of three checks, the first a check from VECO Corporation to the law firm of Eide & Miller dated 08/31/2001, in the amount of $7151.29, and two checks from the IOLTA account of Eide & Miller dated the same day, totaling $7151.29. [redacted] could not recall exactly what these payments were for.

attorneys, but has never been directly involved in anything with [redacted]. He believes [redacted] was one of the attorneys. [redacted] was concerned that [redacted] might attempt to conduct discovery related to his complaints. [redacted] did not want to see his client, VECO, dragged into the process.

[redacted] was aware that there was documentation created after [redacted] filed his complaint to show that [redacted] did work. This documentation was to show the work that [redacted] had done for VECO. [redacted] does not know exactly what work [redacted] has done, as [redacted] worked directly with [redacted] is aware that [redacted] does "all kinds of stuff" for VECO, such as federal projects, including 8A projects, and business opportunity matters. [redacted] is a federal lobbyist in Washington D.C. and helped VECO understand the inner workings of the Pentagon, including working with the Under-Secretary for military housing. VECO has obtained some contracts for military housing.

[redacted] is aware that as a corporation, VECO is limited in what it can do as far as political contributions. He is aware of the APOC regulations. He is aware that the campaign limits are $1,000 personally, and that no corporate campaign contributions are permitted, though corporations can make some contributions to political parties. He personally only makes very small donations. His funds are limited as [redacted] When asked if [redacted] or anyone else at VECO ever asked him to contribute funds to a particular candidates political campaign, [redacted] stated that they used to send around notices whenever they were sponsoring a fund-raiser for a candidate. [redacted] used to attend these occasionally, but found them boring and has not been for the past couple of years, so [redacted] eventually stopped asking him. Neither [redacted] have ever been reimbursed by VECO for personal campaign contributions they have made.

There will be No Ocean Reform without Reform School for Senator Stevens' Ocean's Eleven

By Victor Smith

'From the Fleet' is intended to allow individuals and organizations the opportunity to express their opinions on commercial fishing-related issues and concerns. The views expressed herein are the opinions of the author, and do not reflect nor represent those of* Fishermen's News *staff and/or any related constituents.

Coming soon to a fishery near you

Since about 2001, it's been clear that Alaskan seafood processors—with complicit backing from specific fishermen's association leaders—intended to use fleet reduction plans (like the recently approved crab buyback program) as the carrot in a bait-and-switch scheme to acquire Processor Quota shares (PQS). Anyone who's followed this will remember that it was to be only for crab and only for safety. And anyone who's followed the spread of PQS will realize now that was baloney; PQS are about the money, and they are for every fishery their proponents can apply them to. For crabbers, the stick was forcing those remaining to join 'cooperatives' selling 90% of their catch to a few PQS holders.

Crab rights "restructuring" and the fleet buyback plan were joined at the hip by a shared dependence on U.S. Senator Ted Stevens' power to forge Appropriation riders that legislated and funded the inseparable schemes. But Stevens doesn't deserve all the credit. Both of those deals were brokered through the National Marine Fisheries Service (NMFS) and the North Pacific Fisheries Management Council (NPFMC), who both answer to NOAA. So the policy is also NOAA's.

"It was pretty obvious from the way the promised crab buyback money kept disappearing that it wouldn't occur until PQS were secured for processors," said Oliver Holm, a former United Fishermen of Alaska (UFA) vice president. "At one point, the money got shunted aside for use to pay trawlers and processors for supposed losses from the sea lion closures. Kodiak pot cod fishermen suffered the greatest losses from those closures in our region and didn't receive a dime. Of course the pot cod fishermen weren't colluding with the processors like the trawlers were to lock up the resource rights."

"When I advanced a resolution, four years ago, against processor quotas in the Bering Sea Crab fishery at the UFA board [UFA president Bob Thorstenson, Jr.] came unglued. So did [UFA executive director] Tom Gemmel; he said 'It would ruin everything.' Later that same year, UFA approved 'salmon restructuring'. I was UFA vice president and had not been included in any of the discussions. The whole thing was obviously worked out by someone else."

Randy Babich, a widely respected seiner, told me that he had watched Thorstenson fishing fall chums in lower Hood Canal, well below quality cut off lines for other boats fishing for NorQuest, the company Thorstenson was selling to. When he inquired with another fisherman as to why there were no other NorQuest boats, he said they were not allowed to go below a Canal line, 12 to 15 miles further out, due to quality concerns. Thorstenson was getting this special treatment in Alaska, too, at a time when

194A-AN-14699-SEASPSVOA-2

other fishermen were on strict limits.

Knowing this, I was concerned to learn that Thorstenson was at NorQuest's offices in Seattle in March of 2002. "He was just coordinating our positions for the Governor's Salmon Summit," quipped John Sund. Whose positions? It was NorQuest brass who had also just written several industry white papers seemingly intended to coordinate salmon processor's incredible market and pricing consolidation that put so many fishermen out of business that winter. And of course, NorQuest was a key player in coordinating the crab plan. It was the Salmon Summit that formally kicked off salmon industry restructuring and the Salmon Task Force, and where Thorstenson claimed the permits of his fishermen constituents didn't give them the right to fish.

"It was a setup," said Holm. "Get the UFA board to endorse the idea of restructuring and then the real control would be in the processor's hands."

"I was at first surprised at the opposition to my processor quota resolution from all the SE seine groups: Petersburg Vessel Owners Association (PVOA), Purse Seine Vessel Owners Association (PSVOA) and South East Alaska Seiners (SEAS)," Holm continued.

Surprised because at that time it appeared as if only a few fishermen's association executives were in on a dirty little secret that the eleven-member NPFMC - Senator Stevens' own Ocean's Eleven - had been seemingly rigged for a unanimous vote of approval for the BSAI plan that transferred rights to crab from fishermen to processors.

Conflicts of interest ran so deep and unchecked on the Council that the economic gospel endorsing PQS as the preferred option for the BSAI plan was written by an economist who referred to fishermen simply as parasites, or in his exact words, "those most egregious rent seekers."

The Council's unanimous vote wouldn't have been even plausibly credible if fishermen were opposed to it, so with the complicit aid of fishermen's association leaders they appeared to be colluding with, processors made sure fishermen didn't "wreck everything" by weighing in.

"It later became clear that [Southeast seiners] were expecting to get bought off by receiving a big buyback payment from Senator Stevens. They were evidently perfectly willing to sell out other Alaska fishermen for their payoff," Holm said.

Payoff and the rest of the story on the seine buyback

Details of the siene buyback became public knowledge on November 13, 2004, in Lynnwood, Washington, as nearly 80 members of the PSVOA attentively listened to executive director Rob Zuanich's discussion of the annual meeting's main agenda item: the Southeast seine buyback. Although the seine buyback originated with SEAS when its board made fleet reduction a priority in 2001, SEAS membership has sagged under the heavy-handed leadership of Thorstenson necessitating PSVOA's assistance.

In his short presentation, Zuanich expressed cautious optimism that seiners might get a fleet reduction plan before the start of the 2005 salmon season. He also expressed confidence that buyback could be kept under control, in U.S. Senator Ted Stevens' hands, despite jurisdictional protests from NMFS over its administration. Then it became known that Ted's son, Alaska state senator Ben Stevens, was in the middle of the deal; a deal that has begun to look less like a payoff to seiners than a scam to funnel money into Ben's future Senate campaign war chest, and to support his continued efforts to transfer Alaskan state fisheries resources to processors.

Convoluted defined

"How are we going to pay the $500,000 administration fee to Ben Stevens?" Randy Babich asked Zuanich. Zuanich replied it would "take some convoluted accounting" but he was "confident the payments could be kept off the books." He then approached Babich and suggested that a public meeting might not be the place for more such questions. It was soon discovered that in the federal Congressional Record that exactly $500,000 was set aside for the Pacific Salmon Treaty by language that Ted Stevens wrote in the Omnibus rider that funded the $50 million buyback program and other pork. Knowing ahead of time about the fees arrangement, it is only fair to ask, "Could this bee a coincidence?" Or, is it the "convoluted accounting" design creating those administration fees?

Part of the reason SEAS hired Ben was said to been because of his success in getting the crab plan funded and his obvious access to his father and the Congress. But when knowledge of Stevens' porcine riders were first made public, the senior Senator claimed he didn't know his son was involved in lobbying for the seine appropriation, so if part of Ben's sales pitch was that he had access it was either bravado, or someone wasn't telling the truth.

But in spite of Ben Stevens only getting seiners an ineffectual 130-word bill seemingly designed to fail SEAS had another vote in December to continue the deal with Ben to get a grant in the next Congress.

If Oliver Holm was right that the crab buyout was held up until the Stevens's could secure PQS in crab for the processors, perhaps salmon seiners like cooperative leaders at UFA are about to get their wish. On February 25th, with Thorstenson's and UFA's approval, Ben Stevens filed SB113A, "an Act relating to entry into and management of Gulf of Alaska groundfish fisheries."

According to Holm, "If this bill is passed, it could grant broad powers to the Board of Fisheries to make quota allocations in State managed fisheries directly to processor controlled 'associations' very similar to 'pollock coops' or federal 'groundfish coops' proposed for federal Gulf of Alaska groundfish." Certainly if you imagined PQS were going to be allocated to Alaskan salmon processors you might expect the process to be kicked off with a similar move. Could SB113 apply to other fisheries? What about halibut?"

"Last fall, trawlers in the Kodiak region had an outrageous bycatch of halibut while targeting pacific cod," Holm said. "Doug Hoedel's boat was one of the worst offenders. Afterwards, when a ruckus was raised locally by halibut fishermen, the response of both Doug and Julie Bonney (of the Alaska Groundfish Data Bank) was that the trawlers "needed" 8,000 MT of halibut bycatch instead of the 2,000 MT allowed now. They have also been pursuing being allowed to retain halibut, at least initially, to give to food banks. Doug sits on the North Pacific [Fishery] Management Council, which allocates halibut bycatch. You can see that 8,000 MT is 17,600,000 lbs. that would come out of area 3A and 3B quota. The trawlers have opted for rationalization which includes processor coops and they would get a big boost in revenue from selling the halibut and the processors would gain a guaranteed cheap supply. I believe that it would be a big enough share of the resource to wreck the open competitive halibut market."

Couldn't happen? That's exactly what Thorstenson was telling salmon fishermen several years ago. And rest assured every single pound of product acquired by Stevens' favored group of processors under this scheme works against the competitive markets of every other fishery.

"Thorstenson and the UFA board have endorsed Stevens' bill despite there being practically no guidelines as to how the BOF or the Entry Commission would allocate those fishing rights," said Holm. "This whole thing is nuts for fishermen. An intelligent board doesn't just endorse an unspecified concept for politicians to pursue. You work out the specifics of what you want first while you still have control." Exactly!

The UFA's is an intelligent board and that's exactly what Thorstenson has done on this and many other issues—worked out the specifics with his Seattle Seven friends who have control, and apparently it's all legal. Hoedel's and the trawlers halibut bycatch is an illuminating recent example. While it may be a matter for discussion, "There is no violation to investigate." (and) we do not investigate conflict of interest matters," said one official within NOAA's Office of Law Enforcement. "Conflicts of interest are the responsibility of a 'designated official', defined in the Magnusson-Stevens Act as a person with expertise in Federal conflict-of-interest requirements who is designated by the Secretary, in consultation with the Council...the MS Act addresses conflicts of interest, but it does not make them a crime....The fish allocation process is always sticky because typically, someone gains and someone looses. Unfortunately, that isn't illegal either."

Which leaves one to wonder what is illegal? It's hard to believe no distinction is possible between personal conflicts of interest and deal making by those with conflicts. Before the Magnuson Act was hyphenated there was undoubtedly no idea conflicts on the Council would reach such an apparent level of influence. Sadly, as we have seen, the only control that exists now is that of a complicit Government and few big corporations' intent on reducing fishermen to the status of share-cropping field hands. It is a one-way street when NMFS plays along with processors to link cooperative losses to buyback gains, without demanding processors give up their bargaining powers when receiving Title XI financing.

"Any input from fishermen to the Alaska legislature against the changes in fishing rights ownership that SB 113 would permit would be very helpful," Holm concluded.

{approx. 2,000 words; inquiries for reprinting are welcomed.} RE: SB 113A—The rest of the $tory.

To whom it may concern:

I wrote an opinion piece that was just published in the April Fishermen's News. The piece (which I have attached) is about SB-113 and the Southeast salmon seiner's buyback efforts. In the course of trying to get the piece published I received a threatening phone call on my answering machine from Ben Stevens who obviously didn't want to see it in print. Following is a transcript of that call:

"Hi, this is Ben Stevens calling from Juneau. Hey, you make some pretty incriminating statements in this article of yours Victor—how I'm funneling money to my campaign war chest—that's pretty incriminating you know. I'm wondering if you've got documentation to back that up. Anyway, I'd be happy to talk to you about it Victor—about my relationship with Zuanich. Anytime. My number is 907-465-4993. I don't think we've ever met, Victor. You seem to know so much about me when we've never even met. Obviously you've never read Senate Bill 113 because processors aren't even mentioned in SB 113. You have to do your homework before you write incriminating articles like that. We'll have fun getting to know each other."

Apparently under pressure, Brian Benkmen, a South East Seiners' Association board member I had quoted in my draft also protested, frantically, and his information was clipped from the story. But you need to know what he said. Here are some of his comments as clipped from my piece.

"Hiring Ben Stevens was something I don't understand," Benkmen said. "It rubbed a lot of us wrong that we hired him; (but) he got the crab buyback program funded. He used that approach, 'I got this one to my credit, hire me, and I'll get dad to fund you guys too.' We've been paying him monthly since last June."

Asked how Ben was to be paid, Benkman added, "The idea was some convoluted plan to take money from the buyback's administration to pay the overhead to free up money from the other pocket to pay Ben. This was Rob and Bob's proposal (Zuanich and Thorstenson's). Bob was supposed to sign it, but I'm not sure there was a signed copy—that it wasn't just done on a handshake. I've never seen adequate minutes of the meeting to make it clear what happened. We've been trying to find out who signed it."

Alleged to currently be $5,000, Ben's monthly payments were said to double to $10,000, for five years, after a buyback plan is funded and approved. I spoke to several board members and all confirmed the agreement to hire Ben Stevens, and that he is being paid that amount. Several said they saw the contract—one saying it had space for SEAS president, Dan Castle's signature. Another suggested payment to Ben may have started last March and that up to $150,000 for administration costs may have been received by SEAS from another source last year.

"The way (the buyback) was being pursued by our lobbyist; there were a lot of hopes." Benkman added. "When they wrote it [the rider] they just did it quick and dirty...through a reference to the NMFS program, which would legitimize the way to do the buyback. We never wanted to be in the system, we wanted a system we could control...I don't know if they just didn't do their homework or what their thinking was, or lack of thinking. This thing's going nowhere because appropriating through NMFS won't work the way we had it structured. [SEAS] doesn't have a buyback plan right now. We are ready to sell our souls to the devil to get that buyback."

But in spite of Ben Stevens so far only getting seiners an ineffectual 130-word bill seemingly designed to fail, Benkman said, "We [SEAS] had another vote in December to continue the deal with Ben to get a grant in the next Congress."

In closing I'd like to say that despite the decption from proponents of the plan, SB 113A puts salmon fishermen under the same gun as the jig fishermen, and:

There needs to be an ethics investigation of Ben Stevens' (Ted Stevens too) involvement in this matter.

The Alaska newspapers are full of this stuff now with articles and letters in the Kodiak Daily Mirror, Anchorage Daily News, Juneau Empire, Sitka Sentinel, and no doubt others. You might find some of these letters interesting as they reveal who the players are and the depth of the deception they're involved in. Department heads, Council members, legislators--quite a cross section . The problem is understanding who's who and who's telling the truth. A safe rule of thumb is anyone defending the Stevens are liars and are in on or hope to benefit from the caper.

Thanks for giving this your consideration.

Sincerely,

On September 7, 2006, an article was published in the Seattle PI which was written by Joel Connelly entitled McGavick Digging a Bigger Hole for Himself. The article details contributions by VECO Corporation to McGavick's campaign. The article also highlights the relationship between United States Senator Ted Stevens and VECO Corporation and the FBI's investigation of corruption in the State of Alaska.

On October 9, 2006, an article appeared on marketwatch.com entitled Cornell Companies Enters into Merger Agreement with Veritas Capital. The article states that Cornell is being purchased by Veritas Capital for $518.6 million.

On October 3, 2006, an article appeared on ksrm.com entitled Chenault Responds to Receiving VECO Money. Chenault was quoted as saying, "Yeah, I take VECO money. Do I vote the way that they want me to vote? I can't tell you if I vote the way that they want me to vote. But I can tell you that I vote, not only in the way that is in the best interests of the state; but, also in the way that is in the best interest of the people in my district. The majority of the people in my district work in the oilfield related industries, or are heavily affected by that. So that's a big motivator."

[redacted] stated that the VECO computer system servers were located in the basement of the VECO Corporate Headquarters Building when this building was located on Northern Lights Road prior to the year 2000. In the year 2000, VECO moved to A Street, Anchorage, Alaska and the computer servers were located on the first floor, however, upper management of VECO moved to the Frontier Building, located at 36th and C Street in Anchorage, Alaska.

[redacted] Some documents were only kept 30 to 90 days, such as a memo regarding a social event, however, some documents were kept permanently on both a computer file and on a shelve in the VECO offices. Many records were archived at a warehouse located on 65th Avenue in Anchorage, Alaska. [redacted] knew that VECO maintained another facility to archive records, but [redacted] was unaware of the exact location for this second facility. [redacted] a company librarian to maintain documents, VECO never hired a librarian, rather VECO required a employee named [redacted] to generate VECO archiving policies that VECO employees were expected to follow. [redacted] was the VECO

[redacted] archiving facility VECO employees sent records to for storage.

[redacted] was not aware of any individual who received a salary from VECO but was not actually employed by VECO.

Regarding [redacted] recalled that [redacted] first arrived at VECO in [redacted] also knew that [redacted] was not cognizant of whether or not [redacted] received a salary from VECO, however, [redacted] did not have an office at VECO. [redacted] did not know if [redacted] any money, but [redacted] described [redacted] as being very, very generous. [redacted] did not know the salary amount earned by [redacted] at VECO. [redacted] said she was not aware of a law firm named Eide, Miller, and Pate paying [redacted] related that [redacted] thought of [redacted] although the actual [redacted] resided in Fairbanks, Alaska. During the time that [redacted] was employed at VECO, she was not aware of any payments VECO made to [redacted] although [redacted] claimed that VECO rented an apartment in Washington, D.C. [redacted]. When asked how she knew that [redacted] remarked that [redacted] never worked for VECO while [redacted] was employed at VECO, but [redacted] also mentioned that [redacted] According to [redacted] did not utilize a VECO vehicle.

[redacted] never worked directly for [redacted] and did not complete his expense accounts, therefore, [redacted] was not aware of [redacted] incurred expenses. [redacted] suggested that [redacted] would have expense information related to [redacted].

[redacted] adamantly declared that she has never contributed one dime to any political campaign. [redacted] said she was never even asked to attend political fund raisers by VECO management because they were aware she [redacted] wouldn't attend. [redacted] was not aware whether the salaries paid to VECO executives included money that was expected to be contributed to political candidates. [redacted] explained that VECO kept a record required by the Alaska Public Offices Commission (APOC) which contained the amount contributed to politicians by VECO employees. According to [redacted] would give [redacted] copies of checks or notes of the amount of cash contributed to politicians. These APOC records included details such as the total amount given to a candidate, the name of the candidate and the name of the contributor. According to law, this APOC form had to be filed within 48 hours of the contribution. [redacted] said these APOC forms were mailed or faxed. An APOC file was kept in three-ring binders and maintained in [redacted] office, although [redacted] was unsure where in [redacted] office the binders were kept. [redacted] recalled that [redacted] desk was stacked high with documents.

When asked if bonuses were paid to VECO employees in order to reimburse VECO employees for their political contributions, [redacted] responded that she did not know. [redacted] was knowledgeable about VECO sponsoring fund raisers for political candidates and she claimed that sponsoring political fund-raisers was one of [redacted] said that VECO paid for the expenses associated with sponsoring these political fund raisers. [redacted] stated she was never directed to pay for fund raising expenses.

b7C

[redacted] commented that no VECO employee ever informed her that VECO needed to get certain vehicles off its books because of concerns arising from an IRS audit.

[redacted] was asked if VECO ever provided financial benefits to politicians, aside from campaign contributions and fund raising events, and she [redacted] provided the following names of politicians and the financial benefit they each received from VECO:

Former Alaska State Representative [redacted]

Former Alaska State Legislator [redacted] explained that when she was [redacted]

Alaskan Legislator [redacted] Sometime during [redacted] in which [redacted] needed money, however, VECO had already provided [redacted] with the maximum amount that VECO could legally contribute toward [redacted] said [redacted] and VECO would provide the money (Which allegedly went toward the purchase of the equipment) directly to [redacted] to "get it done". [redacted] for VECO, may know who wrote the receipt for [redacted] was not sure how much money was given to [redacted] knew that giving this money to [redacted] was not the right thing to do.

[redacted] was not familiar with VECO or [redacted] any fee for a [redacted] participated in several years ago. [redacted] was also unaware of any VECO employee paying for similar expenses for anyone else.

[redacted] knew that [redacted] would take bundles of cash on his business trips, including trips to the Paris Air Show that [redacted] attended with Alaska Senator TED STEVENS. [redacted] recalled that this cash was divided into stacks and was held together by rubber bands and placed into a briefcase. [redacted] advised that [redacted] was responsible for accounting for VECO funds, and [redacted] suggested that [redacted] may be helpful to the FBI's investigation. [redacted] had no reason to suspect that [redacted] would attempt to conceal any cash spent by VECO.

[redacted] mentioned that [redacted] assumed the only reason Senator TED STEVENS associated with [redacted] According to [redacted] Senator TED STEVENS expected [redacted] to accompany the senator on trips and to "do things" for the senator. [redacted] said that [redacted] said as far as she knows, no VECO funds were used to pay for TED STEVENS' travel and no VECO funds were used to pay for TED STEVENS' hotel room during the frequent trips TED STEVENS took [redacted] said she [redacted] arrangements for a charter flight to change schedules to accommodate Senator TED STEVENS. [redacted] was not aware of [redacted] or VECO paying for the labor to build an addition on TED STEVENS' residence in Girdwood, Alaska.

Allen tries to get off list, but lobbyist tag sticks

9/11/2003 ADN

■ APOC: Fund-raising and contributions stay — he signed up

By SEAN COCKERHAM
Anchorage Daily News

Veco Corp. chief Bill Allen, one of the most influential figures in Alaska politics, has lost a bid to get off the state's lobbyist list and be free of special limits on political fund-raising and campaign giving.

The Alaska Public Offices Commission on Wednesday, after two hours of debate, postponed until its December meeting a decision on the request by Allen, who heads the Anchorage construction firm. In effect, that means Allen loses, because the limits on his campaign activities were set to expire in January anyway.

Allen

And Allen will be forced to ride the bench for the 2003 political money season, which is starting to heat up in advance of next year's elections. Democrats and Republicans alike have fund-raisers scheduled in the coming weeks.

Allen has been a well-known presence where Alaska politics is being shaped, from the halls of the state Capitol to Juneau's political watering holes to the recent fund-raiser in Dallas hosted by Vice President Dick Cheney for U.S. Sen. Lisa Murkowski, a fellow Republican.

He and other Veco executives also have been frequent and generous contributors to state political candidates, mostly Republicans. But, since 2002, Allen has been on the state's lobbyist registration list, which means he cannot raise funds for state political campaigns or contribute to legislative candidates from outside the boundaries of the West Anchorage House district where he lives.

Allen registered as a lobbyist in January, at the beginning of this year's legislative session. He told the state he would be lobbying on legislation concerning the construction of private prisons in Alaska and would be reimbursed by Veco through his wage of $156.25 an hour. Allen's firm has been involved with the push to get the Legislature to agree to the construction of the state's first private prison in Whittier.

But after this year's session ended, Allen said he had only ended up lobbying for three-and-a-quarter hours. Under rules in effect at the time, a person only qualified as a lobbyist if he or she spent more than four hours in a month engaged in "direct communication" to influence a state lawmaker or other public official.

Allen did not attend Wednesday's APOC hearing or return a call seeking comment. His lawyer, Mary Pate, said Allen never qualified as a lobbyist.

"If the state is going to infringe on someone's constitutional rights, there has to be a compelling reason to do so," she said.

The APOC staff argued that Allen became a lobbyist when he registered as one and that there is nothing in the law or regulations that allows someone to withdraw from the lobbyist list.

The five APOC commissioners were divided over the arguments.

"It's not a simple issue," Commissioner Larry Wood said.

The commissioners directed staff to draw up regulations to cover withdrawing from the lobby list. They will consider those regulations and Allen's case in December.

The state has no good way to police how many hours people spend lobbying and is basically left taking the lobbyist's word for it.

Only time spent in "direct communication" seeking to influence a legislator or other public official — meaning in face-to-face or telephone conversation, or e-mailing — counts as lobbying for purposes of the four-hour limit.

Allen will almost surely not be on the lobbyist list next year, because the Legislature moved the limit up to 40 hours in a month.

Veco mogul Bill Allen takes a licking but keeps on politicking

Mike Doogan
Daily News Columnist

(Published: May 15, 2002)

Juneau Bill Allen looked pretty used up as he left Gov. Tony Knowles' offices Saturday night. He had pushed a bill to give a huge tax break to a proposed natural gas pipeline to the House floor at astonishing speed. But it gave away too much, and during an all-day negotiating session around the governor's conference room table the bill sputtered and died.

Even in losing, Allen showed off his political muscle. Few other Alaskans could have moved the bill so far so fast, or forced negotiations between the governor and oil producers. In the 19 years since Allen decided to make his construction company, Veco, a major campaign contributor, he has become the 800-pound gorilla of legislative politics.

"Somebody says in these halls, 'Bill Allen wants this,' " Rep. Eric Croft said Tuesday, "and it gets done."

But not this session.

Allen's two big priorities were the pipeline bill and a bill to build a private prison in Whittier. His interest in the bills is clear: Veco would likely be a major contractor on the gas pipeline, and the company is a partner in the group that hopes to build the prison.

But the pipeline bill died and Tuesday evening the private prison bill was barely breathing. To add insult to injury, the Republican adjournment of the joint session on confirmations killed the appointment of Veco's chief financial officer, Roger Chan, to the state Board of Education. About the only thing the Legislature hasn't done this session is walk over to Allen's house and kick his dog.

To top it all off, the Alaska Public Offices Commission is conducting inquiries into whether Allen, Veco vice president Rick Smith and lawyer Dave Marquez should have registered as lobbyists, according to Tammy Kempton of the agency's Juneau office. Under Alaska law, employees of a company who lobby for more than four hours in any 30-day period are required to register.

To say Allen wasn't lobbying on the bill would be like saying the pope doesn't wear big hats.

"I don't think anybody escaped him," said Rep. Lisa Murkowski, a member of the Republican majority. "I think that he hit everybody in our party."

Murkowski, who said she met with Allen twice, described the meetings as cordial, even though she had serious questions about the bill.

"Bill is a gentleman and he treated me kindly and with great respect," she said. Everyone else I talked with echoed those sentiments.

"There was no arm-twisting," said Rep. Jim Whittaker, another Republican who didn't support the bill.

Allen also met with some House Democrats, but not all.

"I told people since he wasn't coming around, we must be part of the Veco-proof majority," quipped House Minority Leader Ethan Berkowitz.

If Allen violated the lobbying law, it won't be the first time he's gotten crosswise with the public offices commission. Veco's initial attempt to move into campaign financing was a payroll deduction plan that the commission ruled illegal. Allen has been fined several times by the commission, and once held the record for the largest fine ever paid.

But that hasn't stopped him. Veco's executives, employees and spouses are still one of the biggest sources of campaign contributions in legislative elections. For instance, Rep. Eldon Mulder, an ardent supporter of both the pipeline and prison bills, received $4,000 from them in 2000 and another $1,500 in 2001. They have also given money to Knowles, and Allen has been one of his key supporters.

In addition to giving money, Allen employs top lobbyists such as Joe Hayes, and reaches the public through the Voice of the Times. So there's every reason to expect him to bounce back from defeat.

Heck, the way things go at the end of the session, he may have done that by the time you read this.

Mike Doogan plans to write daily from the legislative session.

Legislators continue their 'dissing' ways

Top 10 ways in which legislators are "dissing" Alaskans:

10) By reneging on a pledge to focus on fiscal gap issues during the period March 15-31.

The Republican leadership talked Gov. Murkowski out of an ill-advised special session within the regular session, promising to give the same attention to fiscal issues that would have been achieved during a special session.

But as of March 31, nothing proposed by Murkowski's Conference of Alaskans had reached the floor in either chamber. And the only revenue bill moving out of a finance committee would raise only $43 million a year, against an eventual gap of $1 billion.

9) By giving top priority to a revenue bill that would take 6.25 percent of the annual income of a worker making $1,600 and .001 percent of the income of someone earning $100,000.

Saying this is "regressive" is like saying Osama bin Laden is "irritating."

Still to be explained: Why Alaska politicians are right to oppose a progressive income tax, and why the U.S. Congress and 40-some state legislatures are wrong to impose one.

8) By titling said regressive revenue measure "an education tax," given the constitutional prohibition against dedicated funds.

The strategy seems to be that you can get away with most anything if you can wrap it in education. That's why many bills to use Permanent Fund earnings specify that the money would go to schools. But without amending the constitution, as some of the Permanent Fund legislation proposes, there's no guarantee of increased spending on education.

7) By holding 7 a.m. hearings on fiscal issues with lengthy technical discussions that make C-SPAN look like MTV.

House Ways and Means Chair Mike Hawker often notes that he's a certified public accountant, and it's reflected in the soul of his proceedings. Instead of handing off the technical minutiae to a subcommittee and concentrating on the broad, philosophical issues of tax policy, Hawker is intent on enriching espresso and latte vendors whose customers are fighting to stay awake.

6) By refusing to let go of the Alaska Conference of Mayors resolution expressing "no confidence" in the Legislature to fix the fiscal gap.

Hawker, among others, seldom misses an opportunity to whine about the mayors' temerity to comment on the legislative process. Remarkably, he encouraged municipal league lobbyist Kevin Ritchie to tell the mayors that lawmakers in turn have lost confidence in them. This is the parliamentary equivalent of "Yo mama!"

How about that? Legislators don't have confidence in the mayors, who have shouldered more responsibilities as the result of state budget cuts and still have managed to hold things together — however tenuously — without the deficit spending that state officials have indulged in all but two years since 1990. Thus, insult is added to injury.

5) By proposing to override the decision by Anchorage voters to forgo a runoff election when there is a 45 percent plurality.

The Republican-controlled Senate passed this amendment by Sen. Ben Stevens in what was perceived as a slap at Democratic Mayor Mark Begich, who narrowly achieved the 45-percent threshold in the same election in which the new standard was approved.

Stevens points to low voter turnout as justification for making the change. But if that's the basis for declaring something illegitimate, we could greatly reduce the size of the Legislature.

4) By ignoring statewide election results on a natural gas pipeline, in which the concept of an all-Alaska project developed by a state agency won a greater percentage of the vote than most legislators and Gov. Murkowski.

The proposed appropriations for the Alaska Natural Gas Development Authority are not commensurate with the notion of taking it seriously. Legislators say Alaskans didn't understand what they were voting for.

But to be consistent, one would have to say that voters probably didn't expect Murkowski to veto the longevity bonus, propose taxes or angle for using Permanent Fund money for government. Yet he's still governor.

And the Alaska Natural Gas Development Authority initiative is still law.

3) By chewing out concerned citizens on both style and content grounds.

Sen. Scott Ogan did a fair imitation of Thor while wielding the gavel in his Resources Committee when opponents of coal bed methane exploration got a little unruly. Sen. Ralph Seekins questioned whether the frightened property owners were "disingenuous."

It's hard work doing the people's business when the people actually show up.

2) By describing "chit sheets" as an innocuous tool for greater efficiency in the legislative process.

House Rules Chair Norm Rokeberg expressed surprise during a legislative ethics hearing that anyone would be concerned about the circulation of a piece of paper on which lawmakers check off "yes" or "no" in regard to pending legislation. To say that such activity amounts to secret voting would be like, well, like saying that closed caucuses shut out the public.

1) By continuing to hold closed caucuses even after the widespread denunciation of the practice.

■ Bill McAllister's 2-year-old daughter is learning to count to 10, but he doesn't think she'll be able to count to even 11 and 21 on fiscal issues.

COAL BED METHANE: Ruedrich backed drilling, assuaged residents.

By RICHARD MAUER
Anchorage Daily News

At a public meeting at Big Lake on Sept. 9 of last year, several state and local officials told edgy residents that there was little the officials could do under the law to regulate the new coal bed methane industry that had suddenly arrived in the Matanuska-Susitna Borough.

Not Randy Ruedrich. One of three members of the state's Oil and Gas Conservation Commission, Ruedrich confidently assured the crowd that he and his agency had their interests at heart and would protect their drinking water and streams from contamination.

But even as he was making his pledge, he was quietly attempting to skew the results of a newspaper poll to favor development, and he had leaked a confidential memo written by a state lawyer to the lobbyist for the coal-bed methane developer, Evergreen Resources.

Ruedrich, appointed to the commission by Gov. Frank Murkowski on Feb. 19, 2003, was publicly named Monday in an ethics complaint brought by the Attorney General's office. Ruedrich, while acknowledging some of the facts in the state's case were correct, denied they constituted a violation of law. He resigned under pressure from his $118,000 job on Nov. 7.

Most of the allegations contend that Ruedrich, state chairman of the Republican Party, conducted partisan political business out of his state office. But one of the most serious charges, improper disclosure of confidential information, involves the document that Ruedrich forwarded to Anchorage attorney Kyle Parker, a lobbyist for Evergreen.

According to a copy of an e-mail seized from Ruedrich's work computer, Ruedrich and the two other commissioners received a six-page analysis of a Superior Court decision in a case brought by the environmental organization Greenpeace. The analysis was written by the commission's lawyer, assistant attorney general Rob Mintz, on Aug. 14, 2003.

In his e-mail, Mintz said his opinion was too long to include in the body of the message, so he was attaching it as a "confidential" document.

A week later, Ruedrich forwarded the document, calling it a "Mintzism," to Parker at his law office.

The e-mails were among hundreds of pages of documents provided to reporters by Ruedrich's lawyer when Ruedrich decided to waive his right to confidentiality. Mintz' analysis, however, is still considered confidential by the state and was not part of the record. At the demand of state attorneys, Ruedrich's lawyer blacked out some words in Ruedrich's message that could help identify the nature of the analysis.

In addition to the word "confidential" that Mintz used in the e-mail message, the analysis itself was marked in boldface, "Privileged and Confidential Attorney Client Communication," according to the state's complaint.

In an interview, Ruedrich admitted sending the document to Parker, but said it was a mistake.

"I never, ever noticed it was a confidential memo in any way, shape or form," he said.

Ruedrich, however, acknowledged that he is experienced in protecting secrets. "We have a lot of confidential material in the oil business," where he has worked since 1969, he said.

Parker said he doesn't remember Mintz' document. But at the time, he said, he was working with Ruedrich on drafting regulations governing coal bed methane development on behalf of Evergreen.

Mintz declined to comment Monday.

Melanie Duchin, Greenpeace's Alaska representative, said the analysis probably related to the group's appeal of drilling permits issued by the commission. The permits at issue were on the North Slope, she said, but the issues were directly applicable to coal bed methane, where operators might seek permits to drill near homes or schools. Greenpeace said the commission routinely issues permits without public notice or proper hearing, and it was trying to open up the process to the public.

"You get denied left and right," Duchin said. "The fact that this information can be passed to industry and the public can't get it, that's a smack in the face."

With the issue of coal bed methane roaring in the Valley last fall, the Frontiersman newspaper's Web site conducted an on-line poll seeking readers' opinions on this question: Do the benefits of drilling for coal bed methane in Mat-Su outweigh the risks?

On Sept. 15, three weeks after he leaked the Mintz document and six days after he gave assurances to the Big Lake crowd, Ruedrich sent an e-mail to state Republican Party headquarters. "Support coal bed methane development. Vote yes in this newspaper poll," Ruedrich wrote, providing the address for the Frontiersman Web site.

He then forwarded that e-mail, with his comments, to seven professional employees of the commission, directing them: "Voice your opinion on this timely topic."

Both e-mails became the subject of another charge in the ethics complaint. "You supervised these partially exempt employees and participated in preparing their performance evaluations," the charges said, casting his political activities in an incompatible role as a state supervisor.

And by sending the message to Republican Party members, he created a conflict of interest between his role as party official and as commissioner.

In the interview, Reudrich didn't deny sending the messages, but said that the employees could vote as they chose, not as he suggested. And there was nothing wrong with advocating development because, he said, it was safe.

CHARGES: GOP chairman accused of doing party business out of his public office.

By SEAN COCKERHAM and RICHARD MAUER
Anchorage Daily News

Six weeks after secretly accusing state Republican Party chairman Randy Ruedrich of violating state ethics laws for conducting party activities out of his state oil and gas commission office, the state's charges, his defense and hundreds of pages of supporting documents burst into public view Monday.

The 16-page complaint, dated Feb. 27 and released simultaneously by the attorney general's office in Juneau and by Ruedrich's attorney in Anchorage, accused Ruedrich of using his state office to do partisan work, such as plotting GOP political strategy and setting up party fund-raisers. He was also accused of leaking a sensitive state legal document to an oil lobbyist and of pressuring employees he supervised into expressing support for development of coal bed methane in the Mat-Su Borough.

The four-month investigation, confidential under state law, began Nov. 4, 2003, three days before Ruedrich resigned under pressure from his $118,000-a-year state job with the Alaska Oil and Gas Conservation Commission. The agency regulates drilling and is charged with prolonging the life of oil field production. Ruedrich, in the oil drilling business for more than 30 years, has been the volunteer chairman of the Alaska Republican Party since 2000.

In an interview with reporters in Anchorage, Ruedrich acknowledged that many of the facts in the complaint were true but argued the state interpreted them incorrectly. He denied engaging in partisan activity at the office, saying that the political work he did involved state policies and suggesting people for patronage jobs.

Ruedrich filed his formal response to the civil allegations Monday. Now the state will weigh it and decide whether to pursue the case further, which could mean a settlement with Ruedrich or a formal ethics hearing.

"We think that, if the activity is what it appears to be, then it is a violation of the ethics act," said Barbara Ritchie, the state lawyer in charge of the case.

The complaint includes three broad alleged violations of state ethics law, all focusing on charges that Ruedrich did extensive partisan business on government time when he was with the oil and gas commission. Ruedrich faces a maximum $5,000 fine for each violation. No criminal charges are likely to be filed, Ritchie said.

Ruedrich's attorney, Eric Sanders, said in response that there is no evidence that Ruedrich was engaging in partisan political activity on the job.

"We see no reason to proceed with the complaint," Sanders wrote.

Ruedrich did admit that he made a mistake in e-mailing a confidential attorney general's opinion to an oil company lobbyist. But his response to the state called it an "isolated mistake."

Ethics investigations are supposed to be secret, so for months the state would not acknowledge it was investigating Ruedrich, much less release the alleged evidence against him.

But recent events were bringing the matter to a head. The Daily News, KTUU-Channel 2 in Anchorage and The Associated Press sued the state to release Ruedrich's e-mail records under state public records laws.

Sarah Palin, the commission chairwoman who brought the allegations and then resigned, was chafing under restrictions that prevented her from speaking, leading to speculation over why she quit, and she was threatening to go public to clear the air.

Ruedrich finally waived his right to confidentiality, saying that if Alaskans knew the facts, they would realize how weak the case was.

"When I first heard the allegations being made, I had no idea what people were talking about," Ruedrich told reporters at his attorney's office in Anchorage. "Then when I looked at this," he said, referring to the complaint, "I could verify that my recollections of what had been done were correct, that there weren't hundreds of e-mails, there weren't tens of e-mails, and it was very much mischaracterized. So making the material public, I think, is the only way to resolve the issue, so people can see it's been hugely overstated, misrepresented and we'll respond to it to wrap it up to the best of our ability."

He also said he wanted to make it clear that the attorney general's office isn't ignoring the matter for political reasons. Ruedrich and Attorney General Gregg Renkes worked together on Republican Gov. Frank Murkowski's 2002 campaign.

Murkowski named Renkes attorney general and appointed Ruedrich, who has a background as a petroleum engineer, to be one of the three members of the Alaska Oil and Gas Conservation Commission.

Ritchie, who heads the attorney general's ethics division, said Renkes has not been involved in the investigation in order to avoid conflict-of-interest questions.

Ritchie said the state started the investigation against Ruedrich in November because of complaints against him from Palin.

The state complaint cites dozens of examples of potential ethics act violations. It said investigators found numerous e-mails on Ruedrich's state computer dealing with partisan activities, often involving polls. One featured questions meant to gauge the approval ratings of U.S. Sen. Lisa Murkowski and Gov. Murkowski.

The complaint also cites interviews with commission staff members, who said that Ruedrich pored over poll results during work hours and often dealt with Republican Party business on his cell phone while on the job.

"You were overheard discussing Republican Party business on these calls, mentioning people who should run for office and individuals you felt were 'real Republicans' and those you felt were Republican in name only. You were also heard to discuss party fund-raising activities and who should be invited to them," the complaint said.

State investigators subpoenaed and analyzed Ruedrich's cell phone records between February and September and found that during work hours he made 63 telephone calls to party vice chairwoman Paulette Simpson and 48 calls to Republican party staffer Dave Moreno.

Ruedrich responded that the cell phone calls were "infrequent and quite brief."

"I believe the cell phone records show that during the period I was a commissioner, I spent a very small fraction of my day on Republican Party activities," Ruedrich said in his response to the state's complaint.

He said he was involved in all the polls for public policy reasons, such as oil and gas taxation issues, and not for partisan politics.

"It is completely appropriate for a government official to engage in activities which relate to public policy, even if it benefits (or harms) some candidate or political party," Ruedrich's response said.

The state also pointed to a memo found on Ruedrich's state computer pondering whether former Murkowski aide Tara Sweeney should run for the state Senate and who the governor should appoint to replace outgoing state Sen. Robin Taylor, R-Wrangell, who left for a state job. Ruedrich responded that he started to draft the memo on his lunch hour to Murkowski's Chief of Staff Jim Clark, but stopped when he realized that it could be considered to be partisan.

When Gov. Murkowski appointed Ruedrich to the commission last Feburary, Ruedrich said he would do party business only on his own time and would stick to federal rather than state issues.

But documents released Monday show that Ruedrich e-mailed Clark — during the workday and using his state e-mail account — about a political poll that the two were working on together and to lobby for two "loyal" Republicans to be given state jobs.

Clark also sent an e-mail from his governor's office e-mail account to Ruedrich's state account regarding a request from national Republicans to get more rural Alaska contributions for President Bush's re-election bid. The Bush campaign wanted contributions from every "county" in America.

"Randy, how do you want to handle this?" Clark wrote in the e-mail, which he also sent to Ruedrich's private e-mail account.

Clark didn't return a phone call Monday. Murkowski spokesman John Manly said Clark is referring all questions to the attorney general's office. State lawyer Ritchie said no investigation is planned into whether Clark improperly used his state office for partisan work. A handful of e-mails wouldn't be enough to prove that, she said.

Clark was not the only Murkowski official to send a political e-mail to Ruedrich's e-mail account at the oil and gas conservation commission. Kevin Jardell, an assistant deputy commissioner at the Department of Administration, wanted Ruedrich to offer suggestions on a campaign finance bill that Jardell was working on.

Ruedrich also sent Jardell an e-mail asking him to call that evening about "mayor's races."

Jardell, who was Ruedrich's ethics supervisor, didn't return a call Monday.

THE ACCUSATIONS

A complaint, based on a preliminary investigation by the Department of Law, alleges that Alaska Republican Party chairman Randy Ruedrich violated state ethics laws in dozens of instances while he worked last year as a commissioner on the state Oil and Gas Conservation Commission. The allegations covered three legal areas:

- Misuse of official position
Ruedrich allegedly conducted partisan political activities while on his state job. The examples include receiving political e-mails from his home and from others on his state office computer, leaving political documents in the recycling box of his state office, and, while using his cell phone while on his state job, "discussing Republican Party business."
- Political activities incompatible with role as state employee and supervisor
Includes urging commission employees to "support coal bed methane development" by participating in an online poll by the Frontiersman newspaper.
- Improper disclosure of confidential information
Ruedrich forwarded a confidential legal memo from a state attorney to a private attorney who lobbies for Evergreen Resources on coal bed methane development in Alaska.

THE RESPONSE

In a point-by-point refutation, Ruedrich takes issue with most allegations. While acknowledging that many of the facts in the charges are correct, he says some of the state's interpretations of them were wrong. He said his on-the-job political activities were not partisan but were related to state policy development and in any case occupied a minuscule amount of work time, which he more than made up for. He says he wasn't aware the legal memo was confidential.

WHAT'S NEXT

Alaska Department of Law will determine if there's probable cause to continue the investigation. If so, the department can file formal accusations to be heard by a personnel board, with Ruedrich facing fines of up to $5,000 for each violation.

JIM LAVRAKAS / Anchorage Daily News

Ruedrich said Monday that he wanted to make the information public "so people can see it's been hugely overstated, misrepresented and we'll respond to it to wrap it up to the best of our ability."

Ruedrich's ethics response riles critics

By MIKE CHAMBERS, Associated Press Writer

(Published: April 24, 2004)

JUNEAU (AP) - Republican Party Chairman Randy Ruedrich's lengthy response to allegations that he did political work on the job as an appointed state oil and gas commissioner has enlivened critics and even a few allies.

Republicans embarrassed by the scandal are calling for him to step down from his party post, while Democrats are insisting a special prosecutor be brought in to investigate the ethical complaint against him.

Sen. Hollis French, D-Anchorage, is an attorney who has been the most outspoken about the need for the state Department of Law to hand over the case to an independent investigator.

French has pored over the thick stack of documents that state lawyers are using to make their case, and he's studied Ruedrich's near point-by-point denial.

He characterized the explanations as "at the very edge of believability."

"In court you call that the straight-face test. Can you say it to a judge with a straight face?" French said. "I don't think it passes the straight-face test."

Ruedrich resigned in November from the Alaska Oil and Gas Conservation Commission - an $118,000 per-year post to which he was appointed by Republican Gov. Frank Murkowski - amid allegations he violated the state Ethics Act.

Three days earlier, the state attorney general's office had started investigating allegations he was performing GOP party work on the job.

Reams of papers on apparently political subjects turned up along with e-mail and documents on his state computer. Telephone records showed him making calls to Republican party activists and a political polling service during work hours.

Former oil and gas commissioner Sarah Palin, who brought the allegations forward, also told investigators she saw Ruedrich using his office phone and printer for party business.

FBI - Stevens-15

But Ruedrich's explanation, contained in a 12-page letter to assistant attorney general Paul Lyle, rebutted nearly every one of the allegations.

Democratic lawmakers doubt that the issue will be fairly examined as long as the attorney general's office in a GOP administration is overseeing the case. Still, some have been impressed by the shear weight of the evidence gathered against Ruedrich - a stack of papers about three inches thick.

"They piled enough grains of sand to make a pretty good pile," said French. "You might dispute any one of these grains of sand, but when you look at them you see he's got a pile problem."

Investigators found numerous papers in a "recycle box" in Ruedrich's office with AOGCC matters printed on one side and GOP business printed on the other.

In one case, Ruedrich had given to Palin a draft of his ethics disclosure form, stating that he directs federal activities for the Republican Party. On the back of the sheet of paper was something entitled "The Wonderful World of Reapportionment," listing Anchorage legislative districts and party workers there.

In his response to investigators, Ruedrich dismissed the party information as old material from 2002.

"I frequently resupplied my office paper stack with paper that had been used on one side at my home," Ruedrich explained.

Numerous other e-mails sent from his home to his state computer were explained as either mistakes or information he did not look at until after work.

A message drafted to Murkowski's chief of staff, Jim Clark, said: "Tara should not run for the Senate" and also listed three Republicans to replace Wrangell state Sen. Robin Taylor, who gave up his seat to take a job with Murkowski.

Ruedrich had told lawmakers during confirmation hearings that his Republican Party duties would be limited to federal issues.

In his response to investigators, Ruedrich said he began the memo to Clark during his lunch hour but realized it was a partisan document and quit writing.

In e-mail backup tapes kept by the state, investigators found a Bush/Cheney campaign Web site that Ruedrich said was linked to an article about oil drilling in Iraq.

Investigators don't have any evidence that Ruedrich sent GOP-related e-mail from his work computer during work hours, said his lawyer, Eric Sanders.

"What is the significance of a big stack of documents that don't prove anything?" Sanders said.

And he dismissed the volume of paper, thick as an Anchorage phone book, as mostly "stupid polls."

"When you back out that stuff and say, 'How much time did it take Randy Ruedrich to do whatever it is they have in that evidentiary package?' He could have done everything there in less than four hours," Sanders said.

The investigation looked at records from Feb. 19, when Ruedrich began at the AGOCC, to his resignation on Nov. 7.

Ruedrich admitted to the most serious allegation - that he leaked a confidential attorney general's memo to an oil lobbyist - saying it was an isolated mistake.

He was working with lobbyist Kyle Parker on an oil and gas issue and did not see the words "confidential" in the attorney's e-mail nor within the document, Ruedrich said.

FBI - Stevens-16

"He picks and chooses his places to make a defense very carefully," French said.

Republicans are divided over whether Ruedrich should step down as party chairman, said former state Republican Party chairman Tuckerman Babcock, who is a central committee member.

"Randy has done a great deal of good for the party in the past," Babcock said.

Babcock said the ethics investigation could harm the party - U.S. Sen. Lisa Murkowski faces a challenge both in the GOP primary and from former Democratic Gov. Tony Knowles - but all the facts have yet to come out.

"I really just want to convey to Randy he should make the best call for the party," said Babcock. "If he really believes what has been brought up is insignificant, he should stay. If not, he should go."

GOP state Vice Chairwoman Paulette Simpson, whose e-mails to Ruedrich's state computer were a part of the investigation, said the ethics probe proves nothing and the party chairman should remain.

But Wev Shea, a Republican party activist and former U.S. attorney in Alaska, thinks differently.

"Randy crossed the line. He still doesn't realize it and apparently Tuckerman Babcock and Paulette Simpson don't realize it," Shea said.

"The most important thing is the integrity of our political system. These folks are putting individuals and the party above the integrity of our political system," Shea said.

Ruedrich's shady moves aren't those of a real Republican

On Jan. 16, 2002, the Alaska Legislature voted to override the veto of a bill that weakened campaign finance reforms. Shortly after the floor vote, an e-mail arrived in my in-box implying that my failure to be a team player meant I wasn't a real Republican. "Congratulate your Republican legislators for overriding the governor's veto on an important fund-raising bill. Every Republican voted for the override except Andrew Halcro who sided with the Democratic governor."

Two years later the sender of that e-mail finds himself accused of extensive ethics violations.

Republican Party chairman Randy Ruedrich faces allegations he illegally used state resources to conduct partisan politics while on state time. Ruedrich is accused of running party politics from his $118,000-a-year state position at the Alaska Oil & Gas Conservation Commission. Even more disturbing, he's accused of disclosing confidential commission information to a political donor and industry lobbyist. These allegations are based on hundreds of supporting documents found on his state computer and subpoenaed cell phone records. Fellow employees at the commission have also verified that Ruedrich openly conducted party business on state time.

In February of 2003, during Ruedrich's confirmation, Democrats questioned the governor's appointment and warned of impending conflicts. A year later, Ruedrich's apparent ethics meltdown has cast Rep. Ethan Berkowitz as a soothsayer. Starting in July, senior Murkowski administration officials began ignoring repeated complaints that ethics laws were being broken. During one meeting, Ruedrich was instructed to simply put his cell phone on mute during the business day.

Investigation documents show e-mails between Ruedrich and Murkowski chief of staff Jim Clark discussing polling strategies and fund-raising activities. In one e-mail they discuss polling questions regarding Democratic politicians. In another they discuss "Alaska Contributors to the Bush-Cheney" campaign. Another e-mail shows a Murkowski official asking for input to proposed campaign finance changes. The bill was OK'd by the governor and brazenly doubled campaign donations that special interests could give to political parties and candidates.

However, the most alarming allegation surrounds the release of highly confidential information regarding the most contentious development proposal in recent years — coal bed methane.

On Aug. 14, 2003, AOGCC commissioners received a legal analysis from assistant attorney general Bob Mintz marked in boldface type "Privileged and Confidential Attorney Client Communication." One week later, Ruedrich forwarded the confidential analysis to a coal bed methane industry lobbyist soliciting his desired changes prior to an upcoming hearing. "I need your best efforts ... as soon as possible," he pleaded.

Sadly, while many Mat-Su and Homer residents were fighting for their private property rights, the public official tasked with protecting those rights was secretly providing confidential information to an industry lobbyist while requesting policy advice. Ruedrich's response was he failed to notice the material was marked confidential. Curiously, he failed to explain why his e-mail message solicited input from an industry lobbyist, when his quasi-judicial responsibility as a commissioner required him to create policy independently and objectively.

The most intriguing violation came from phone conversations overheard by AOGCC staff during business hours. Reportedly, Ruedrich was heard lecturing about "real Republicans" and those he felt were "Republican in name only." However, judging from personal history, I'm not sure if he'd recognize a real Republican if one showed up in his in-box. According to party principles, real Republicans respect the law, respect personal property rights and endeavor for government based on honesty and integrity.

Ironically, if the alleged ethics violations are proven true, Randy Ruedrich — famous for defining real Republicans — will fail to meet the party's own definition of a real Republican.

UNSUNG GEMS ... Is the Randy Ruedrich story still hot? Ear hasn't seen the following excerpt from a May 1, 2003, Randy e-mail quoted anywhere. It's the one that describes former Assemblyman Bob Bell as deserving "his place astride the trash heap of Anchorage political history." The attorney general's complaint doesn't make clear if Randy actually wrote this. The "document" is attributed to Art Hackney.

Feeling Randy: The Ruedrich files offer hours of family fun

If the plight of Randy Ruedrich, chairman of the Republican Party of Alaska, has an upside, it's the release of reams of documents that offer a glimpse into the care and feeding of the state's most powerful party. Which Democrats' jobs were in jeopardy? Who gets appointed to replace departing lawmakers? It all crosses Ruedrich's desk.

In February, the state Attorney General's office filed a complaint against Ruedrich, accusing him of violating ethics laws by blending his Republican Party duties with his former job on the Alaska Oil and Gas Conservation Commission (AOGCC). Investigators pored over Ruedrich's email at work and sifted through his stack of recycled paper, where they found plenty of pages with commission business on one side and Republican Party business on the other. That's a problem because ethics rules forbid using state computers and facilities for partisan politics.

Ruedrich also stands accused of using AOGCC computers for Republican Party matters, sitting in on party conference calls while at work, leaking confidential information to a natural gas company, and encouraging state workers to vote in a newspaper poll supporting the controversial Mat-Valley coal bed methane development. (In the poll, which ran in The Frontiersman, Ruedrich wrote that state employees should "voice their opinion on this timely topic.")

Ruedrich denies all but one of the charges. He waived his right to keep the details of the investigation secret, saying his emails and other papers prove he did not intend to violate ethics rules.

Flashlight cracked open a Diet Coke and tackled the five pounds of documents produced by the state investigation. Several hours of reading poll results and private emails yielded a few interesting gems. Here are three examples:

• One page, titled "October Poll Analysis," interprets the results of a 2003 poll of registered voters. In the poll, potential voters are asked about issues ranging from Governor Murkowski's performance to cruise ship passenger taxes to whether they trust the Anchorage Daily News. The governor rated poorly with voters at the time.

The Republicans' analysis notes Murkowski's negative poll numbers and says, "Governor Davis had similar numbers recently." The Davis in question, of course, is California's Gray Davis, whom the state recalled in favor of Arnold Schwarzenegger.

"Trust and openness are our biggest problems," the poll analysis says. "The administration has not engaged Alaskans. The print and electronic media are silent on the good works. There is never a second story on anything good."

• Between September and November 2003, according to the state Attorney General, Ruedrich received an email from Republican Party vice chair Paulette Simpson at his personal account. He forwarded the email to his AOGCC account. It concerned a Tony Knowles fundraiser planned for the next week.

From: Paulette Simpson
Sent: Thursday, September 04, 2003 6:53 AM
To: randy ruedrich
Subject: [Fwd: FW: You are Invited to a Tony Knowles Fundraiser]

I am pretty sure that Nancy Barnes and David Rogers are still employed.

The Attorney General's complaint against Ruedrich notes that the Barnes and Rogers mentioned above were listed as organizers for the Knowles fundraiser, and that when Simpson wrote "still employed," investigators presumed she meant still employed by the state. Ruedrich has told the state that he forwarded the email to his work account before business hours, and "thereafter ignored it."

• Another document — saved on Ruedrich's work computer on July 3, 2003 — is a memo to Murkowski chief of staff Jim Clark. Among other things, it appears to address the question of who should step in for state Senator Robin Taylor. (Taylor was being appointed to a new job as special assistant to the Southeast transportation director.) Ruedrich has told the Attorney General's office that he began writing this memo on his lunch break at work, then stopped when he realized it could be viewed as partisan.

Jim

Tara should not run for the Senate — numbers are not there — She should consider all out effort if Reggie leaves house seat.

2) List for Taylor replacement based on my read and history of process:

Rep. Peggy Wilson
Rep. William Williams
Dep. Com. Ray Matiashowski

With Ray becoming new senator — this based on assumption that Bill wants to stay in house.

What is job description for 3rd floor energy guy

Flashlight wonders if the "Tara" mentioned in the memo is Tara Sweeney, whom Murkowski appointed in 2003 to be a special assistant on rural issues. We also wonder, what is the job description for the 3rd floor energy guy? (As for Taylor's job, the governor went in another direction than Ruedrich recommended in his email. Bert Stedman, of Sitka, got the job last November.)

If found at fault, Ruedrich faces up to a $5,000 fine for each of four ethics violations, said Barbara Ritchie of the Attorney General's office. Ruedrich couldn't be reached for comment; Paulette Simpson, the Republican Party vice chair, said he was traveling in China. Asked if he was traveling on business or vacationing, Simpson said, "neither."

A former general manager for Doyon Drilling, Ruedrich became active in the state Republican Party in the late 1990s. He became chairman of the Republican Party of Alaska in 2000. Democrats criticized his appointment to the Alaska Oil and Gas Conservation Commission, questioning whether he could keep his state job separate from his party responsibilities.

Ruedrich said he'd pursue politics on his own time, which he apparently clarified in a draft ethics disclosure form. On the back of the form, however, is a flier for a 2002 Anchorage Republican fundraising dinner. Ruedrich claims an environmental defense — he says he typically recycled old papers at work.

Sara Palin, who had served on the commission with Ruedrich, turned over the form to the state investigation. She called for Ruedrich to leave office last year. He resigned last November, days after the Attorney General began its investigation. A day before he quit, according to the Juneau Empire, Ruedrich sent a proposal to Jim Clark, Murkowski's chief of staff, calling for the governor to eliminate all three AOGCC commissioner posts, apparently to save the state hundreds of thousands of dollars a year.

The AOGCC helps regulate the oil industry, including to make sure oil wells are safe and keep pumping oil (that is, pumping cash into the state's coffers). The commission's offices in Anchorage are in a nondescript, single-story building on West 7th Avenue. It's cool inside, with the soothing mechanical hum of something that could be a fridge because it's still too cold for air conditioning. The state seal hangs on a wall, flanked by pictures of Governor Murkowski and his sidekick, Lieutenant Governor Loren Leman. Flashlight unsuccessfully tried to get a tour of Ruedrich's old office, which is now locked.

Randy Ruedrich said he'd pursue politics on his own time, which he apparently clarified in a draft ethics disclosure form. On the back of the form, however, is a flier for a 2002 Anchorage Republican fundraising dinner. Ruedrich claims an environmental defense — he says he typically recycled old papers at work.

The investigation of the state's GOP chair has Democrats salivating. Still, while Ruedrich admitted to breaching the ethics rules (by forwarding a confidential document to a natural gas company), Ruedrich's lawyer wrote that it was a one-time slipup. Documents obtained by investigators never show Ruedrich sending partisan emails from work, his lawyer writes.

Governor Murkowski recently told the Anchorage Daily News he's disappointed in Ruedrich's alleged breach of ethics rules. But some of Ruedrich's peers in the Republican Party are taking a wait-and-see approach. After all, Ruedrich is slated to serve as the Republican Party's chair until 2006.

"Obviously we're not passing judgement until the whole thing is over with," said Paulette Simpson of the Republicans. "That the Democrats and the press are doing it is certainly not surprising, considering how much they fear Randy."

Bedlam in Anchorage

As the workday closed Monday, employees of the Hilton Anchorage waited outside, guarding king- and double-size, shiny Serta mattresses, among hundreds of mattresses the downtown hotel is replacing this month.

Flashlight found ourselves outside the Hilton — Flashlight has yet to find ourselves inside a Hilton — after our fiancée called to encourage our hustling over there to pick up a "free" mattress for our empty love nest. No such luck, at least for Flashlight, but about 120 Hilton employees will take home the custom Hilton mattresses; a few went to charity, too.

Earlier this year, employees also got free, 20-inch television sets, if they wanted, said Kevin Batters, the hotel's general manager. The worker windfall comes as Hilton upgrades mattresses and linens and installs larger televisions, he said. With 605 rooms, that's a lot of free TVs and mattresses.

Flashlight has never been one to turn down free furniture, provided the furniture is free of spider egg sacs and crack vials. But Batters said it would have been chaos if he'd opened the giveaway to the public. So we left empty-handed, taking solace that, at least, we knew where our small bed at home has been, and who has been in it.

Ruedrich violated ethics law, state claims

■ LETTER: GOP chairman mixed politics with state job, attorney general says.

By SEAN COCKERHAM
Anchorage Daily News

JUNEAU — The Alaska attorney general's office has rejected Republican Party boss Randy Ruedrich's claims of innocence and found probable cause that he knowingly violated state ethics law by mixing political work with his state job last year.

In perhaps the most serious charge, the state rejected Ruedrich's downplaying as "an isolated mistake" his leaking of a confidential state legal document to a lobbyist for Evergreen Resources, a company pushing coal bed methane development in the Matanuska-Susitna area.

> "The disclosure of this document ... constitutes a serious breach of public trust and an egregious violation of the ethics act."
> — Letter from attorney general's office

"The disclosure of this document ... constitutes a serious breach of public trust and an egregious violation of the ethics act," said a letter the attorney general's office sent this week to Ruedrich's lawyer, Eric Sanders.

Gov. Frank Murkowski appointed Ruedrich, the chairman of his political party, last spring to an $118,000-a-year job with the Alaska Oil and Gas Conservation Commission. Ruedrich, who has a background in the petroleum industry, assured lawmakers that he wouldn't mix state work with his activities on behalf of the party. Amid complaints he was doing just that, the state launched an ethics investigation and Ruedrich resigned the job in November.

Ruedrich's leak to Evergreen has called into question the objectivity of the Alaska Oil and Gas Conservation Commission and could compromise the state's position in litigation and waste thousands of dollars in state legal fees in what may very well be a losing effort to prevent complete public disclosure of that document, said the letter, written by senior assistant attorney general Paul Lyle.

The attorney general's office also charges that Ruedrich illegally used his state office to do party work, like plot political strategy and plan fund-raisers.

Ruedrich didn't return messages left on his cell and home phones early Wednesday evening. Sanders, his lawyer, said he has been out of the office and has not received the state's letter declaring probable cause for the charges. The state sent the letter to him on Monday.

"I really have to look at the complaint before I can really comment on it," he said.

The letter from the attorney general's office said the evidence indicates that Ruedrich committed four broad violations of the state ethics act. Each violation carries a maximum penalty of $5,000, the state's lawyers said.

Ruedrich remains chair of the state Republican Party, an unpaid position, and has been doing consulting work in the oil business. Some Republicans have called on him to resign as party leader, while others have firmly defended him. His status is likely to be debated at the state Republican convention in Soldotna in two weeks.

The state's lawyers are now offering to meet with Ruedrich and Sanders to talk about a possible settlement of the case, including how much the penalties should be. If that doesn't work out, the matter would go to a formal ethics hearing.

Ruedrich has contested most of the allegations, saying his political activities on the job at the state oil and gas commission were minuscule and didn't violate the state's ethics law.

The state's letter said that Ruedrich's legal justifications for his actions are based on a "misinterpretation of the ethics act." The state also took issue with a lot of Ruedrich's explanations for his actions, saying that many of them were unbelievable.

For example, Ruedrich said his Republican Party activities took up little of his time at the state job. But the state's lawyers said that didn't add up.

Investigators found numerous party-related e-mail messages that Ruedrich sent from home to work. In his explanation, Ruedrich said he ignored them at the office. That brought this reply from the state:

"Mr. Ruedrich provides no explanation for why he would have purposely e-mailed partisan political material to his AOGCC e-mail account for the purpose of ignoring it."

In fact, the state's letter said, witnesses reported "Mr. Ruedrich frequently studied polls at the office and conducted party business both on the state telephone and his cellular telephone during the business day."

The state said it found evidence that Ruedrich made 100 calls to party vice chairwoman Paulette Simpson and 60 to party staffer Dave Moreno. Ruedrich has said that the calls were brief and generally took place when he was out of the office, like driving to lunch.

Regardless of Ruedrich's assertions that he spent little time on partisan activity, the law clearly says that he cannot spend any time at his state office doing Republican Party business, the letter said.

The attorney general's office has also objected to Ruedrich sending an e-mail about the Frontiersman newspaper's online poll on the merits of coal bed methane to employees of the oil and gas commission. Ruedrich's e-mail said, "Support coal bed methane development."

Ruedrich argued that the employees were qualified and could vote as they chose. The attorney general's office responded that it looked like Ruedrich was suggesting that his subordinates vote the way he wanted.

"We believe that the implication made by his e-mail is that the state employees should vote the same way Mr. Ruedrich urged members of his political party to vote," the letter said.

Private prison faces hurdles

WHITTIER: City would have to restart process and play by competitive bidding rules.

By TOM KIZZIA
Anchorage Daily News

(Published: May 10, 2004)

The city of Whittier would have to start over with its plan for a private prison and seek an industry partner according to the state's competitive bidding rules under a corrections bill that appears headed for passage in the state House.

The bill would require Whittier and its private partner to submit to a cost study to see whether a mega-prison could be run privately in the Prince William Sound port for less money than a new large prison could be run by the state in the Matanuska-Susitna Borough.

Despite these obstacles, the bill found support Sunday from the Whittier prison's chief supporter in the Legislature. Rep. Mike Hawker, R-Anchorage, said the measure is "a good bill" that moves the prison-building process forward.

The hurdles for the Whittier private prison were part of a bill that passed in the Senate last month. Cornell Cos., the Texas-based prison firm that has been Whittier's partner, said last week it opposed that bill and hoped to remove those obstacles in the House.

But the Senate bill was approved Sunday by the House Finance Committee with only minor changes and appears headed for a vote in the House before the Legislature ends this week.

The only committee member who seemed unhappy Sunday was Rep. Eric Croft, D-Anchorage, who tried unsuccessfully to have the private prison cut from the bill entirely. Croft said he thought the same private partners would prevail, despite efforts to redo the bidding process. He said the state's integrity had been compromised by years of effort to fund specific private prison proposals, in Anchorage, Delta Junction and Kenai before Whittier.

"What I see, over and over, is repeated sole-source, pre-arranged, heavy-money deals that go to specific contractors. ... It's never been a clean, competitive proposal," Croft told the committee. He invoked a controversy from the 1980s over sole-source contracting for state office space that nearly led to an impeachment of then-Gov. Bill Sheffield.

"We are going to see somebody indicted and probably imprisoned over this series of proposals," Croft said.

But most committee members supported the bill as a compromise. Sen. Lyda Green, R-Wasilla, who drafted the bill, testified it would address Croft's concerns by requiring Whittier to start over in seeking a prison partner.

"Nothing that's out there currently would be grandfathered," Green said.

The bill also would involve state corrections officials more closely in design and approval of a private prison if the plan ever moves forward.

The bill would make it almost impossible for a private prison plan to prevail if a state administration opposes the idea, said House Finance co-chairman John Harris, R-Valdez. Alaska has no private prison, and Gov. Frank Murkowski has said he prefers to build a state-run prison.

Increasing the state's bond load to build a new prison of 1,200 to 2,251 beds remains an issue as the state struggles with larger fiscal issues. The bill also authorized expanding or replacing several regional jails.

The big prison is being sought to bring home Alaska prisoners now housed in the Lower 48 at an annual cost of about $14 million. If the state builds all the prison space authorized in Green's bill, annual prison costs could grow by $27 million.

After Sunday's meeting, Hawker said he was troubled by the requirement that Whittier's contract be re-bid but called the bill a good one.

"It's a compromise bill that resolves the greatest concerns by the opponents of the Whittier proposal," he said. He said he was confident that the private-prison plan would win in a cost comparison.

The state's chief procurement officer, Vernon Jones, called on by the committee, said the current agreement between Whittier and Cornell was not reached through a process that would comply with state procurement policies. He did not elaborate.

A Cornell spokesman said last week the company is "not happy with the Senate bill."

Cornell vice president Paul Doucette said the contract had been bid fairly, "following procurement procedures appropriate for Whittier." He also insisted that a comparative cost study done for the governor's office earlier this year showed the private prison would cost less than a new state prison.

State officials have cast doubt on that comparative study, saying they had to rely on numbers provided by Cornell to gauge the private side. Doucette said the state had no reason to question what Cornell said it could accomplish.

"That's our commitment," he said.

Prison politics

Clever proposal unlikely to break private vs. public deadlock

State Sen. Lyda Green is trying an artful way to break the gridlock that has stymied state prison expansion for several years. Supporters of a large, for-profit, private prison and opponents of the idea, like Sen. Green, have battled to a draw -- so far.

She favors a plan to expand public prisons, including a new one in her borough. But that idea probably won't fly as long as backers of a private prison have hopes of getting their way. Sen. Green's latest proposal opens the state's door at least a crack to a private prison, though with considerable checks and balances.

Her approach -- calling for a detailed, apples-to-apples cost comparison of the public vs. private alternatives -- is a responsible attempt at compromise. But it's unlikely to mollify Cornell Cos., the private prison business, and its political supporters. Cornell has a deal wired with the city of Whittier that's worth upwards of $1 billion and it wants the Legislature's OK. "Maybe" is not the answer Cornell wants.

Both sides in the prison debate agree Alaska should bring home the 700 or so inmates now housed in Arizona. Stiff sentencing rules continue to send plenty of new prisoners into Alaska's correctional system, so there is steady demand for new space even without bringing back the Arizona inmates.

Supporters of building a large for-profit prison say it is a cheaper way for Alaska to add prison space. For-profit prisons are supposedly more efficient than ones built by the state and staffed by government employees.

That may well be true. But the harsh fact of economic life is that you get what you pay for. When comparing prices, you have to compare what you are getting. For-profit prisons may be cheaper because the state is buying less; but to make proper cost comparisons it's critical to compare equivalent facilities and standards.

There's a risk of getting a prison built to less secure or less appropriate standards, and of getting prison staff with less training. With a private operator the profit motive and the responsibility to shareholders could compete with the mission -- the state's constitutional duty to protect the public and rehabilitate prisoners. A company may have a commitment to excellent service, but any time the firm did something not specifically required in its contract, it would risk complaints from shareholders about unnecessary expenses and reduced profits. That means the contract would have to be air-tight in defense of state standards.

Sen. Green recognizes that for-profit prisons may offer something very different from public prisons. Her proposal would require the for-profit prison to meet state design standards. Guards in a for-profit prison would have to meet state training criteria. Those two requirements level the playing field when comparing costs. Not coincidentally, such a comparison could make any cost savings from a for-profit prison shrink or disappear. A study along those lines would be illuminating.

194A-AN-13620-M-14 194A-AN-13620-94

Sen. Green's idea probably won't shift the battle lines much. It's too bad there hasn't been a thorough public airing of corrections policy and competing proposals this legislative session to sort out these issues. With less than two weeks of work left, the Legislature is likely to adjourn, again, without a plan to expand prisons.

Maybe that's just as well, at least for now. The status quo is inadequate but still manageable -- and better than taking a 25-year, $1 billion gamble with such a fundamental public safety function.

BOTTOM LINE: Compare costs and standards carefully before taking a $1 billion gamble on a big private prison.

Play ball

Alaskans seem to be warming to the idea of a fiscal fix. But that's not the same as cozy up, and nobody's volunteering to take the first hit. So the Legislature has to make like a baseball manager and fill out the lineup. How about this for a batting order:

1. Alcohol tax: Leadoff hitter. The industry got dinged for a tax increase in 2002 and tried to take out then-state Rep. Lisa Murkowski with a spikes-high slide. Lisa's gone on to The Show. CHARR can live with the tax.

2. Tobacco tax: Capable two-hole hitter. Fans are less interested in the runs this will produce than its ability to leave more Alaskans with lungs enough to run at all. Could use some more speed.

3. Income tax: A modest, steady, progressive force at the plate. Hits for average and power. Keeps Alaskans' heads in the game.

4. Permanent Fund earnings: Cleanup hitter, Triple Crown threat. When healthy, can carry the club through rough stretches and still have plenty to give in October.

5. Oil industry taxes: The 5-hitter has to produce more, or income taxes and Permanent Fund earnings bear too much of the burden. All kinds of power, but too often keeps the bat on its shoulder.

6. Cruise ship, tourism taxes: Another hitter that's fallen short of its potential but could blossom as an everyday player.

7. Motor fuels tax: This tax is due, as the saying goes.

8. Reasonable user fees: Classic utility player, can hit leadoff if necessary. Won't go yard like 3-4-5 hitters, but hits to all fields.

9. Spending cuts: Starting pitcher has kept us in the game, and he may have an inning or two left. But he's got to have some run support.

RUEDRICH: Investigation into ethics turned up unusual polling-marketing campaign.

By RICHARD MAUER
Anchorage Daily News

Last October, just days before the municipal election, phones started ringing at the 10,206 households of Juneau and Douglas. At the dialing end of the call was a computer owned by a high-tech telemarketing company from Herndon, Va. A Juneau resident answering the other end of the line heard a voice say, "This is Election Research with a 45-second political survey."

If residents stuck with the call and spoke "yes" or "no" in a voice clear enough for the computer to understand, they learned that three local candidates had paid for the "survey."

What they weren't told is that this was no ordinary public opinion poll, where individual responses are pooled for statistical purposes and no single person's private thoughts recorded in a way that could later identify them.

As the computer gathered the answers, it stored each one individually, making it possible to retrieve them later by phone number, household name or address for other purposes. These calls and thousands of others were also placed in the Matanuska-Susitna Borough that week.

Justin Stiefel is the campaign manager for U.S. Sen. Lisa Murkowski.

Though Alaska's local elections are officially nonpartisan, the mass phoning was organized by Republican leaders — state party boss Randy Ruedrich, vice chair Paulette Simpson of Douglas and Justin Stiefel, then chief of staff for U.S. Sen. Lisa Murkowski and now her campaign manager.

Their involvement only came to light as a result of the state ethics investigation of Ruedrich, which uncovered evidence of political activity he conducted out of the state office he occupied until his resignation in November. With dozens of party-related e-mail messages and documents found in his office and made public, the investigation has had the side effect of revealing the behind-the-scenes activities of one of Alaska's most successful political operatives.

The polling-marketing campaign is one of the bases for civil charges that Ruedrich used his state office in the Alaska Oil & Gas Conservation Commission for partisan activity. Last week, the state rejected Ruedrich's formal denial of wrongdoing and declared there was probable cause that he knowingly violated the Executive Ethics Act. The state is awaiting a decision by Ruedrich about whether he will fight the charges or seek to settle them. He stands accused of four separate violations, each subject to a $5,000 fine.

Among the evidence are a string of e-mails between Ruedrich's home and work computers and Stiefel, Simpson and officials from the Herndon, Va., telemarketing company, ccAdvertising. The company specializes in automated telephone surveys and marketing and can place tens of thousands of calls an hour, with the capability of varying the message midway through a call depending on the responses at the household.

The president of ccAdvertising, Gabriel Joseph III, declined to comment.

"It is our company policy to not respond to any press or press related inquiries," he wrote in an e-mail.

STIEFEL DENIES CONNECTIONS

Stiefel denied he connected the Juneau candidates with ccAdvertising. He also denied negotiating a price for the service.

"You didn't arrange with Gabriel to pull together multiple races for 10 cents a call?" Stiefel was asked in a telephone interview.

"Randy did. Not me," Stiefel replied.

But the e-mails start with a message from a personal Hotmail account maintained by Stiefel to Ruedrich's home e-mail account.

"I use a Hotmail account from my computer at home," Stiefel explained in an interview.

The time stamp on the message shows it was sent at 5:08 p.m. Washington, D.C., time — 1:08 p.m. in Alaska — on Monday, Sept. 29, eight days before Alaska's municipal elections. Stiefel said he had taken Monday afternoon off to accompany his wife to the doctor's.

In the message to Ruedrich, Stiefel reports having spoken with Joseph of ccAdvertising and passes along Joseph's cell phone number.

"I told him you have three mayors races next week — Fairbanks, Juneau and Mat-Su. He said he would wrap all 3 together for one price of 10 cents per targeted household."

In a message two days later to four recipients — Ruedrich, Stiefel, Simpson and former Anchorage Assemblyman Larry Baker — Joseph also mentioned how the price was set.

"Per my commitment to Justin Stiefel of Senator Lisa Murkowski's office, we will perform this service for you at our $0.10 per household rate," Joseph said. According to Stiefel, that rate is usually reserved for a campaign with 50,000 or more calls.

In his e-mail to Ruedrich, Stiefel also suggested the service could have additional benefits for Republicans.

"Also, don't forget to ask about comparing his computer list to the state voter list to purge the bad voters and addresses for GOP party purposes," Stiefel wrote. "Finally, you should ask him about their ability to identify potential donors from their phone calls and how that might help the party."

Told that his e-mail to Ruedrich had been made public, Stiefel said his only reason for trying to get ccAdvertising involved was to test whether its dialing and voice system would work in Alaska. He thought he might employ it on behalf of Sen. Murkowski's election in November, he said, but only if it could do the job.

"I just wanted to see if the technology would work in Alaska," Stiefel said. "So I told Randy, 'here's some technology.'

"What do I care who the mayor of Juneau is?" Stiefel said.

BAKER HAD TESTED TECHNOLOGY

But Baker, a prominent Republican and the former owner of the Burger King franchise here, said he had already told Stiefel he was pleased with the way the system worked in Alaska.

Baker learned of ccAdvertising several years ago, when he was serving on Burger King's political action committee and was told by someone at the White House about a related company that Joseph ran, FreeEats. Joseph had been surveying and marketing for McDonalds and wanted Burger King's business too, Baker said.

Baker met Joseph in Washington. Baker told Joseph he would have to demonstrate how his system worked before anyone at Burger King's corporate office would seriously consider it.

FBI - Stevens-32

So about 18 months ago, Baker said, Joseph's computer started dialing 104,000 households in Alaska to determine their burger and fry preferences. Baker's wife received one of the calls and asked her husband if he was behind it.

Larry Baker

As the two-minute calls were placed, Baker connected to ccAdvertising over the Internet and watched as results were posted and updated.

"I had my own internal election," Baker said.

About 20,000 to 25,000 households participated, he said, much more than 20 times the number that would be polled in a typical random-sample survey.

Had it been a real marketing campaign instead of a demonstration, Baker said, he could have gotten the names and addresses of the households that reported eating lots of burgers at McDonalds and enticed them to Burger King with free coupons.

Telling Joseph he was impressed with the results, Baker said that Joseph mentioned he was interested in breaking into Alaska politics as well.

"He had done some local races in Virginia," Baker said, and had been involved on the Republican side in the expensive, heated 2002 Senate race in South Dakota, which Democrat Tim Johnson won by 524 votes.

"He said we're doing work there, we've called every cow two or three times," Baker said.

Baker agreed to set up Joseph with the Alaska delegation.

"At that point, he contacted the Murkowski folks," Baker said. "That's how it all transpired."

GET-OUT-THE-VOTE CAMPAIGN

In his e-mail of Tuesday, Sept. 30, 2003, to Ruedrich, Stiefel, Simpson and Baker, Joseph noted that at that late date — elections were a week away — there weren't many options.

He proposed a "smart" get-out-the-vote campaign — GOTV for short — on behalf of the three Juneau candidates. The message landed on Ruedrich's state computer at 7:57 the next morning when he forwarded it from home to work.

Joseph said that if a respondent voiced an intent to vote and identified a choice of candidate, the computer would deliver a custom message.

"If they support our candidate, the candidate comes on with a 20-second GOTV thanking them for their vote and asking them to get their friends and family to vote as well," Joseph wrote. Undecided voters would receive a "knees and plead" message.

"If they support the opponent we deliver a voter suppression message," Joseph said.

Reached at his office, Joseph declined to explain what he meant by a "voter suppression message."

In any event, the late date and complications with Alaska's campaign finance reporting laws required the effort to be simplified. On Oct. 2, Simpson e-mailed a copy of a draft script and her comments to Ruedrich at his state office in which she noted that a recorded endorsement of one candidate by another could be viewed as a campaign contribution.

Instead, the 15 questions asked about support for local issues like a tobacco tax and a road to Juneau, and about which candidate the respondent favored. The calls were placed on behalf of mayoral candidate Dick Knapp and assembly candidates David Stone and Dale Anderson. The three referred questions from the Daily News to Simpson, who said she organized the campaign as a citizen activist, not as vice chair of the state Republican Party.

As a road supporter, Simpson said, she was interested in the poll results, which she received almost instantly. She also received a spreadsheet file listing the results of every call, but says she doesn't remember what happened to it. The candidates spent the weekend before the election working the phones themselves, trying to get their supporters to the polls, she said. She didn't think they used the list generated by ccAdvertising.

BOTELHO SUSPICIOUS

Juneau Mayor Bruce Botelho, attorney general in the Democratic administration of Tony Knowles, said he has always been suspicious of those last-minute calls. Based on information he received from supporters, there seemed to be a pattern: people who answered a poll by saying they supported him and also a road later received a follow-up call from a live person who reminded the voter that Botelho opposed a road out of Juneau while Knapp favored one.

Bruce Botelho

Botelho won the election anyway.

The three candidates each paid one-third the cost of the $1,020.60 message. Though campaign finance laws required them to disclose the address of the company, none did, listing it only as "ccAdvertising," or, in the case of Stone, just "cc." Knapp and Anderson described the purpose of the expenditure as "ad" or "advertising," while Stone said it was for "polling."

CALLS GO TO MAT-SU

In the Mat-Su Borough, ccAdvertising also made calls on behalf of borough mayor candidate Charlie Fannon. No script showed up as evidence, and Fannon said he didn't have one but recalls being upset by the text. Teachers called him to complain that the wording of a question was inaccurate and might hurt support for a school bond. Fannon agreed.

"I called Randy Ruedrich on that, and he said he would get it changed," Fannon said. But with the Virginia computer capable of calling the 20,000 numbers in Mat-Su in an hour, it's doubtful he was successful.

Fannon said that was the last he heard from the poll.

"I got no data back. I was curious what, if anything, they got. I'm not a Republican insider — I never got any feedback," he said.

Unlike the Juneau candidates, the state Republican Party paid the $1,961.80 bill from ccAdvertising on Oct. 14, 2003, correctly locating it in Herndon, Va., and describing the purpose as "GOTV effort" without saying on whose behalf the effort was made. Separately, Fannon reported a contribution from the Republican Party for that amount on Oct. 21, disclosing that the party had paid ccAdvertising on his behalf, but not listing the purpose.

Ruedrich said the ccAdvertising invoice was made out to Fannon, who should have paid for it directly.

"Under circumstances that were unclear when I saw the bill, it was paid for by the party, and I still don't understand it," Ruedrich said.

He said the party would have no interest in the survey data.

While the price per call negotiated by Stiefel also included Fairbanks, the two Republicans who faced each other for mayor there said the service wasn't used.

Stiefel said the feedback he heard from the local candidates "was that it worked very well, and that's why we decided to use it."

In April, ccAdvertising placed about 36,000 calls around Alaska as part of Murkowski's campaign for Senate, Stiefel said. They didn't reach the 50,000 break point and had to pay 15 cents a call.

"I hope it works better for Senator Murkowski than it did for me," said Fannon, who lost the election by five votes.

The ccAdvertising campaign figured into one of the ethics charges brought by the state, accusing him of conducting partisan activity out of his office. In his response to the state, Ruedrich denied the accusation.

"These materials involve nonpartisan activity," Ruedrich said, basing his assertions on the fact that the local candidates didn't run on a party ticket.

But the state flatly rejected that claim, citing the definition of "partisan political purposes" in the Executive Ethics Act: "having the intent to differentially benefit or harm a candidate or potential candidate for elective office; or political party or group..."

Told that his e-mail to Ruedrich had been made public, Stiefel said his only reason for trying to get ccAdvertising involved was to test whether its dialing and voice system would work in Alaska.

Ruedrich affair

GOP chair embarrasses his party

Investigators at the state attorney general's office have acknowledged the obvious in the Randy Ruedrich ethics case. They found probable cause the former Alaska Oil and Gas Conservation commissioner had violated the executive ethics law. It wasn't a close call. E-mail and cell phone records show that Mr. Ruedrich, then and now the chairman of the Alaska Republican Party, routinely conducted party business during the workday from his $118,000-a-year state job.

Ruedrich

Mr. Ruedrich's violations were significant enough that it's fair to ask whether criminal charges are warranted. For every hour of state time he spent on party business, he collected $57 in salary. If he had taken that amount out of a state cash register and given it to the party, he would be guilty of theft. At some point, the work time he spent on Republican Party affairs ceases to be a mere ethics question.

The Alaska Republican Party cannot avoid the stain from Mr. Ruedrich's misconduct. For those Republicans — or anyone else — on the lookout for waste and fraud in government, he was the perfect two-fer.

The party directly benefited from what he did. In effect, Alaskans subsidized the Republican Party by paying Mr. Ruedrich's salary while he was doing partisan work.

Somehow the party should make amends to Alaskans. The simplest, most effective way is to remove Mr. Ruedrich as party chairman. It would be a way for the Republican Party to say: "We recognize the mistake our chairman made. He acted on our behalf. We accept our share of responsibility."

For anyone on the lookout for waste and fraud in government, Mr. Ruedrich was the perfect two-fer.

Some may be reluctant to force Mr. Ruedrich out. He has been an effective leader. He has helped cement the GOP's ascendance in Alaska politics with bare-knuckles partisanship and assiduous cultivation of moneyed interests. But the party will pay a political price for holding onto a leader who has repeatedly and systematically flouted state ethics law.

There is substantial evidence that during his time as a state official, Mr. Ruedrich was both a liar and a cheat. Since leaving office, he seems to have stopped cheating. The longer he stays as party chairman, however, the stronger the backlash the party invites from Alaska voters in November.

Not only him

Others did party work on the job

Mr. Ruedrich wasn't the only Murkowski staffer that e-mails show did partisan business while on a state job.

Both the governor's liaison in Washington, D.C., John Katz, and his Juneau chief of staff, Jim Clark, spent at least some time responding to an e-mail asking for Republican fund-raising help in rural Alaska. Mr. Clark also received e-mails about party matters such as polls from Mr. Ruedrich's state office during the workday.

Earlier in the Ruedrich case, chief assistant attorney general Barbara Ritchie said that a handful of e-mails aren't enough partisan activity to justify an ethics charge.

Perhaps that's true. Based on evidence so far, it appears the two's transgressions were nowhere near as serious or widespread as Mr. Ruedrich's. Perhaps no more than a reminder of the rules is in order for Mr. Clark and Mr. Katz.

But no one has actually investigated their activities. Somehow the attorney general's office was able to conclude their offenses were minimal without actually going to the trouble of investigating. You could get a more thorough investigation by assigning the case to Inspector Clouseau.

Accountable

Buck stops at the governor's desk

The place where the buck stops in the Ruedrich affair is the third floor of the state Capitol, on Gov. Frank Murkowski's desk.

Mr. Ruedrich's mixing of party and public business at the AOGCC was virtually guaranteed. Many critics warned from the start that appointing him would cause an inherent conflict of interest. Putting one of the party's chief fund-raisers and cheerleaders onto the AOGCC, where he would regulate companies that might give money to the party, was just asking for trouble. Gov. Murkowski appointed him anyway. The governor resisted calls to make Mr. Ruedrich choose one job or the other, the commission or the party post.

Mr. Ruedrich faces serious consequences for his misuse of office. He resigned from his state post. He faces ethics charges that could produce $20,000 in fines. He may have to resign his party post. All that is appropriate for him.

What about the governor who put him there and kept him there even after actual reports of abuse emerged? Did the governor set an ethical standard that was inexplicably ignored by a single rogue oil and gas commissioner?

Well, no. The governor's chief of staff and the director of his Washington office also apparently felt free to engage in prohibited conduct. Whatever the governor's ethical standards, he seems to have kept them to himself.

Or, more troubling, perhaps he didn't.

■ BOTTOM LINE: A reckoning is in order all the way to the governor's desk in the Ruedrich affair.

Ruedrich asks for settlement of his pending ethics case

■ NO DETAILS: Department of Law found probable cause he violated act.

By CATHY BROWN
The Associated Press

JUNEAU — Alaska Republican Party chairman Randy Ruedrich is seeking to settle a case in which the state found probable cause that he violated the state Ethics Act.

The Alaska Department of Law said earlier this month that it had probable cause to believe Ruedrich performed Republican Party work on the job as an appointed state oil and gas commissioner.

The department gave Ruedrich and his attorney, Eric Sanders, until last Monday to decide whether they wanted to discuss a settlement.

"They disagree with the state about the charges, but they have asked to meet with us to discuss a resolution," Paul Lyle, an assistant attorney general, said Tuesday.

Neither Ruedrich nor his attorney returned phone calls seeking comment Tuesday.

Ruedrich resigned in November from the Alaska Oil and Gas Conservation Commission — a $118,000-per-year post to which he was appointed in February 2003 by Republican Gov. Frank Murkowski.

In a May 3 letter, Lyle cited four apparent violations by Ruedrich, who took over as party chairman, an unpaid position, in June 2000.

Each violation carries a maximum $5,000 penalty.

Allegations include using state facilities, equipment and resources for partisan political activity, as well as engaging in outside volunteer work for the Republican Party in a manner that was inconsistent with his state job.

Lyle also wrote that there was probable cause to believe Ruedrich knowingly forwarded a confidential document to an attorney for Evergreen Resources.

Ruedrich has acknowledged he erred when he sent an attorney general's opinion to lawyer Kyle Parker, who represented Evergreen on matters pertaining to methane gas development in the Matanuska-Susitna Borough. But Ruedrich said he didn't realize until after he sent the memo that it had been marked confidential.

Lyle said settlements of Ethics Act cases normally involve a written agreement signed by the subject of a complaint and the attorney general's office.

Ruedrich

"It would set out what the resolution of the case is, and that would be a public document," Lyle said.

A payment of some financial penalty could be part of the mix, he said.

"But in terms of what the precise terms would be, or what the state would be willing to accept, I can't disclose that at this time," Lyle said. "That really has to be something that is done in the negotiation process with the subject of the complaint."

Ruedrich wins GOP endorsement

CONVENTION: Party chairman gets backing despite ethics allegations.

By SEAN COCKERHAM
Anchorage Daily News

SOLDOTNA — Alaska Republican Party boss Randy Ruedrich, the target of state ethics allegations, won the endorsement of party leaders at the party's state convention here on Friday.

The announcement of support from the party's Central Committee, which has about 80 members, came in the opening hours of the convention. It could chill calls for Ruedrich's ouster as chairman over complaints that he did Republican Party work from his office in a well-paid state job last year.

"It sounds like the party as a whole is willing to move on," said Dan Sullivan, a convention delegate and member of the Anchorage Assembly.

But at least some of the roughly 400 convention delegates don't want the issue to drop, and the matter could come up again before the convention ends this afternoon.

ALASKA ELECTION 2004

The focus of the convention so far, however, has been on the strengths of the political party that dominates Alaska politics. The mood was confident, with delegates joking to each other about the comparative weakness of the Alaska Democratic Party and bumper stickers on sale with slogans such as "Republican women ... like men."

Hot sellers also included a $10 charm bracelet engraved with GEORGE W. BUSH.

The Republicans "have tasted winning and I think they like it," said the party's vice chair, Paulette Simpson.

Which is not to say they all agree. Republican delegates are clearly split over this fall's U.S. Senate race. Mike Miller, touting himself as the more conservative candidate, is challenging Republican incumbent Lisa Murkowski. A major theme at the convention is the danger that bitter infighting could help Democratic candidate Tony Knowles win the U.S. Senate seat.

Both Miller and Murkowski will make speeches at the convention; they have booths set up to hawk their campaign paraphernalia. Knowles, a former governor, will be speaking today at the Democratic Party Convention being held in Anchorage.

The Republican convention, at the Soldotna Sports Center, drew a mixed lot. Some called themselves conservatives, religious or otherwise, and others proudly proclaimed their label to be moderate.

Even the "Pilgrim" family, nationally known for their battles with the National Park Service over bulldozing a road into their mining claim in Wrangell-St. Elias National Park, came to play bluegrass music and sample the politics.

The 17-member family showed up in an old van inscribed with "Pilgrim Family Minstrels, Tour Van 2004." On the back of the van they had written "Honk if You Love Jesus, We do!"

A couple of the family members, who stood out at the convention in their homespun clothes, said they went to a Republican district convention in Delta Junction and got named as delegates. Papa Pilgrim, or Robert Hale, the family patriarch, said he read the party platform on Thursday. A lot of it is a "Godly approach," he declared with approval.

Today, the convention delegates will debate resolutions on where the party stands on issues such as abortion and guns and education and will vote on whom to send to the national convention.

Ruedrich, the party chairman, said those things matter, not the ethics complaints. "I think it is a dead issue. Period," he said in an interview at the convention.

The Alaska attorney general's office has found probable cause to believe Ruedrich knowingly violated state ethics law by doing party business on government time when he was an oil and gas conservation commissioner last year. He's also accused of leaking a confidential state legal opinion to an oil and gas industry lobbyist, a charge Ruedrich admits. Ruedrich has resigned the state job but could be fined up to $20,000 for the alleged wrongdoing.

The statewide Central Committee passed its resolution of confidence in Ruedrich after a briefing from the party's lawyer, William Large of Anchorage. He also addressed the other delegates, telling them the Ruedrich ethics issue has been overblown.

"If anyone has any doubts, I urge you to come talk to me," he told the delegates.

In an interview, Large said, "The evidence indicates that any potential violations are minor and are based on anonymous witness interviews."

He said he tried to get documentation of witness allegations that Ruedrich "frequently studied polls at the office and conducted party business both on the state telephone and his cellular telephone during the business day" as an $118,000-a-year commissioner. But Large said the state replied there is nothing but attorney's notes. And those are confidential.

> "I still can't believe it. ... So, is the attorney general's office wrong?"
> — Sarah Palin

Barbara Ritchie, a state lawyer handling the case, countered in a phone interview that the allegations aren't anonymous. The state complaint said the witnesses are Oil and Gas Commissioner Dan Seamount, former Commissioner Sarah Palin and staff employees at the commission, she said.

Ruedrich would have the right to question the witnesses if the case moves toward a formal ethics hearing. However, Ruedrich is pursuing a settlement.

The Central Committee found Large's 40-minute presentation convincing enough to give a "unanimous" voice vote of confidence in Ruedrich. "Everyone seemed satisfied," said vice chairwoman Simpson.

But some committee members, like former party chairman Tuckerman Babcock, abstained from the voice vote. Babcock said he found Large's explanation "biased and uninformative."

Babcock said he would leave it up to Ruedrich to decide whether to resign.

"If I were similarly accused by a law enforcement agency, I would suspend my responsibilities as a party chair until it is resolved," Babcock said.

Palin had wanted the convention to address the Ruedrich issue and said she was left confused by Large's remarks. I still can't believe it. ... So, is the attorney general's office wrong?" said Palin, a former Wasilla mayor and a convention delegate.

Convention delegate Andree McLeod of Anchorage said the party will be hurt if it ignores its "dirty laundry." But many delegates said they didn't know the details and weren't going to dispute their lawyer.

Fairbanks delegate Bonnie Williams said Ruedrich has done a lot for the party.

"I trust him," said Williams, a member of the Fairbanks borough Assembly.

Alaska Republican Party boss Randy Ruedrich received an announcement of support from party leaders Friday.

Ruedrich gets support at convention

■ GOP: Delegates debate use of fund earnings; Senate candidates deliver speeches.

By SEAN COCKERHAM
Anchorage Daily News

SOLDOTNA — The Republican Party of Alaska convention featured mimes calling for more God in politics, condemnation of casino gambling, and dueling U.S. Senate candidates Lisa Murkowski and Mike Miller.

The convention, which ended Saturday at the Soldotna Sports Center, also highlighted party support of state party chairman Randy Ruedrich, accused of ethics violations by the attorney general's office. The party Central Committee backed Ruedrich, and there was no formal call among the 400-some delegates to discuss the issue, despite the grumbling of some Republicans in the halls.

"Between the effort to bury him and the ink the Daily News has spent on him, I'd say he is a survivor," Gov. Frank Murkowski said in a Saturday speech at the convention, looking over to Ruedrich in the crowd. "We look to you for your continued leadership. ... congratulations."

The Republican Murkowski had weeks ago expressed disappointment in Ruedrich. The attorney general's office has found probable cause to believe that Ruedrich violated state ethics law by doing party work while at the $118,000-a-year government job Murkowski appointed him to last year.

But Ruedrich has resigned the state job. A premier political strategist, he remains chief of Alaska's dominant party.

Other issues were more pressing for most of the delegates. There was a spirited debate over whether the party should demand a public vote before Permanent Fund earnings could be used for state services, as many state lawmakers suggest.

It led to a compromise statement that the party supports the dividend checks and encourages no big changes without a public vote.

Legislators already have the authority to spend fund profits without going to a public vote. So those who want to spend some of the earnings to balance the budget went along with the compromise, as did delegate Eddie Burke, leader of the dividend protection group Alaskans Just Say No.

Burke said he wanted a stronger statement, but he was glad to have support for the dividend in the platform, especially since the Democrats present themselves as defenders of the dividend.

The U.S. Senate race was a big deal at the convention. Lisa Murkowski, appointed to the Senate by her father when he left the job to become governor, is facing a challenge in the party primary from fellow Republican Mike Miller of North Pole. Both made speeches, telling the delegates they are right on the issues and are the best candidate to beat Democrat Tony Knowles in the fall election.

Murkowski, in her Friday night speech, mostly criticized Knowles and "extreme environmentalists." But she also sought to put some distance between her and Miller in front of the passionately pro-Bush crowd. Bush officials, worried about losing the seat to a Democrat, have helped her raise campaign money.

"I support President Bush and I am the only candidate who can say the president and his administration supports me," Murkowski told the crowd.

She also brought up the nepotism, saying it took "incredible guts" for her father to appoint her.

"I don't hide from this appointment," she said. "I ask that you judge me on my performance."

Saturday morning, Miller made a breakfast speech, promising that "between the two of us, Republican primary voters are going to see a stark contrast." The former state Senate president said he was more consistently anti-abortion than Murkowski, and criticized her for supporting a state income tax when she was in the Legislature.

He also sought to portray himself as more actively pro-gun and anti-gay marriage, although she has the National Rifle Association endorsement and favors the president's proposal for a constitutional amendment to define marriage as between a man and a woman.

A lot of the convention delegates, especially among the more conservative pro-life wing, said they would support Miller.

And some fence sitters liked his speech for showing how he stands apart from Murkowski.

> "I support President Bush, and I am the only candidate who can say the president and his administration supports me."
> — Lisa Murkowski

Many, such as Palmer delegate and state Rep. Carl Gatto, said it was the first time they've heard a Miller campaign speech.

"I think he set the comparison, he outlined his position very clearly," Gatto said.

Murkowski's supporters said she can appeal to a broader base of voters. Several of the delegates who haven't made their choice said she is a great public speaker and praised her for confronting the nepotism issue.

Spike Jorgensen, a delegate from Tok, said her speech helped nudge him in the Murkowski direction, though he's also a big Miller fan.

"I think she did an outstanding job and has come a long way as a senator for us in the past two years," he said.

The shadow of Knowles, the former governor, loomed large over the convention. Anti-Knowles talk was everywhere, along with concessions that he's a formidable opponent.

Perhaps the biggest question from delegates was who would have the better chance to beat him. Murkowski supporters pointed to polls and campaign money and said it's clear that she's the one. But Miller partisans said nepotism could sink her with voters.

On Saturday afternoon, the convention turned to debating changes to the party platform. One proposal was adopted saying "we believe any expansion of gaming in Alaska is detrimental to our families and society." The move follows a push in the Legislature, supported by many House Republicans, to create a gaming commission that could legalize a casino in Anchorage.

Anchorage Rep. Tom Anderson, a convention delegate, argued the platform should allow for research into whether gambling — a casino, lottery, video poker machines — might benefit the state's economy. His proposal got shot down.

Anderson and several of the other delegates who called themselves moderates said the convention is dominated by social conservatives. Conservatives called it "grass roots." Their influence is reflected in standing party positions like a call for all sex education to be abstinence-based.

The pre-lunch entertainment Saturday was a teenage mime troupe, who acted out scenes as a taped narrator warned of the spirit of Sodom and Gomorrah.

"When you eliminate the Word of God from the classroom and politics, you eliminate the nation that word protects," the narrator intoned.

FOR THE CHRONICLE

COMMENT

Let's not set ethical standards for government employees that only a saint could meet. If we consider ourselves honest and upright, let's not set standards that we couldn't or wouldn't meet in the same position.

There currently is an investigation going on concerning possible ethics violations by a state employee who was also the chairman of the Republican Party in Alaska. Someone filed a complaint, so the Attorney General's office is properly investigating the matter. The ethical question is did Randy Ruedrich knowingly violate state ethics laws by mixing political work with his state job.

Now, some people take the narrow view that for 8 hours a day, 7 1/2 hours for state employees, the employee is only to spend his time strictly on doing his job. He or she is to do that five days a week except for 12 state holidays. Now we know that no one does that; not in state employment and not in private employment. Every employee spends some time on personal matters or personal business matters during the day. Invariably, he makes or receives phone calls, letters, personal conversations, or maybe even e-mails that have nothing to do with his or her job.

Every employer would like every employee to work totally on company business. Every employer knows that the morale of employees is important for good work. Every employer recognizes that there will be personal matters conducted during a business day. If the personal time becomes excessive, the employee is counseled or terminated. Beyond that, in this case, since he was chairman of the Oil and Gas Conservation Commission, the job required more like a 10-hour day probably 5 1/2 days a week.

When I was mayor, my workweek was probably equivalent to six 10-hour days. I can tell you that I certainly spent some part of each day on personal matters or personal business matters. I received and made personal phone calls, letters and reviewed other paper material that was not strictly part of the mayor's job. But I did a full day's work fulfilling the mayor's responsibilities.

In Randy Ruedrich's case, there are two elements involved. First of all is the element of justice. He was appointed to do a specific job as chairman of the oil and gas commission. Did he make any decision or take any actions based on politics rather than on the decision or take any actions based on politics rather than on the merits. Did he give a full day's work for a full day's pay?

The second element is purely political. Some people and some media would like to dirty up the Republican Party. Some groups in the media are already trying to besmirch other members of government who may have communicated with Mr. Ruedrich. Because Mr. Ruedrich was Republican Party chairman, he is a particularly good target for partisans of other political parties.

In the private sector, the ethics of a full day's work for a full day's pay is more closely scrutinized by the boss than is the case in government. So some extra precautions in government are necessary. On the other hand, in government, political partisanship is a stern and sometimes unreasonable overseer.

From what I have seen or heard up until now, Mr. Ruedrich has not been accused of anything which crosses the line in mixing political work with his state job. He has been accused and acknowledged giving a legal brief to one he should not have given it to. But that isn't a political charge. Rather it is employee failure to maintain proper confidence.

As information unfolds from the investigations, we will know more. It is important that we be fair in the evaluation. An ethics violation generally is not a simple black or white question.

Did he fulfill his job responsibilities? Did he put in 71/2 hours a day fulfilling his state job responsibilities? Did he raise political money using state facilities? Did he use state facilities for personal matters or personal business matters any more than you and I would have, or any reasonable person would have? Finally, recognize partisan political shots for what they are.

Tom Fink served as mayor of Anchorage from 1988 to 1994.

■ SENATE CAMPAIGN: Wev Shea says Murkowski camp considers GOP boss vital.

By RICHARD MAUER
Anchorage Daily News

Republican Wev Shea, the former U.S. attorney and an announced candidate for U.S. Senate, says a high-level official in Sen. Lisa Murkowski's campaign made it clear to him that state party boss Randy Ruedrich is too valuable to be fired despite the ethics charges he's facing.

At a private meeting in March, Shea said he was told by Justin Stiefel, Sen. Murkowski's campaign manager and the former chief of staff of her Senate office, that she couldn't be elected in November without Ruedrich at the helm of the party.

And, Shea said, Stiefel told him that Sen. Murkowski's father, Frank Murkowski, couldn't have been elected governor in 2002 without the tactics, strategy and financial might that Ruedrich was able to bring to his campaign.

Given the turn of events, Shea said, he now supports the call of some Democrats in the Alaska Legislature that the state ethics case against Ruedrich be turned over to an independent counsel.

Shea

In an interview last week, Stiefel acknowledged having that meeting with Shea but denied making the remarks Shea attributed to him.

Sen. Murkowski said last week that many members of her party hold Ruedrich in high regard because of his skill at holding the party's factions together and raising large sums of money.

Shea said he will file as a Republican candidate for U.S. Senate today, primarily because he is dissatisfied with the leadership and values demonstrated by both Murkowskis and the other leading declared Republican candidate, former state Senate President Mike Miller. Shea said there is ample evidence that Ruedrich engaged in unethical behavior as a state official and he's unhappy that the other candidates haven't demanded that Ruedrich step down as state party chairman.

In February 2003, Gov. Murkowski rewarded Ruedrich with an appointment to a $118,000 position on the Alaska Oil & Gas Conservation Commission. But Ruedrich was forced out of the job after only eight months, under fire for running the party out of his state office and for leaking sensitive state documents to the lobbyist for a company he was supposed to be regulating.

He is facing civil charges for violations of the state Executive Ethics Act.

Ruedrich agreed that he sometimes conducted party business out of his office and that he provided secrets to the lobbyist, but he insisted those actions didn't amount to violations. His attorney has been talking to the state about settling the charges.

Shea said his encounter with the Ruedrich affair had its roots in a February meeting in Juneau of the Governor's Veterans Advisory Council, of which Shea, a Vietnam combat veteran, is vice chairman.

After two days of meetings, Shea encountered Lt. Gov. Loren Leman at an after-work reception in the governor's mansion on Feb. 5. Shea said that Leman, a conservative Republican, told him that a conservative needed to be recruited to run against Sen. Murkowski, a moderate, in the Republican primary.

"I was just appalled," Shea said. He thought it shocking that Leman would not only talk about ousting Sen. Murkowski, the daughter of the governor with whom Leman shared the ticket in 2002, but do it under her parents' roof.

Leman said Friday that he recalled seeing Shea that afternoon and that he might have had a discussion with him about Sen. Murkowski. But he said he didn't initiate the conversation.

"He may have asked me a question and to that I may have responded," Leman said. "I wasn't out recruiting people to run in that race, but I may have expressed concern about the ability to hold the seat and he may have interpreted that to be like you said."

Two weeks ago, Leman endorsed Miller over Sen. Murkowski.

When Shea got back to Anchorage, he gave Stiefel a call. Shea said he wanted to tip him off about Leman — he considered Sen. Murkowski a friend and a good senator — but thought the subject too sensitive to talk about over the phone. Six weeks passed before Stiefel got back to him, Shea said.

Now it was mid-March, but Republican opposition to Sen. Murkowski had still not surfaced. Her leading opponent was Democrat Tony Knowles.

"I go over there to talk to him, and I tell him that (about Leman), and he has no idea about it — I was kind of shocked that he had no idea that Leman was involved in the charge." Shea thought Stiefel's intelligence gathering from disparate elements of the Republican Party was surprisingly weak.

"That's what I had tried to tell him six weeks before," Shea said.

As it turned out, less than two weeks after Shea met with Stiefel, Miller would resign as Gov. Murkowski's commissioner of administration as a prelude to running against Sen. Murkowski.

After talking about Leman with Stiefel, Shea said he brought up Ruedrich.

"He starts praising Ruedrich. I said, Lisa doesn't need Randy Ruedrich — maybe I'm naive, maybe he has the golden slipper or something. He says to me, 'Wev, Lisa can't win without Randy Ruedrich.' He then goes and relates to me how the governor couldn't have won the 2002 election unless Ruedrich stepped in," Shea said.

"Their position is, nobody can raise money like he can and he's a great strategist," Shea said. "In my opinion, he has no ethical bounds, and he'll do whatever it takes to win, regardless of whether it's professional or not.

"I'm very sorry that Lisa is going to be hurt by all this."

In an interview last week, Stiefel recalled the meeting with Shea but described it differently. He said he was surprised by Shea's assertions regarding Leman because he "had a hard time believing the lieutenant governor would do that in the governor's house — that he would be so outward in his desire to recruit somebody by talking to other people like that."

Asked whether he told Shea that Ruedrich would be essential to Sen. Murkowski, or that Gov. Murkowski couldn't have been elected without Ruedrich, Stiefel laughed and said, "No, that's crazy — that wouldn't even stand up to the light of day."

"I think that people will acknowledge when you get into heat of camp, I'm sure he played a pivotal role," Stiefel said, but not an irreplaceable one, he added.

The endorsement of Ruedrich at the Republican state convention in Soldotna on May 22, and Gov. Murkowski's praise of him there after only weeks before expressing disappointment in Ruedrich's behavior, has convinced Shea that an independent counsel must take over the state's ethics case.

"The governor is unfit to make a call like that," Shea said. Citing two Democratic legislators who made similar calls, Shea said, "I hate to say Ethan Berkowitz and Hollis French are right," but now he agreed with them.

"And neither Lisa nor Mike Miller makes a stand regardless of the conduct of Randy Ruedrich — the whole thing stinks."

OUR VIEW

'Wev Shea's campaign

It's a matter of principle for Republican Senate challenger

Wev Shea's entry into the U.S. Senate Republican primary was a direct result of the recent GOP state convention in Soldotna: He was appalled — his word — at the party's defense of its ethically embattled leader, Randy Ruedrich, and at Gov. Frank Murkowski's dismissive tone toward ethical concerns and Mr. Ruedrich's critics. Mr. Shea's candidacy is a protest aimed at the party establishment.

Mr. Shea is no disaffected Republican moderate marooned by a party moving tidally to the right. He is a traditionalist and a heartfelt conservative — a Navy veteran, a drug warrior, a Clinton antagonist, a lawyerly constitutionalist. He was a U.S. attorney in the first Bush administration and is a supporter of the current President Bush. He is a man of principles — like them or not — and conviction.

And his conviction is: The governor and his party made a big mistake in blowing off Mr. Ruedrich's ethical transgressions. Mr. Shea says he's going to run a campaign to register his dismay and give other Republicans a place to go in protest.

Shea

Just as important: His candidacy lays down the gauntlet for his opponents, Sen. Lisa Murkowski and former state Senate President Mike Miller. Where do they stand on Mr. Ruedrich and the party's ethical posture? Do they tacitly or directly support him? Do they support his behavior? Will they accept his help? Mr. Shea's involvement in the race will force them to deal with questions they'd rather not. That's good for voters.

Mr. Shea has proclaimed his objection to Mr. Ruedrich's appointment to the $118,000-a-year job at the Alaska Oil & Gas Conservation Commission from the very beginning. He was one of those who pointed out the inherent conflict of interest of a party chair raising money while charged with regulating the state's richest industry. He protested Gov. Murkowski's ethical blind eye in not resolving the conflict up front, and then in not demanding or enforcing scrupulous behavior by Mr. Ruedrich in office. Mr. Shea decried the resignation and then muzzling of former AOGCC commissioner Sarah Palin over Mr. Ruedrich's behavior. He also decried Mr. Ruedrich's conduct of party business from his state office and his delivering a confidential state legal analysis to one of the parties in business before the commission.

Mr. Shea is, in his point about public integrity, quite right — whatever the political implications.

Mr. Shea is eager to make the case that integrity in public office is the very core of our state and nation — that forfeiting it is fatal to public trust, that you can't be even a little bit crooked (or tolerant of it) and still govern with authority.

He is tilting at windmills, taking on a party apparatus that controls the governor's office and both houses of the Legislature — and that's desperate to hold the U.S. Senate seat this fall. But Mr. Shea is, in his point about public integrity, quite right — whatever the political implications. It will be interesting to see whether the party bosses actually succeed in marginalizing his voice.

Masek accused of misspending funds

Rep. Beverly Masek, R-Willow, said she denies any deliberate wrongdoing.

■ POET ACCOUNT: Former aide says leftover campaign money misused.

By LISA DEMER
Anchorage Daily News

A legislative aide has accused state Rep. Beverly Masek of illegally spending campaign and office funds on truck payments and other personal items.

The Alaska Public Offices Commission staff is investigating the complaint against the five-term Willow Republican as a civil matter.

The complaint was made last month by Eric Musser, who began working for Masek after the 2002 election and left her office in late 2003. He now is a legislative aide to Rep. Vic Kohring of Wasilla. The allegations relate largely to the period Musser worked in Masek's office.

A legislative aide off and on since 1990, Musser said he felt that Masek's actions were dishonest.

"There's a line I felt was crossed," he said.

After repeated requests for comment Tuesday and Wednesday, Masek faxed a brief written statement. She wrote that she had only just seen the complaints.

"But I already know enough to say that I can categorically deny any deliberate wrongdoing. I keep very good records, and I am going through them now to find the appropriate receipts," she wrote.

MASEK: Accused of misspent POET funds

Masek, 40, is a former Iditarod musher first elected to the state House in 1994. She is seeking her sixth term and faces two challengers in the Republican primary election this August. Whoever wins that can expect to be in a three-way contest in the November general election.

One challenger, Doyle Holmes, a former Matanuska-Borough Assembly member, said the matter likely will be a campaign issue.

"It's very significant, if the allegations are true. It's extremely dangerous to her," said Holmes, a Republican who has filed to run in the general election without a party label.

Under the state campaign reform act of 1996, candidates cannot spend leftover campaign funds on personal goods. But elected officials can use some of their unspent donations to create a public office expense term account, called a POET account. House members can transfer $5,000 a year into a POET account.

None of that money can be spent on personal goods. It is supposed to go for items that "reasonably relate to holding office," said Chris Ellingson, assistant APOC director. She said APOC is awaiting Masek's response before investigating the complaint and couldn't comment on the assertions.

Musser's complaint, dated May 20, is based on two financial disclosure reports filed earlier this year by Masek. One covers her POET account. The other is her campaign disclosure statement for 2003.

Among the allegations:

• Masek described two checks written on the POET account on Jan. 24, 2003, as being for transportation. The checks, to Alaska USA Federal Credit Union for $644.14 each, were for her personal payments on a truck loan, the complaint asserts.

• A $650 withdrawal from the POET account on Jan. 20, 2003, went toward a past-due credit card bill, as did a $200 withdrawal on Feb. 29, 2003, according to Musser's complaint. Masek's report described the payments as office expenses. Masek was not available to explain how there could be a withdrawal on Feb. 29, given that 2003 was not a leap year.

• A check on Jan. 7, 2003, for $3,100 written to her son, Michael Masek, was listed on the POET account but actually came out of her campaign account, Musser said. Masek described it as a "draw on personal funds."

• Masek reported putting $6,721.65 of her own money into the POET account and reported spending $10,971.39 for the year 2003. Under the law, politicians are not allowed to mingle leftover campaign funds with personal funds.

"It has to be leftover funds," Ellingson said. "You can't supplement that. You can't put other money in there."

The case may help define the limits of how much lawmakers can spend from POET accounts, Ellingson said. It also may test what type of spending is appropriate, she said. For instance, if a lawmaker asserts a car is necessary to legislative business, are personal car payments legitimate payments from the POET account?

"We don't have clear guidelines for it," she said.

As for the campaign account, Masek reported returning $500 donations to contributors Bill and Shannon West of Everson, Wash. According to the complaint, she didn't actually do so, though those contributions put her over the out-of-state limit of $3,000 in a House race.

"These checks were never sent. They were voided and destroyed," the complaint said.

Bill West said he is a mechanical engineer with Veco in Bellingham. Shannon West was listed on Masek's 2002 campaign filings as a Veco director.

Reached by phone, Bill West said he remembered some question had come up about the contributions but could not recall if they were returned.

The complaint also asserts that Masek listed numerous checks on her campaign account for telephone and fuel expenses when they were for her personal and home expenses.

In her written statement, Masek said she accepted responsibility if Musser made clerical errors in filling out the reports.

"I don't wish to speculate on my former employee's motives for this attack, but I feel confident we will eventually be able to get the truth out," she wrote.

Musser said Masek handled most of her own financial affairs. He said he spoke with Masek numerous times about his concerns, but until the financial reports came out in February, he didn't have the full picture.

"She managed her own account. She wrote her own checks. She was fully in charge and did things herself," Musser said.

APOC has asked Masek for a written response and for bank statements from the 2002 campaign and from the POET account, as well as copies of deposit slips for the accounts.

If APOC finds the allegations to be true, the commission can order fines of $50 to $500 per day, per violation.

Under new deadlines set in law, the case should be resolved before the August primary election, Ellingson said.

ETHICS LAW: Carpooling with lobbyist, private meetings aren't forbidden for oil panel.

By MIKE CHAMBERS
The Associated Press
(Published: June 13, 2004)

Republican Party of Alaska chairman Randy Ruedrich has been the target of allegations that he worked for the party out of his state office as a member of the Alaska Oil and Gas Conservation Commission. (The Associated Press archive 2004)

JUNEAU -- During his time as a government regulator of the oil and gas industry, Randy Ruedrich held private meetings with oil officials, obtained documents from federal prosecutors on a former employer, and even carpooled with a natural gas lobbyist.

Such conduct would have been forbidden for some other state boards and commissions, such as the Regulatory Commission of Alaska, which oversees telephone companies.

But not for the Alaska Oil and Gas Conservation Commission, where Ruedrich served until late last year as a regulator of the state's most lucrative industry.

Still, those were some of the most troubling revelations that a former commissioner said she found while investigating whether Ruedrich was doing GOP work on state time.

Sarah Palin, who also served as AOGCC ethics supervisor, said she turned over witness statements and other evidence showing that Ruedrich may have been too cozy with the industry he regulated.

Other than a single confidential document that he allegedly leaked to Evergreen Resources lobbyist Kyle Parker, none of the so-called ex parte contact appears to have been probed, Palin said.

"From a regulator's role, and because I was hired to help regulate the industry and I took my responsibility very seriously, the ex parte contact was extremely serious," Palin said.

Barbara Ritchie, head of the Department of Law unit that investigated Ruedrich, said the allegations have been looked at. "At this point, we haven't found anything that is an Ethics Act issue with this," Ritchie said.

The state's Ethics Act doesn't restrict commissioners from having outside contact with industry representatives. And the AOGCC doesn't have formal regulations forbidding the practice, something that the Regulatory Commission of Alaska has recently done.

In addition, the commission overseeing the oil and gas industry is exempt from the state administrative law that governs outside contact for other boards and commissions, such as the Alaska Public Offices Commission or the state boards of Fish and Game.

Ruedrich had held private meetings with BP Exploration (Alaska) Inc. officials while the commission was investigating a well explosion.

Ruedrich also acted on his own when he met with the U.S. attorney's office to gather investigative documents on his former employer, Doyon Drilling, Palin said.

But Ruedrich defended his actions, saying he did nothing improper. He met with the U.S. attorney's office to gather documents on BP -- and not Doyon, as Palin alleges -- for the commission's records, Ruedrich said.

"The Doyon thing is just another example of it never happened and the rest of it is stretched and stretched and stretched," Ruedrich said.

Ruedrich worked for Doyon Drilling when the company and three employees pleaded guilty in 1998 to federal charges of illegally dumping waste on the North Slope.

In summer 2003, Ruedrich met with the U.S. attorney's office to request records, but a federal spokeswoman would not say what they discussed or what was turned over.

"It was publicly filed documents in the court. As a courtesy, we gave him a copy," said Assistant U.S. Attorney Deborah Smith.

Vicki Clark, who is an attorney for the environmental group Trustees for Alaska, which has battled with Evergreen over coal bed methane drilling, said Ruedrich's actions demonstrate the need for tighter regulations on the regulators themselves.

Clark had heard rumors that Ruedrich had driven with Parker to company-sponsored public meetings in the Matanuska-Susitna Borough.

Palin, who had heard the same rumors, worried that Mat-Su residents angry about the company's plans to drill for shallow gas on private lands would conclude the state was somehow in cahoots with Evergreen.

Ruedrich said he did carpool with Parker to a meeting in Sutton in September. At that meeting, the public outcry against drilling erupted, catching Ruedrich by surprise, he said.

In retrospect, he would not have shared a car ride with the Evergreen lobbyist if he had known in advance that the meeting would become contentious, he said.

"I think what's happened with Randy Ruedrich has certainly brought to light that there is an avenue for abuse," Clark said.

It would be unrealistic to forbid any contact between regulators and those being regulated because Alaska is so sparsely populated, Clark said.

But a better idea would be to at least require commissioners to divulge their contact.

Ruedrich is the state Republican Party chairman. He resigned from the $118,000-a-year AOGCC post in November and now faces state ethics charges.

He faces civil ethics charges for allegedly doing political work on state time and for sharing an internal legal opinion with the Evergreen lobbyist.

The four charges carry a fine of up to $20,000. The state is currently in settlement talks with Ruedrich.

Palin conducted the initial phase of the investigation, gathering documents and statements for the state Department of Law.

She turned the information over to the department in December and in January appealed to Republican Gov. Frank Murkowski to act.

FBI - Stevens-51

Palin later resigned from the commission in part due to state confidentiality restrictions that she said made little sense.

While the Ethics Act didn't bar Ruedrich from meeting with industry officials, it does require those who knew about the investigation to be quiet.

Palin said she recently decided to talk after Ruedrich and others within the GOP began to publicly denounce the department probe.

Republican Party attorney William Large called the charges overblown at a GOP convention in Soldotna this summer, while Murkowski lauded Ruedrich for surviving what he termed a media attack.

"So many people are spinning this around to what are the technical activities of this and ignoring the spirit of the Ethics Act," Palin said.

Rob Mintz, the Department of Law attorney who advises the AOGCC, said even though there are no regulations against such contact, "it's kind of implicit."

"Generally speaking, the rule is a decision maker should not have communication with fewer than all the parties unless there is notice and consent by all the other parties," Mintz said.

But since many of the issues before the AOGCC involve only a single party, commissioners at the AOGCC police themselves, said Commissioner Dan Seamount.

In his role as a regulator, Seamount doesn't hold private meetings, he said.

"I can't say one way or another whether any of the other commissioners adhere to that policy as strictly," he said.

Neither Seamount nor Mintz would talk about specific instances involving Ruedrich.

Consulting work pays off for some state legislators

POLITICS: Ben Stevens made $300,000 helping people who help him.

By SEAN COCKERHAM
Anchorage Daily News

(Published: July 6, 2004)

JUNEAU -- Anchorage Sen. Ben Stevens made more than $300,000 from consulting last year, working for companies whose executives also gave thousands to his most recent political campaign.

He's not alone.

Anchorage Rep. Tom Anderson collected $30,000 in consulting fees last year. Anchorage Rep. Lesil McGuire reported $10,500 in consulting fees.

Anderson and Stevens shared a major client: the influential oil field and construction services company Veco, which has helped finance both men's election campaigns and those of dozens of other Republican candidates.

McGuire, an Anchorage Republican who has a law degree, told the Alaska Public Offices Commission that she was hired by Providence Alaska Medical Center to review legal documents. She did not return calls seeking a fuller explanation.

The latest financial disclosure reports filed with the state show consulting pays off for some legislators, though the experience of Sen. Scott Ogan, a Palmer Republican, showed it can present difficulties. Last year Ogan quit his $40,000 consulting job with Evergreen Resources in the face of conflict of interest allegations.

Evergreen was pushing for legislation affecting its business, coal bed methane development, while Ogan was its consultant. Now Ogan is fighting a recall effort.

Unlike Ogan, Stevens and Anderson were both professional consultants before being elected to the Legislature. But Ogan's experience has focused attention on what lawmakers do to make a living.

Consultants aren't the only lawmakers whose careers overlap with the business of the Legislature.

The disclosure reports show, for example, that Sen. Gretchen Guess, D-Anchorage, works for Alaska Communications Systems, a company embroiled in the telephone wars that often spill over into the Legislature. Rep. Kevin Meyer, R-Anchorage, works for Conoco Phillips, a big player on issues ranging from oil taxes to incentives for a natural gas pipeline.

Commercial fishermen have long taken the lead on fisheries issues in the Legislature. Homer Republican Rep. Paul Seaton, for example, is a fisherman who chairs the House Special Committee on Fisheries.

But Leah Rush, state projects director for the nonpartisan Center for Public Integrity in Washington, D.C., argues that legislators who work as consultants raise a separate question. Consultants choose whether or not to do work for a company active in politics, she said.

"They're for hire," she said. "So it's a little bit different than someone who is working for a company or owning their own company."

Rush said it's especially important for the public to know when consultants are getting campaign contributions from companies that also hire them. That's the case with both Stevens and Anderson.

Stevens, the influential Republican majority leader of the state Senate, didn't return phone calls seeking comment.

Anderson said government affairs and public relations consulting are jobs in which he has experience, and he doesn't let it conflict with his legislative duties.

"I have to work," said the first-term lawmaker from Muldoon.

The state pays legislators $24,012 in base salary. They also get another $23,000 or so in per-diem, meant in part to help cover living expenses while they are away from home during the four months when the Legislature is in session. Lawmakers often get additional thousands for doing state work when the Legislature isn't in session.

Stevens, the son of U.S. Sen. Ted Stevens, has worked as a consultant for Veco since before Gov. Tony Knowles appointed him in 2001 to fill a vacant seat in the state Senate. His contract for "business services" with Veco last year was $47,500, according to the state reports.

Anderson just started working for Veco last year when he got a $10,000 contract for "consulting on local government and community council affairs," according to the reports he filed with the state.

Veco employees and their wives have also contributed a least $3,500 so far that can be used in his campaign this fall. He received about $4,000 in Veco-related contributions in his 2002 House race.

Stevens isn't up for election this year, but he received more than $12,000 in Veco contributions for his 2002 election campaign. He also got smaller contributions from fishing interests. Some of his biggest consulting contracts are in the fishing industry. Stevens ran unopposed in the 2002 campaign but still spent most of the $131,000 he raised and can use some of the rest to help his next campaign.

Veco is always influential in state campaigns. Its employees or their spouses donated $296,883 in the last state election, two years ago, according to a Daily News election-finance database. Veco president Pete Leathard said the support is for candidates who share the company's philosophies on issues such as developing natural resources.

Multinational Veco, one of Alaska's most successful homegrown companies, is known for its work in oil fields. But the company is also active in construction, electrical work, biotechnology, even food processing.

It has pushed bills in the Legislature related to oil and gas. But Veco has a broad interest in what happens in the Legislature, from business taxes to workers' compensation issues to attempts to limit lawsuits. Veco has some of the top lobbyists at the Capitol under contract.

And it hires legislators.

Leathard said the company's intent is not to influence them; it hires them because they are qualified for the job and shouldn't be punished financially because they serve four months of the year in Juneau.

"They have to work in the off time," he said.

Former Wrangell Republican Sen. Robin Taylor, a lawyer, had a Veco contract when he was in the Legislature. He closed his law practice and took a state job last year.

Anderson said Veco approached him about a job after the legislative session ended last spring. The company knew he had done similar consulting work before his election, Anderson said.

Anderson said the bulk of his $10,000 contract was for seeking out civic and charitable events for Veco to become involved in. He also said he monitored neighborhood community councils in Anchorage to see if there were any zoning cases or other issues brewing that might affect Veco.

Anderson also got a $20,000 contract from the Alaska Telephone Association, a group of rural telephone companies. He said he advised on member relations and researched other states' telecommunications policies.

Anderson is chair of the House Labor and Commerce Committee, which deals with telecommunications issues. But Anderson said he's careful to avoid a conflict and hasn't pushed the interests of his employers.

"At the end of the day, I have to answer first, certainly, to myself in terms of integrity and honesty," Anderson said. "And a close second is to my constituents."

Stevens, a former Bering Sea crab boat captain, started his consulting and lobbying business in Washington, D.C., about a decade ago. He kept many of his clients, including Veco, since joining the Legislature.

Leathard said Veco hires Stevens because he is familiar with the company and knows his way around the government maze in Washington, D.C. He said last year Stevens helped Veco get paid for work on a World Bank-sponsored pipeline project in Pakistan.

Stevens had some of his biggest consulting contracts with fishing interests more involved in federal than state politics. He has drawn criticism for the fact that his father, one of the most powerful members of Congress, pushed legislation that helps clients of his son's, such as the North Pacific Crab Association, a processor group.

The elder Stevens also backed legislation that gave the Aleut Corp. exclusive rights to catch millions of dollars' worth of pollock along the Aleutian Chain. Adak Fisheries, which stands to benefit from the deal, had a $120,000 contract with the younger Stevens last year.

Ted Stevens told the Daily News last fall that both he and his son have developed a thick skin in response to their critics.

"I don't care what they say about me. My son's now a politician. ... He doesn't care what they say about him," Stevens said at the time. "Neither one of us is getting rich. That's for damn sure. And we're doing what we think is right."

Wagoner and Olson win Kenai GOP primaries

COSTLY: Senate challenger Jerry Ward spent $140,000 of his own money in unsuccessful try.

By TOM KIZZIA
Anchorage Daily News

Jerry Ward's effort to clamber back into state politics was beaten back Tuesday by Sen. Tom Wagoner in the Kenai-area Republican primary.

In an acrimonious race that cost Ward $140,000 of his own money, Wagoner won with almost half the votes in a three-way race among conservatives. Political newcomer Scott Hamman of Nikiski, who ran a pox-on-both-their-houses campaign, finished a fairly strong third.

Ward's campaign was based on protecting the Permanent Fund dividend above all else. Wagoner said Tuesday night that Ward's attacks had apparently backfired.

"People don't like negative campaigns," he said. "And people do not like these automated phone calls." He said his campaign had heard many complaints about repeated automated calls from Ward's campaign.

Wagoner is expected to face only token independent opposition in November's general election.

Former legislative staffer Kurt Olson won the Republican primary for the Kenai House race to replace outgoing Rep. Kelly Wolf, R-Kenai. By winning a four-way race, Olson will face Democrat Hal Smalley for the District 33 House seat in November.

Olson, who campaigned more aggressively than his competitors, was a one-term Soldotna City Council member and an aide for Wagoner and former Sen. John Torgerson. He drew 47 percent of the vote Tuesday. John "Ozzie" Osborne was second with 31 percent. Trailing behind were David L. Richards, owner of a sportfish business, and Mel Krogseng, a Kenai River lodge owner and longtime aide to former House Speaker Ramona Barnes.

Olson will face Smalley, a retired teacher and 10-year Kenai City Council veteran who was elected to a single House term in 1998.

In a Democratic state Senate primary, commercial boat owner Mike Yourkowski of Homer was well ahead of Mike Milligan of Kodiak for the Homer-Seward-Kodiak District R, with many Kodiak votes still uncounted. The winner will challenge incumbent Republican Sen. Gary Stevens of Kodiak.

The Kenai Republican Senate primary was expensive, with candidates spending about $280,000.

Ward's spending represented the most personal money election officials recall being spent on a legislative campaign. He refused to say where the money had come from other than to say it was his. He added about $30,000 in contributions.

Ward's media efforts led Wagoner to scramble to mount a $110,000 defense. Ward accused Wagoner of selling out to special interests.

Wagoner, a former Kenai mayor and Kenai Peninsula community college dean, knocked Ward out of his Senate seat in 2002 amid questions about Ward's home residence. Ward, who now lives in Sterling, said at the time he had moved from a big home in Anchorage to a small trailer in Nikiski so he could keep his Senate seat after the district was redrawn. Ward had other liabilities as well, including questions about a long-ago bankruptcy and his support for a proposed private prison in Kenai that local voters rejected.

Wagoner avoided a primary fight with Ward two years ago by running in the general election as a Republican Moderate. He said he wanted to avoid splitting the anti-Ward vote with another candidate. Wagoner switched parties after he won, joining the Republican majority in the Senate.

But Ward charged back, accusing Wagoner of voting to take Permanent Fund money and failing to stop government growth.

The campaign ended in a blaze of testy advertising the past few days. Wagoner publicized an endorsement from U.S. Sen. Ted Stevens, and Ward came back with a newspaper ad saying "Sen. Ted" had been "hoodwinked" because Wagoner had lied about his record.

"As our new state senator, Jerry Ward won't have to shade the truth," Ward's ad said.

Ward also sent a mailer with an endorsement from former gubernatorial candidate Wayne Anthony Ross, identified as a director of the National Rifle Association. Wagoner responded with ads reprinting a letter from the NRA citing Wagoner's "A-plus" rating. The NRA letter took an unusual slap at Ward, saying he had implied in his mailer that he had the association's endorsement when he didn't.

Ward had invested several hundred thousand dollars of his own money in previous campaigns.

Ward's political career started with his 1982 election to a House term representing Anchorage. His effort to move to the Senate failed, but in 1996 he defeated Democrat Judy Salo to win what was then a Kenai-Anchorage Senate seat.

Ward also made two unusual runs for lieutenant governor. In 1990, he teamed with John Lindauer on the Alaskan Independence Party ticket, then stepped aside to allow a successful run by Wally Hickel and Jack Coghill. In 1998, now in the Senate, Ward teamed again with Lindauer, this time on the Republican ticket. That race ended with Lindauer disgraced and disowned by the party for hiding the fact that funds for his heavily self-financed campaign had come from his wife's fortune.

FBI probes complaint against Heinze

INCIDENT: Agency investigates charge the legislator solicited jobs from Railbelt utilities.

By SHEILA TOOMEY

(Published: September 2, 2004)

Cheryll Heinze's job discussions with utility officials were a "matter of public record," said her attorney, Jeff Feldman. (Seanna O'Sullivan/AP)

An Anchorage legislator's suggestion to several Railbelt utilities that they hire her as a consultant has landed her in hot water, but just how hot remains unclear.

The FBI is investigating a complaint that Cheryll Heinze, a first-term House member from Anchorage, solicited jobs from companies affected by legislation she supported, Heinze's attorney, Jeff Feldman, confirmed Wednesday.

Feldman said he did not know the current status of the investigation. "Everything there is to know about this has been known since last spring," he said. "There are no new facts to develop."

As a matter of practice, federal investigators do not announce when they conclude that charges are not warranted, he said.

In recent weeks, both the FBI and the U.S. attorney's office have refused to confirm or deny the existence of the investigation.

The flap stems from conversations Heinze had with several Railbelt utility officials during the past legislative session, both sides say. However, no one interviewed admits knowing how the feds got involved.

In April, Tuckerman Babcock, a lobbyist for Matanuska Electric Association, told the Legislative Ethics office that Heinze asked him for a job under circumstances he considered inappropriate and asked for guidance about filing a complaint.

Babcock said Wednesday he was "taken aback" when Heinze suggested to him at a March 31 social gathering that MEA should hire her during the interim between legislative sessions.

FBI - Stevens-59

"I did find it inappropriate," he said. "I've never had a request like that."

Babcock did not file an official complaint after an ethics officer concluded the job request might carry the appearance of impropriety, but did not appear to be a clear violation.

He agreed that Heinze did not offer to do him any favors in return for a job.

The job request came while Babcock was in Juneau testifying against a Heinze-sponsored bill that would have allowed several of the Railbelt utility companies, but not including MEA, to form an unregulated joint operation, he said. The bill eventually died.

194A-AN-13620-M-27
~~194A-AN-13620-119~~
9-3-04
RSB 9/7/04

Babcock said he did not report the incident to the FBI or ask for a federal investigation.

The next he heard of the matter was when the FBI approached MEA to help with "an investigation," Babcock said." MEA "cooperated fully," he said. He refused to say if Heinze was the subject of the investigation or what kind of assistance MEA gave the FBI.

Rumors of the investigation have been rampant in political circles since July when Heinze withdrew her name as a candidate for re-election, citing ill health. But no one with first-hand knowledge of the facts had been willing to talk until Babcock broke his silence. He said he did so because the rumors were damaging his reputation.

After learning of Babcock's comments, Feldman confirmed that his client has been the subject of an FBI inquiry but said he doesn't know if it is still going on. He said Heinze's job discussions with utility officials were all open and "a matter of public record. ... That's something she was talking about to everybody."

After witnessing what she considered an unhealthy enmity among the various companies providing power to the Railbelt, Heinze suggested they hire her over the interim to "work with all the utilities to try to fashion a more harmonious policy," Feldman said.

"It didn't happen," he said. "I'm not aware anyone thinks those discussions violated anything, either law or ethics."

Heinze, reached at home Wednesday night, declined to comment, on Feldman's advice, she said.

Third-party bid may unsettle Senate race

Monday, September 6, 2004 - by Steve MacDonald

Channel 2 News

Anchorage, Alaska - They were bitter rivals in the Republican primary, but now Mike Miller is backing Lisa Murkowski in the race for U.S. Senate.

Miller (shown at right with Murkowski during a primary forum) made the endorsement at an event billed as a "unity rally" Monday in Fairbanks.
During the primary, Miller often criticized Murkowski for not being conservative enough.

But according to Murkowski's campaign staff, Miller said that, despite their differences, he is supporting his fellow Republican. He did not say if he'll campaign for Murkowski during the general election campaign.

Barry Johnson/KTUU

Despite Miller's endorsement, Sen. Murkowski will still hear from critics who say she's not conservative enough. One of those critics is a former Republican state lawmaker who's running for the U.S. Senate as a member of the Alaskan Independence Party.

Jerry Sanders is questioning Murkowski's stance on some key issues, while a major question mark hovers over his own campaign.

Talk to Sanders and there's no doubt about his role in the November election. "I am the candidate," he insists. Nor is there doubt about what part his friend and colleague, Jerry Ward, is playing in the U.S. Senate race. "Jerry Ward is the campaign manager."

Barry Johnson/KTUU

But listen to Ward and there's still some question about whether rumors of a switch in the AIP Senate candidates could come true.

"As we speak today, it absolutely is I'm 100 percent behind Jerry Sanders," Ward says. "And if for any reason Jerry Sanders and the AIP party was to ask me to run and serve, I absolutely would consider it."

But right now it's Sanders' name on the ballot and, with the help of Ward, the two are drawing a bead on conservative Alaskan voters. To win that vote, they're touting three main issues.

"We're pro-life. We're anti-same-sex marriage. We're pro-vouchers," Sanders says. That means in favor of school vouchers. "You can see that more and more people every year are going to home schooling."

Something else Sanders says he's offering conservatives is a clear choice between himself and the two main candidates in the Senate race. "The situation that has evolved here is the special interests have given us two people to select between, to vote for. And they're just alike, just like two peas in a pod."

FBI - Stevens-62

So voters can expect a reprise of a theme heard in the Republican primary race between Murkowski and Mike Miller. This time, it will be Sanders claiming he's the true conservative.

"We don't take anything for granted, but we are focused on Tony Knowles, and I think that's where most Alaskans are focused," says Murkowski campaign spokesman Elliott Bundy (right).

It's a theme that Murkowski easily conquered in the primary. But it's talk that her camp worries could fracture some of the Republican vote in November.

"We've got to remember it didn't work in '94 when Tony Knowles was elected governor," says Bundy. "It didn't work in the primary when Sen. Murkowski won. And a continuation of this rhetoric is really the best way to insure that we have Sen. Knowles in November."

Barry Johnson/KTUU

The Knowles campaign says it's hard to gauge what effect Sanders and the Alaska Independence Party will have on the U.S. Senate race. The Democrats' campaign staff feels the potential is there to hurt the Republicans.

"My guess is that, by appealing to those conservatives who are also concerned about issues, such as outsourcing of jobs, that inevitably they'll take votes away from Lisa Murkowski," says Bob King of the Knowles campaign.

But if Sanders is going to appeal to anyone, he'll have to campaign more aggressively in the general election than he did in the primary. Facing minor opposition in August, Sanders made few appearances and spent no money. His campaign manager vows that will change.

"Jerry Sanders' campaign is going to have to spend about $400,000 in order to be successful," Ward says. "And we have every intention of doing that. And the name ID will be out there with the first $100,000."

According to Sanders, it will be his name that voters will identify as the Alaska Independence Party candidate. The AIP also says it wants Sanders on the ballot and is opposed to any change in candidates.

Back in 1990, John Lindauer and Jerry Ward were the AIP candidates for governor. But after the primary, they were dropped from the ticket and replaced by Republicans Walter Hickel and Jack Coghill, who went on to win the race.

Meeting turns into yelling match

FENCE DISPUTE: Critics of Air Force plan accused of having anti-military bias.

By ANNE AURAND
Anchorage Daily News

(Published: September 17, 2004)

A Northeast Community Council meeting Thursday night erupted in shouting, table pounding and finger pointing when one side on a military fence issue questioned the other's support for U.S. troops.

When council secretary Ron Slepecki asked the people who resisted the Air Force's plan to build a security fence across popular trails to admit they secretly disliked the military, a couple of obviously offended fellow community council members slammed their fists onto desks.

And that's when the yelling started at the standing-room-only meeting.

Board member Ainslie Phillips and council vice president Bill Wielechowski shouted at Slepecki to stop his accusations. Later in the evening both said that people should be able to disagree without calling each other names.

The council ultimately approved, on a 47-15 vote, Slepecki's motion to support Elmendorf Air Force Base's plans to build an 8-foot chain-link fence topped with barbed wire along the base's southern boundary.

Wielechowski also said he was bothered by the process that led to the decision about where to build the fence. The military did not show the council the true, final trail plan until the decision was made, he said.

But board member Troy Carlock said that security is more important than a public process and that to drag out this debate would jeopardize the Air Force.

Leadership in the Northeast Community Council has been a volatile issue since May. That's when friends of Republican state Rep. Tom Anderson, from East Anchorage, put allies -- including Slepecki, a reverend with Anchorage Baptist Temple, and Carlock, a teacher -- in some top spots.

Anderson said in May that he wanted to see more pro-business, pro-development and pro-military people running the council, which can be a jump-off point for local politicians.

The meeting Thursday started with military officials talking about why the base needs new housing and accompanying security fencing. The fence will cut off some long-established recreation trails near Bartlett High School.

Some trail users want the Air Force to consider moving the fence about 75 feet north, which would preserve more trails but reduce the 150-foot buffer between new housing and the fence.

FBI - Stevens-65

Trail supporters believe that shrinking that buffer wouldn't hurt base security. But military officials and supporters in the audience said someone could throw a grenade 75 feet and the base is a target.

The majority supported the military's fence plans.

Dave Ulmer said that he hadn't come to the meeting to vote against the fence plan but that Slepecki motivated him to.

"I don't care if they build an Empire State Building," he said. But he was angry, he said, that Slepecki "infers that if I question the military I'm an anti-American commie."

The meeting was riddled with face-offs between opposing factions, several sparked by a woman who said she was a military widow and repeatedly announced her embarrassment that the council was arguing about a fence when people were fighting and dying for their country.

City approves plans for MacKay Annex

Tuesday, October 5, 2004 - by Angela Unruh

Dave Steward/KTUU

Anchorage, Alaska - For the last 20 years, it has sat empty. While that has upset many nearby residents, the latest proposal has some wishing it would stay empty.

Monday night, the Planning and Zoning Commission unanimously approved a land use permit for the MacKay Annex on Fourth Avenue.

The business developer, Marc Marlow, has huge plans for this area that he says may create an economic boom. But some nearby business owners are still wary of what may soon lie on this property.

As drivers pass the MacKay Annex, they don't usually take a second look. But that may change after Marlow finishes his grand plans for what's now being referred to as the McKinley Tower.

"The tower is actually in the process of being split into two legal pieces," he says. The first four floors would house 58 units for assisted living. The top 10 floors would contain 100 apartments.

Dave Steward/KTUU

Marlow proposes that the annex, just west of the tower, house a residential psychiatric treatment center for boys ages 11 to 17.

"That building will be staffed by 88 people providing professional jobs to care for the folks in need of the service," he says. "And I think will be a meaningful and dynamic component to the revitalization and economic progress on this end of our city."

This part of the plan is what has many nearby business owners upset. "We do have mixed feelings even in my own company right there, where we're not too comfortable with this right here," said Ilarion Pletnikoff, manager of Lotte International Trading.

The Planning and Zoning Commission did add, among others, a condition for the use of the annex.

"The use of the hospital cannot be converted into a detention center or into a correctional halfway house, as part of this approval," said Mary Autor, senior planner with the municipal planning department.

"Maybe some people would frown on it," said Pletnikoff. "But I think that it's a service that's probably been neglected for so long in Anchorage, and it needs to be addressed somehow, and perhaps a place needs to be provided for it."

Channel 2 News

Marlow believes developing this land is the key to creating a dynamic downtown. "The key to blossom a downtown is to have people living in the downtown. And we have a real shortage of that because we don't have any place for folks to live," he says.

FBI - Stevens-68

Vacant for more than 20 years, and for the past six on Marlow's drawing board, the formerly pink building with an equally colorful past may be well on its way to a new future. If everything goes well with financing, construction on the tower could begin this month, Marlow says.

Completion is expected by September 2005.

But before the annex can be developed, the Department of Health and Social Services has to determine if the facility is needed. The annex would be a locked facility, housing boys who are sex offenders, boys who have been abused themselves, and those who have abused others.

Boys' center takes another step

MACKAY: Planning commission OKs proposal for psychiatric facility.

By ANNE AURAND
Anchorage Daily News

Anchorage's Planning and Zoning Commission unanimously agreed to allow a boys' psychiatric treatment center in the MacKay building annex as part of a broader plan to develop senior housing and apartments in the taller MacKay building next door.

The psychiatric center is proposed by developer Mark Marlow and Cornell Companies, a Texas-based company that operates private prisons as well as juvenile treatment facilities.

At a public hearing before the commission Monday night, testimony favored Marlow's proposal, which he and his supporters say will add life into the two buildings that have stood vacant for decades. Some said the residential treatment center is a needed service in Anchorage.

A smaller number were skeptical about how the proposed psychiatric hospital would affect the eastern end of downtown, and some said there are already too many social services in the downtown area.

MacKay building developer Marc Marlow said leasing the annex for the psychiatric center would help him rebuild the adjacent tower.

Marlow

Marlow requested a conditional use for this 2.4-acre property on Fourth Avenue between Cordova and Denali streets. The approval allows property uses that otherwise would not have been allowed, including hospitals, nursing homes, convalescent homes, medical clinics, senior housing and pharmacies. The boys' center is classified as a hospital for these purposes.

The commission on Monday added some conditions of approval to those already proposed by city planning staff.

Conditions include the three-story annex being filled with a 60-bed adolescent psychiatric hospital for boys between 11 and 17, the 15-floor tower building having four floors of senior housing and senior assisted-living facilities, and the rest of the building housing 100 general-rental apartments. The property will not be used for correctional or detention centers.

Conditions also require that the development be completed by September 2005.

Marlow said leasing the annex to Cornell Companies for the psychiatric center would help him rebuild the adjacent tower.

He is awaiting a commitment from the federal Department of Housing and Urban Development to start work on the tower. Marlow said the first job, which can be done during the winter, is to restore sewer, water and heat to the building. That has been done in the annex.

Cornell must now follow through with a state process to acquire a "certificate of need" before it can put in the boys home. The state Health and Human Services Web page says Cornell has applied for the certificate.

A company official said the home could be ready next summer. The company says it will invest $10 million to $12 million in the center.

The facility would be home to up to 60 Alaska boys ages 11 to 17 with mental disabilities and psychiatric and substance-abuse problems. About 450 such youths are getting treatment in the Lower 48, and the company says bringing the kids closer to their families would help them.

Mildred "Milly" Mucha, who spoke in favor of the proposal at Monday's meeting, said the service is needed and the city needs a similar home for girls.

A retired teacher, she said she has worked in drug and alcohol programs in schools here in the past. The people in treatment can be good people, she said, and the neighbors should not worry. Mucha said she would support the center even if it was proposed in her Midtown neighborhood.

"You've got an empty building and people willing to invest and get the thing going," she said, adding, "The builder is going to salvage an eyesore."

Cornell has been pushing a private prison in Alaska, most recently in Whittier. The company has its critics, who point out lawsuits and newspaper stories about abuses or escapes in Cornell-owned facilities.

Dee Hubbard of Sterling has been researching the company since it tried to build a prison near Kenai. She's the president of a Florida-based private prison watchdog group called Private Corrections Institute. The company pays its employees poorly and executives well, she said.

"I don't want Cornell to have its hand on any kids in Anchorage," she said in a phone interview.

She said she agrees that Anchorage needs drug and alcohol treatment for youths but would rather see a publicly run facility, which she said would be more accountable.

Tim Marshall, a regional development director for Cornell, said state-run agencies have as many problems as private ones. He cited a case where girls in a public treatment home in Hawaii were abused and subsequently transferred to a Cornell facility in Salt Lake City for their safety.

He acknowledged that the company has had some problems but said Anchorage, as opposed to a rural location, should be an easy place to find quality employees. Cornell would import employees to train local hires and would recruit nationally if necessary. Employees will earn between $24,000 and $80,000 depending on the position, he said.

"We're here as a resource to the community," Marshall said. "We plan to serve Anchorage youth and families."

Mayor Mark Begich has heard that Cornell has had problems in some facilities.

"On the flip side, I've seen some of their operations, and they seem like well-run organizations," he said. "They've had problems at times but not ones that make me nervous."

Teachers support Anderson

Daily News staff

(Published: October 23, 2004)

A teachers union has endorsed Republican incumbent Rep. Tom Anderson, a government affairs consultant, over three-term Anchorage School Board member and career educator Peggy Robinson.

The National Education Association Alaska, representing about 12,000 members, chose Anderson for the Muldoon House seat because he has supported schools and voted to direct millions of dollars into education, said NEA president Bill Bjork.

For example, Anderson sponsored a bill to put $35 million into classroom instruction, reducing class sizes.

"We're not going to change horses midstream," Bjork said. "He has earned it."

Robinson said she was disappointed but not surprised. When she was on the School Board she negotiated teacher contracts that kept a lid on raises and benefits for a couple of years.

With high personnel costs, the district was headed for financial trouble -- toward laying off teachers and increasing class sizes, she said.

"We had to slow down that rate of increasing costs," she said. "We had to do that to be fiscally responsible for the district."

Those contracts led to teacher strikes in 1994.

Anderson said he has always supported teachers, and knows the legislative system. Plus, he's part of the Republican majority that can work with the governor, he said.

DEMS ALLEGE DIRTY DEEDS

The Alaska Democratic Party filed a second complaint with the Federal Election Commission and the Internal Revenue Service this week against the group Business Alaska, which the party says is illegally advocating for U.S. Sen. Lisa Murkowski.

FBI - Stevens-73

The party's latest complaint is based upon a full-page ad in the Daily News on Oct. 16 that compares Murkowski to Sen. Ted Stevens. The party accuses Business Alaska, a secretive organization, of breaking federal law because the ad names a candidate for U.S. Senate and is connected to the Senate race.

In spending money to promote Murkowski's election, Business Alaska is required to file with the Internal Revenue Service as a section 527 organization, but it hasn't, the party says.

A Democratic Party letter to the group's treasurer, Tom McGrath, demanded the group stop the ads.

"They'll do anything to win, even if it means breaking the law," said the party's executive director, Bridget

Gallagher.

The group also ran television ads against Democrat Tony Knowles in September, attacking Knowles for his support of the Pew Oceans Commission and its work on preserving the ocean environment.

A message left for McGrath at his business, Frigid North, was not returned.

INCUMBENT INOCULATED

Democratic U.S. Senate candidate Tony Knowles came out for a press conference Thursday at his campaign headquarters, stood in front of two reporters and coughed.

He said he thought he was getting a touch of the flu.

"I couldn't get a shot, like some," he said, smiling. He left the room briefly, and when he returned, coughed again, and said he might be coming down with something.

He was referring to reports this week that all members of Congress were allowed to get flu shots despite a nationwide shortage of flu vaccine.

A spokeswoman for Knowles' Republican opponent, U.S. Sen. Lisa Murkowski, confirmed that the senator did get a flu shot before she returned from Washington, D.C.

Campaign spokeswoman Kristin Pugh said Murkowski shakes hundreds of hands a day and could easily spread germs. A Murkowski Senate aide said Murkowski got her shot before the flu shortage was known.

EXXON CAN'T PLEASE KNOWLES

Exxon Mobil sent another letter to the Tony Knowles Senate campaign Friday to try to disprove a Knowles claim that Exxon received a $6.5 billion tax break, with help from Sen. Lisa Murkowski.

Knowles has been running a campaign commercial saying that opponent Murkowski voted for a recent corporate tax bill that gave Exxon the break for overseas profits.

Exxon asked Knowles to stop running the ad, but Knowles said Thursday that he needed proof first.

Exxon tried to show more proof Friday with a letter about why Exxon would not benefit under the new law. There is "little likelihood" Exxon will owe taxes on overseas profits because they are reinvested in the foreign countries, the letter says. Exxon also gets tax credits from foreign taxes paid on overseas profits, which reduces the likelihood the new tax break would apply.

"We are a public corporation with a clear fiduciary responsibility to our shareholders to provide accurate information concerning our earnings," wrote Kenneth Freeman, Alaska public affairs manager. "As we advised your campaign more than once, your allegation is completely false."

But Knowles spokesman Matt McKenna said, "They're going to do anything to hide this and shut people up who are going to blow the whistle on them. They've picked sides in this Senate race."

Governor wants to build treatment facility for mentally ill kids

RESIDENTIAL: Nearly 650 youths were sent out of state last year.

By LISA DEMER
Anchorage Daily News

(Published: October 29, 2004)

Gov. Frank Murkowski announced an initiative Thursday to help hundreds of Alaska children receive mental health care in state instead of being sent away, as many are now.

Some relatives and mental health experts have said the treatment Outside damages children by sending them far from families, friends and all that is familiar. It's also expensive for the government.

Murkowski described the "Bring the Kids Home" effort in a speech before the Alaska Federation of Natives.

In a statement released later in the day, he said that "our young people had to leave their villages and their families to seek services Outside. That's unacceptable."

Programs also need to relate to the children's culture, the statement said. About half of the children sent away are Alaska Native.

The governor's initiative will cost more than $5 million with about $2 million of that coming through the state Mental Health Trust Authority, according to his office.

Funding for the project will be included in the governor's budget request to the Legislature for next fiscal year. If legislators approve the effort, the money will be invested in Alaska facilities and community programs, the governor's statement said.

The number of Alaska children sent to Outside residential psychiatric treatment facilities for emotional disturbances has increased dramatically, nearly 700 percent in a six-year period.

Last budget year, close to 650 Alaska children and teenagers went out of state at government expense for residential psychiatric treatment.

Alaska's Medicaid insurance program spent $31 million to treat children in out-of-state psychiatric facilities in the budget year ending June 30, 2003. That's 10 times the amount spent five years before.

Campaign Notebook

Last-minute attack ad draws bead on Tom Anderson

Daily News staff

(Published: October 30, 2004)

Campaign Notebook, with items about state and federal elections, will appear regularly during the campaign season.

A late-inning attack ad hitting mailboxes in East Anchorage and Muldoon on Friday accuses Republican incumbent Tom Anderson of counseling an unnamed lawmaker to "Vote 'Yes'" on a piece of pipeline legislation and remind oil companies about it later.

Anderson's Democrat opponent, Peggy Robinson, is sending the postcard out. It features the photo of a handwritten yellow "stickie" note with the words "vote 'yes' and remind Veco BP Phillips Exxon this summer." In what may be a second hand is written: "HB 277 5/13/03."

"Who looks out for YOUR interests?" Robinson's postcard says. "NOT Tom Anderson."

The ad suggests that Anderson, who was chairman of the House Labor and Commerce Committee during a hearing on the bill, was advising the other lawmaker to remind the industry of the vote in order to get financial support later.

Anderson said Friday he's unsure if the handwriting on the 18-month-old note is his, but acknowledged, "I've certainly written a lot of notes in session." However, he said he would never suggest that any legislator use a vote to solicit financial support.

"That's absolutely false," he said, calling the postcard "a classic last- minute attack."

"If she really believed the validity of these negative attacks, she could have brought these out sooner. It's not by accident she chose (a few) days before the election."

HB 277 would have loosened state regulation of pipelines and pipeline facilities. It was supported by the Murkowski administration but opposed by the Regulatory Commission of Alaska.

The bill moved out of the Anderson's committee by a 5-2 vote. But Anderson said he asked House Speaker Pete Kott a day later to return the bill to his committee and that he let it die there. He said he changed his mind about the bill after smaller independent oil companies opposed it.

Anderson said he doesn't recall writing the note. If it is genuine, there are legitimate explanations, he said.

He could have been advising a less experienced legislator to make sure oil executives knew it was Anderson who stalled the legislation.

"If I decided not to move the bill on, I was taking the heat," he said.

Robinson said another member of the committee provided the note to her campaign. She would not say who.

FBI - Stevens-78

194A-AN-13620

"Tom is going to vote how business interests want him to, and either get financial contributions or contracts from them," she said, "not necessarily in the best interests of the state or his constituents."

Anderson said he has always voted his conscience, "not on who contributes to my campaign."

STUDENTS BARELY ELECT BUSH

The Nader factor loomed large in a mock presidential poll in two Alaska high schools, taken as part of a national high school survey that has predicted every presidential winner since 1988.

Homer and Haines high schools were invited to join the 100 or so schools nationally taking part in the electoral exercise this week.

Alaska's three electoral votes went to George Bush, but just barely. Bush outpolled Kerry 185-178 in the Alaska schools, with 26 votes going to Ralph Nader. Kerry actually beat Bush in Homer, 149-147.

Nationally, the mock victory went to Kerry, who got 326 electoral votes to Bush's 212. Kerry drew 50 percent of the overall vote, with Bush getting 42.5 percent and Nader 4.4 percent. The voting exercise is organized every four years by Northfield Mount Hermon School, a western Massachusetts college prep school.

Maybe the biggest Alaska surprise came in the accompanying poll on six separate issues. One of the six national questions was: "Should the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge be protected from oil drilling?" Homer students in grades 9-12 voted yes, 182-139. Haines students also voted yes, 48-23.

Nationally, 80 percent of high school students opposed drilling in the refuge.

GOP FUNDING IRKS CRAWFORD

Democratic Rep. Harry Crawford on Friday filed a complaint with the Alaska Public Offices Commission that says the Alaska Republican Party has overspent the legal limit for Crawford's Republican challenger in District 21, Jeffrey Gonnason.

A political party can contribute $10,000 to a House candidate. The Anchorage Republicans Women's Club, a subsidiary of the Alaska Republican Party, donated $3,000 and the party contributed $7,000 in this race, for a total of $10,000, the complaint says.

On top of that, the party has paid for radio ads and mailers attacking Crawford. And, it mailed invitations to a campaign event that included Gonnason, according to the complaint.

Republican Party chairman Randy Ruedrich said the fliers and radio ads are independent, not coordinated with Gonnason and not subject to the $10,000 limit.

"It's something we've done in the past, and it's totally proper," he said. "It's a simple misunderstanding to file such an action."

Campaign notebook is a periodic feature during the election season. This installment was reported by Don Hunter, Tom Kizzia and Anne Aurand. They can be reached at dhunter@adn.com, tkizzia@adn.com and aaurand@adn.com.

KNOW YOUR CANDIDATES: Want to know where candidates stand on the issues? There's an easy way. The Daily News is partnering with Project Vote Smart, a nonpartisan group that helps get information about candidates to voters. About 70 percent of Southcentral legislative candidates completed an extensive survey on Alaska issues, and the results are online along with bio information and more. In House District 28, candidate Cody Downs participated; candidate Lesil McGuire refused. To see the issue surveys and more on the Nov. 2 election, go to www.adn.com/election04.

Alaska Ear
The Divine Appendage

(Published: October 31, 2004)

Alors, darlings. This needs to be over. The last week before any election produces piles of 11th-hour tips and "documented" accusations by and against various candidates. Maybe it's the weather or something, but this year it all seems more intense than usual. Nevertheless, some of it is amusing, which, as you know, is all Ear cares about.

At the top of the list are those two wonderful radio ads made and paid for by Anchorage lobbyist Bill Bobrick.

If you just read the news stories or listened to Uncle Ted's tantrum about the ads, Ear thinks you might have gotten the wrong idea. They are not anti-Ted. (It's not always all about you, Uncle).

They are an attack on Outside campaigners, especially the ones trying to sell that riff about a vote for Knowles being a vote to destroy Ted.

Since Ear is only in it for the laughs, it seems like a good idea to let interested earwigs listen to the ads themselves and decide if they're too much. Bobrick, who is a Knowles supporter but gave money to Frank Murkowski's gubernatorial campaign, pulled the ads when Tony asked him to.

Really, d'Ears, did someone think that would stop Ear? You can find them at adn.com/links.

• Who on earth designed Harry Crawford's latest campaign mailer, the one that talks about politicians dancing around the issues and fighting to get the job done despite all the "tap dancing" in Juneau, then illustrates it with a near caricature '40s type photo of two black people jitterbugging? Yikes!

• Is it true that Gov. Murkowski chief of staff Jim Clark's presumed vote for Bush is going to be canceled out by his wife's presumed vote for Kerry? An earwig received an e-mail from "Peace in our Lifetime" author Susan Skog, passed on by Susan Clark, urging that we "Visualize our Nation's wellness for 1+ min./day through Nov. 2nd. ... Give up focusing on Bush and visualize Kerry's growing strength," etc.

• A salute to Lisa's ad people for getting in the groove with readers of the Anchorage Press. Remember their cover feature last week about the lack of plumbing in the Bush and the headline: "Do Tony and Lisa give a crap?" Well, there's a Lisa ad in last week's paper that reproduces the headline and proclaims: "Lisa does!" Is this the first time the word "crap" has appeared in a political ad? Maybe.

FLYING FACTOIDS . . . Kudos to KUDO radio for its reaction to a snotty letter from a lawyer claiming to represent Lisa that demanded the station stop running a Knowles ad about a $6.5 billion tax break Exxon Mobil will allegedly get on foreign profits thanks to a bill supported by the Republican Congress, including Lisa. Totally untrue, said the letter signed by Timothy McKeever.

KUDO's Rich McClear was incredulous. Surely a lawyer knows it's illegal for a radio station to edit political ads. But he decided to check the facts. He called Standard & Poor's, which examined the $6.5 billion figure and reported it was essentially correct, McClear reports, although S&P said that was the maximum Exxon could realize in tax savings if it brought all its foreign profits home, which it might choose not to do.

FBI - Stevens-81

194A-AN-13820

OUT AND ABOUT . . . Can you believe they're still holding fund-raisers? Restaurateur Rick Manrique catered two of them Friday, one for Tony and one for Lisa. Really. And at the same time, although not at the same place. The one for Lisa raised $40,000, a sponsoring earwig reports.

ALL CLEAR NOW . . . University of Alaska Anchorage created a task force of faculty and staff to rename their buildings to better communicate function and make them more "collegiate."

The results: Beatrice McDonald Building has been renamed Beatrice McDonald Hall. The Cuddy Center is now Lucy Cuddy Hall. Eugene Short Building is now Eugene Short Hall. Clearer, right?

The Arts Building is now the Fine Arts Building. Why not Hall? The Omniscient Orifice has no idea.

The Campus Center is now The Student Union. The College of Arts and Sciences is now the Social Sciences Building, which is causing heartburn for the math department housed therein.

And, to clarify the function of the ever mysterious K Building: It's now called Professional Studies.

A QUESTION . . . Who is the romantic who elaborately carved letters into 15 or so pumpkins, spelling out "Will you marry me?" then set them up in Kincaid Park on Wednesday night with lit candles?

Ear hears it was a chef from the Kincaid Grill, but doesn't know for sure.

NOTABLE . . . The BBC is going to do a live interview with our visiting Nobel laureate (economics in 2002) Vernon Smith, who is doing his thing for a while at UAA. The program, for a show called "Analysis," will deal with behavioral economics.

DEFINITION . . . From the Earwit in the Valley:

True bravery is arriving home puking drunk after a late night out with the boys, then being assaulted by your wife with a broom and still having the guts to ask: "Are you cleaning, or were you flying somewhere?"

FINALLY . . . As always, Ear wishes to endorse Don Young, Congressman for All Alaskans except Ear and a Few Others. Ear would be desolate without Darling Don running around speaking in public. And this year, with Ramona gone, Ear would like to put in a word for Crash and Tom, the legislative bowling team.

Cornell Companies to present MacKay Building use proposal

Texas-based Cornell Companies' proposal to locate a psychiatric treatment center for adolescent boys in the MacKay Building annex, between Third and Fourth avenues and Cordova and Denali streets downtown, will be a topic of a presentation at a Fairview Community Council meeting Thursday. The public is invited.

In October, Fairview Community Council members Sharon Chamard and Noel Rea visited a psychiatric care center in San Antonio. It is similar in some ways to what is proposed for the MacKay annex, although it is bigger and coed. Chamard and Rea traveled, at Cornell Companies' expense, to San Antonio to tour the facility and talk to neighbors about its effect on the area.

For the most part, Chamard said, neighbors didn't report any problems.

"We talked to people walking dogs on the street and old folks sitting on benches (near the facility)," Chamard said. "It would have been a massive operation for them to hoodwink us."

Chamard and Rea are scheduled to report on their impressions and research to the community council at its regular meeting at 7 p.m. Thursday at Central Lutheran Church, 15th Avenue and Cordova Street. The council invited representatives for the developer and Cornell Companies to make presentations and answer questions.

Fairview Community Council President Darrel Hess (258-3714) also scheduled a special meeting to further discuss the topic at 11 a.m. Saturday at the Fairview Recreation Center, because time will be limited on Thursday night.

GOP regains power in state House

Monday, November 15, 2004 - by Lynn Melling

Channel 2 News

Anchorage, Alaska - It's been a political roller coaster ride this weekend. The Republican majority has reclaimed power in the state House of Representatives two days after a bipartisan coalition (left) announced it was taking over.

As they wait for the dust to settle, Republican majority members say their group is solid and strong. Both Republicans and Democrats are pledging to work together this coming legislative session. However, some bridges undoubtedly have been burned this weekend.

It all started Saturday night. Former House Speaker Pete Kott announced that enough Republicans had teamed up with Democrats to form a bipartisan coalition and claim control of the House, booting the Republican majority from power.

"We are here to announce that we have re-organized the House of Representatives under a Republican-led coalition, joined by my colleagues from the other side of the aisle," Kott said.

Under the coalition, Kott would keep his seat as speaker, Nancy Dahlstrom would take over as House majority leader, and Mike Hawker would co-chair of the Finance Committee.

"We've got the commitment," said Hawker. "I've got the strong commitment from my colleagues on both sides of the aisle."

But less than 48 hours later, Rep. John Harris of Valdez (right) was able to announce, "The House Republican majority leadership is intact."

Chris Wemer/KTUU

Harris said that every House Republican, with the exception of Kott, has committed to re-joining the Republican majority. The organization will stay the same, with Harris as speaker and John Coghill as House majority leader.

Chris Wemer/KTUU

Harris says the Republicans who strayed were duped. "It was a panic situation," he said. "They were called at the last minute, told the train was leaving the station. If they wanted to get involved, they needed to get involved now."

Harris says Democrat Ethan Berkowitz instigated the coalition and lied to Republicans about who had already joined it.

"I don't have a fault with him trying to organize with Republicans, in a straight up-and-down deal," Harris said. "But when misinformation is put out there to confuse our members on purpose, that doesn't sit well with me at all."

FBI - Stevens-85 194A-AN-[redacted]13620

Chris Wemer/KTUU

"If people needed to find excuses to hide behind now, and they want to claim that they didn't understand or don't recall exactly, that's their prerogative," Berkowitz (left) responded. "I appreciate the political courage of people who remember things the way they actually occurred."

Berkowitz said he can't take credit for the coalition, with at least 10 Republicans on board. "We had an opportunity to try and conduct politics differently in the state of Alaska," he said. "We could move beyond partisan politics."

Now with relationships badly bruised between Republicans and Democrats -- and within the Republican Party itself -- it seems the House has reorganized again.

Sources say the list of Republicans who had joined the coalition included Kott, Dahlstrom, Hawker, Lesil McGuire, Ralph Samuels, Tom Anderson, all of Anchorage, Peggy Wilson of Wrangell, Jim Elkins of Ketchikan, Bruce Weyhrauch of Juneau, Jim Holm of Fairbanks and Vic Kohring of Wasilla.

Channel 2 News

In another twist in this story, Republican Party chairman Randy Reudrich (left) sent out a letter to party members Sunday, urging them to talk the aforementioned representatives out of their decisions and reminding them of a party rule against forming a coalition with Democrats. The consequences are a loss of financial support and tough competition in the next primary.

Assuming that all these representatives stay on board with this plan, the new leaders will take their positions of power when they're sworn in January. Right now, the future positions of the Republicans who joined the coalition are in limbo.

The Divine Appendage

THE REST OF THE STORY . . . The news stories about Mayor Begich getting that elected official of the year award from the Alaska Municipal League in Fairbanks a week ago left out the best part, which several earwigs were happy to share:

So there was Mark, in the City on the Edge of Nowhere, doing his we're all in this together thing, when a guy raising money for the AML scholarship fund says, "Hey, if I get $500 in donations, will you let us hang you upside-down by the ankles like Ben Stevens wants to?" Or words to that effect.

Then Mark made a big mistake. He didn't say, "No, never, not a chance."

Turns out the guy already had $450. Getting $500 was not in doubt. So Mark made a deal. He promised to match whatever the guy raised if everyone agreed no ankle yanking.

The result? He'll be writing a $900 check to the scholarship fund from his personal account.

Ear bets Deborah was thrilled.

OUT AND ABOUT . . . It seemed like everyone in town who owns a tux turned up at the Sheraton last weekend for the Mayor's Charity Ball. Especially Democrats bent on banishing post-Nov. 2 blues. Former Gov. Tony Knowles and his wife, Susan, got a big hand. Bill Sheffield (he's still a Dem, right?) got diamonds and trips. The millionaire former governor won two of the big raffle prizes of the evening, a diamond ring and a cruise for two to Hawaii.

Well, at least they went to someone who really needs them. Not.

Sheffield apparently bought the chance on the diamond for his longtime significant other, who is a former wife of David McGuire, who is the father of Lesil McGuire. Earwigs in another part of the ballroom reported the reaction from the current Ms. McGuire, who is former TV babe Patty Nathanson.

"Oh, our ex-wife won the ring," she exclaimed.

Alors, darlings, one needs a scorecard.

KUDOS . . . To Assembly chairman Dick Traini and wife, Sandy, who celebrated their 37th wedding anniversary last week. Well wishes offered from the podium at the Mayor's Charity Ball were marred only slightly by being directed to "Dick and Nancy Traini."

A QUESTION . . . Speaking of Lesil McGuire, is it true that she and Tom Anderson only joined the abortive House coalition because they thought they were being invited to join a Juneau bowling league?

BTW, is Pete Kott really thinking of resigning? Why would he do that? They can't take away his vote and his salary, can they? Well, can they?

QUESTIONS . . . Is it true that Rep. John Harris, winner of the 36-hour regime change, is telling people he wants to run for governor? Ear thought he had his eye on Don Young's seat.

The fantasy listing of putative governor candidates has begun in earnest, thanks to Frank having begun his re-election campaign in earnest. He's been giving away money with both fists, to social causes, of all things: FAS prevention, substance abuse, grass-roots community organization, etc.

All right, let's do it: Andrew Halcro; John Binkley; Loren Leman, although his recent public ineptness in the No. 2 slot might be a problem; Rep. Eric Croft; Frank, of course; a guy whose name Ear keeps forgetting; Harris. And, if you can believe it (Ear doesn't) Tony Knowles.

Notice: This list was never real and will be outdated before you finish reading it.

ANOTHER QUESTION . . . Is it true that Alaska's own Kaladi Brothers coffee is a finalist in a competition to decide what coffee will be served on Alaska Airlines? Ear hears it's up against Starbuck's, kind of a David and Goliath competition. Ear hates to take sides but it does seem somehow right to have Alaska coffee on Alaska Airlines. Come on, David!

NO ANSWER NEEDED . . . How political can one neighborhood get? Word is mostly Republican consultant Art Hackney, back in town from a sojourn in D.C., is renting an Inlet View house next door to Bill Allen and across the street from Tony Knowles.

FLYING FACTOID . . . Citizens Against Government Waste has awarded Uncle Ted its 2004 "Whole Hog" award for "his $524 million in pork for Alaska." Plus, North Pole, pop. 1,570, got the "Taxpayers Get Scrooged" award for a $2.2 million grant, presumably also from Ted. But maybe it was Don or Lisa. Doesn't say. Doesn't say what it's for either.

Do these people think they're insulting Ted or us? Are they delusional? Way to go, Uncle.

OOPS . . . Did Alaska architects have their feelings hurt by Juneau Mayor Bruce Botelho's description of the judges for the build-a-Capitol contest?

"There will be a nine-person jury," Botelho told KTUU. "Two of them will be architects of nationwide stature. The other seven of them will be Alaskans."

ON THE MOVE . . . Municipal Prosecutor Bruce Roberts has resigned to take a job with the Homeland Security people. He'll be legal adviser to the TSA guys in Anchorage, Juneau and Fairbanks. Those are the people at the airports who invite you to take off your shoes.

John McConnaughy has been named to take his place.

LIGHTS, CAMERA . . . News outfits are busy lining up reporters for the coming legislative session. Your Favorite Good Morning Newspaper has snared Larry Persily, former deputy commissioner under Knowles and Murkowski, former small-town newspaper owner, former Anchorage Times capital reporter, yadda yadda.

And Ear hears Bill McAllister of Juneau, who can be found on radio, television, the Web and in an occasional ADN column, will be covering the session for Channel 2. Bill has also just been elected secretary of the 300-member Association of Capitol Reporters and Editors.

House leaders punish defectors

PENALTY: Hawker, Dahlstrom stripped of their committee chairmanships.

By SEAN COCKERHAM
Anchorage Daily News

WASHINGTON — Alaska State House Republicans have stripped Republican Reps. Mike Hawker and Nancy Dahlstrom of committee chairmanships as punishment for their role in a failed coup against House leaders.

The actions against the two came after House Republicans met behind closed doors until almost 1 a.m. Saturday to talk about what to do with the Republicans who were part of the coup. Participants in the meeting said Eagle River Rep. Pete Kott — the leader of the coup — was one of only two Republicans not to participate in the meeting. The other, Kodiak Rep. Gabrielle Ledoux, was out of the country.

House Majority Leader John Coghill, R-North Pole, said Kott might have been out of town — or he might have just decided to skip the meeting.

"(Kott) needs to come and talk to us," Coghill said.

Last weekend a splinter group of Republicans had joined with House Democrats to seize control of the state House and reinstall Kott as speaker of the House.

Kott, speaker for the past two years, had lost the job to Rep. John Harris, R-Valdez, in a post-election poll of the 28 members of the House Republican majority.

The coup lasted little more than 24 hours. Harris, his allies in the Legislature and the Republican Party quickly persuaded Republican rebels to return to the fold.

There has been little communication with Kott since the rebellion, Coghill said. He returned a phone call to Harris on Friday but Harris was on a plane at the time, Coghill said.

Kott has not returned repeated phone calls from the Daily News for the past week.

Most of the 10 or so Republicans said to be participants in the rebellion went unpunished Saturday. Coghill said coup organizers lured them into joining and told them Kott had the support to take over so they had better get on board. Coghill said the ex-rebels had to explain themselves to their fellow Republicans at the meeting.

"They had to eat their humble pie," he said.

Leading participants in the rebellion, such as Rep. Ethan Berkowitz, D-Anchorage, have denied that lawmakers were misled into joining the effort.

Coghill said the Republican meeting Friday night and early Saturday was emotional. He said the participants in the rebellion had to ask to get their positions back.

At one point, television cameras caught Rep. Lesil McGuire, R-Anchorage, emerging sobbing from the meeting. But McGuire, who was a part of the rebellion, kept her chairmanship of the Judiciary Committee and will be considered part of the House Republican majority leadership, Coghill said.

Coghill said there was "probably a little extra deference" for McGuire because she used to be a staffer for Kott and so was likely more willing to believe him.

Hawker and Dahlstrom lost chairmanships, Coghill said, because they joined Kott and Democratic leaders in a press conference last Saturday to announce the takeover. Coghill said they walked away from their jobs and shouldn't just get them back.

Neither Dahlstrom nor Hawker returned phone calls on Saturday. But Hawker said earlier last week that he expected to be punished for his participation.

Dahlstrom — who would have been majority leader had the coup succeeded — was stripped of her upcoming chairmanship of the House Committee on Oil and Gas.

That committee will likely play a large role in the upcoming legislative session as lawmakers debate what to do about a potential gas pipeline to the Lower 48.

Rep. Vic Kohring, R-Wasilla, will instead be the oil and gas chairman, a job he held the past two years. Coup participants had counted Kohring as being part of their rebellion. But Kohring — who did not return press calls seeking confirmation during the coup — said afterward that that was not true.

Hawker lost his chairmanship of the House Special Committee on Ways and Means. He has been a driving force behind the committee since it was founded two years ago to search for solutions to the state's chronic budget problems.

Hawker will, however, keep his coveted position as a member of the Finance Committee, which is responsible for putting together the state budget each year.

It could have been a lot worse for Hawker and Dahlstrom; they did not lose legislative staff and are not in danger of being kicked out of the majority, Coghill said.

Locals visit Texas facility

CORNELL: Council members check out San Antonio psychiatric center.

By ANNE AURAND

A youth psychiatric treatment facility in Texas, like one proposed for Anchorage, doesn't appear to hurt its San Antonio neighborhood, said two Fairview residents who checked the place out.

The proposal to put the treatment center in the MacKay Building annex on Fourth Avenue sparked outrage from some area residents. They said it would hurt downtown redevelopment, or make the neighborhood unsafe or unappealing.

So the company behind the proposal, Cornell Companies of Texas, paid for Fairview Community Council members Sharon Chamard and Noel Rea to visit a similar facility.

"I would not be opposed to Cornell here," Chamard told her community council Thursday. "I'd like it if there was something better. That said, I don't think that place would necessarily be bad."

But some business owners near the site of the proposed home for troubled boys say they worry it will hurt their businesses. Others said a boys center is not their first choice, but it is a long-awaited start at refreshing the derelict site between Third and Fourth avenues and Denali and Cordova streets.

Local residents' opinions are not the last word. The state still must certify Cornell's proposed 60-bed center.

The boys home is proposed as part of a renovation of the entire 2.4-acre property. It also holds the abandoned MacKay Building, which developer Marc Marlow says he plans to make into senior housing and market-rate apartments.

The tower redevelopment is not dependent on the Cornell facility going into the annex, Marlow said. Funding for the tower project is still awaiting approval.

Chamard, an assistant professor at the University of Alaska Anchorage Justice Center, said the San Antonio facility is about twice as big as the one proposed in Anchorage, and it's coed. It's laid out on larger grounds and is set farther back from the road. The San Antonio facility, in a suburban area with some new housing, looked "decent," she said, like an office building.

Chamard and Rea said they talked to people living around the Texas facility — at a seniors center, an apartment complex, gas stations and grocery stores. No one reported problems, they said, and some didn't know what it was.

Seven kids had escaped in the past year, but they didn't run out the door, Chamard said. They had permission to temporarily leave and never came back. Police reports didn't show any problems with crime associated with the area, she said.

Chamard and Rea said they only questioned how the place affected neighbors, not how the company runs its business or what goes on inside the treatment center.

Cornell, a national private prison company, has pushed for private prisons in Alaska and has drawn critics. Dee Hubbard of Sterling has been researching the company since it tried to build a prison near Kenai. She's the president of a Florida-based private prison watchdog group called Private Corrections Institute.

Hubbard accuses Cornell of spending too much on executive salaries and political campaign contributions and not enough on the people who work with youths. Financial problems and lawsuits pepper the company's record, she said.

At the Thursday meeting, Dennis Lavey, a co-owner of Days Inn near the annex, brought up examples of broken contracts and closed-down Cornell detention centers. He asked why Cornell didn't offer to take locals to one of the sites that has had problems.

A Cornell director, Michael Gilliland, acknowledged that the company has walked away from a few of its contracts; he did not elaborate. He said the San Antonio facility is the most like what's being proposed in Anchorage.

Local opinion is mixed.

Fairview Community Council member Katrina Grundahl said people need to remember that the facility is for troubled juveniles, not criminals.

"These kids aren't a threat to anybody," she said. "They need help."

That doesn't make area business people feel any better.

Basilio Gallo, who owns La Cabana across Fourth Avenue from the annex, is opposed to the boys home but doesn't believe his opinions matter. It's basically a done deal, he said.

Robin Alessi, owner of Kodiak Kafe, said she is "extremely opposed."

She wants something "vibrant" to happen on that site, and she said she's irked to know she'll help subsidize the tax breaks Marlow will get for renovating the property.

Mitch Lavey, who owns Days Inn with his father, Dennis Lavey, said he doesn't believe anything will happen on the long-defunct property.

"I have zero faith but I'm not opposed to it," he said. "Personally, any development is good development."

"I think only a few people are up in arms about this," said Fairview Community Council president Darrel Hess. "We'd like to see a nice bookstore or a restaurant, but I don't see anyone stepping up with any other proposals."

High court shuts soft money loophole

RULING: Supreme Court comes down in favor of disclosing donors' identities.

By DON HUNTER
Anchorage Daily News

A state requirement that political parties disclose the sources of so-called "soft money" contributions has been upheld by the Alaska Supreme Court.

The regulation, passed by the Alaska Public Offices Commission after the 2002 governor's race, closed a loophole that allowed political parties to collect unlimited amounts of money from undisclosed sources as long as it wasn't used to campaign directly for or against a particular candidate.

"Hard money," under the law, is money spent to advocate explicitly for or against a candidate. It is subject to laws that limit how much an individual or group can donate to a candidate or party, and that require the disclosure of contributors.

Soft money, however, has been used to pay for "issue ads" that indirectly attack or support candidates. Also, having soft money available to parties to pay for non-campaign purposes frees up hard money that would otherwise have to be spent for non-political purposes such as office upkeep rather than active campaigning.

In a ruling handed down Friday, the Supreme Court said, "Soft money can be used in numerous ways to evade hard money restrictions."

The issue arose during the 2002 state election cycle, when campaign finance reform advocates Mike Frank and David Finkelstein petitioned the APOC for an emergency regulation requiring disclosure of soft money contributors. Their petition said Alaska's major political parties had collected hundreds of thousands of dollars, "perhaps millions," in soft money contributions that were being used to affect state elections that year.

The campaign watchdog agency didn't issue the emergency order Frank and Finkelstein asked for, but it did adopt a regulation requiring soft money disclosure 10 days after the election. The regulation affected only political parties, not independent groups that also collect and spend soft money during campaigns.

The Democratic Party supported the regulation; Republicans opposed it. The Libertarian Party, and attorney Ken Jacobus, filed suit against it. Superior Court Judge Mark Rindner ruled the regulation legal in 2003, and the Libertarians appealed.

In last week's ruling, the Supreme Court said campaign finance disclosure "is intended to inform the electorate, deter actual corruption and avoid the appearance of corruption, and aid in the detection of violations of contribution and expenditure limits."

"Soft money disclosure" aids in that purpose "because it informs the electorate as to the sources of political party money," the court said. "It aids in the deterrence of corruption by exposing large contributions and expenditures to the light of publicity. And it provides information that aids the commission in enforcing the hard money contribution and expenditure limits ..."

The high court also noted that the Federal Election Commission requires disclosure of similar soft money donations to political committees involved in federal elections.

In an interview Tuesday, Finkelstein said the ruling is significant because it at least lets voters know where soft money used to affect political campaigns comes from. "The APOC gets credit for recognizing it for what it was, and the courts agreed," he said.

Jacobus said he wasn't surprised by the ruling, because he thought the legal question of whether the agency had the authority to adopt a regulation without explicit legislative authorization was a close one.

The court concluded the APOC had "implied authority" to regulate "generally because soft money and hard money aren't really separate from each other," he said.

Kott says better job could lure him away

LAWMAKER: Eagle River Republican says failure of coup was not surprising.

By SEAN COCKERHAM
Anchorage Daily News

(Published: December 21, 2004)

Rep. Pete Kott, left, last spoke publicly in November in announcing the coup that could have allowed him to retain his position as speaker of the House. JUNEAU -- Rep. Pete Kott, who dropped out of sight for a month after a failed coup to reinstall him as speaker of the Alaska House of Representatives, said this weekend he is thinking about quitting the Legislature.

Kott said he wasn't too surprised the coup failed; he figured all along that it had a 50-50 chance at best. Kott in the Legislature is a deal maker who has the air of a gambler about him -- all-black suits, bolo ties and laid-back drawl. He seemed resigned to the fact the cards didn't fall in his favor this time.

"That's the way the mop flops, I guess," he said.

Kott said he is making plans to relocate to Juneau for the four-month legislative session that begins Jan. 10. But he also said he was keeping his options open and might resign from office "if there is a better offer on the street."

The 12-year Republican lawmaker from Eagle River said he could be interested in a job with the state.

"I've been out looking, and we'll see what happens," Kott said in an interview Sunday with the Daily News, his first public remarks since the coup.

Kott last spoke publicly at a Nov. 13 press conference at which he and a splinter group of Republicans announced that they had joined with Democrats to seize control of the state House. The rebel coalition said it had enough support to topple incoming House Speaker John Harris and put Kott back in charge.

Kott served as speaker for the past two years but narrowly lost the job to Harris, a Valdez Republican, in a Nov. 5 poll of the 27 members of the House Republican majority.

The coup lasted less than 48 hours. Harris and his allies, who called up coalition members and urged them to abandon the rebellion, said its support was weak. The Republican Party of Alaska threatened participants with losing party support.

Kott dropped out of sight as the coalition crumbled and did not respond to media requests for interviews.

He re-emerged this weekend, wearing blue jeans and an old green fleece jacket, at a flooring job in Juneau. Kott owns a hardwood flooring business and won a bid to repair rain and water-fountain damage to the gymnasium floor in the Terry Miller Legislative Office Building.

Since the coup attempt, he said, he has been in Wisconsin at a flooring school and in Petersburg doing floors.

Kott said he did not orchestrate the coup. He said there were a "couple of Republicans" who were interested in it and brought him and the Democrats along.

He wouldn't name the Republicans but said they wanted to maintain an atmosphere of cooperation in the state House. Kott gained a reputation as speaker for reaching across the aisle and doing bipartisan work, which his supporters preferred over the vicious party-line fights in the Senate.

Kott said commitments from coalition members seemed "fairly firm" but withered under the pressure. He said he hasn't spoken to legislators who abandoned the coup to figure out just how it fizzled. But he indicated it might have had a better chance if it had been launched nearer the start of the legislative session -- with participants keeping closer tabs on one another.

"In this case, people start spreading out and they get pulled aside, and for whatever reason decided to shift gears," Kott said.

Kott has said he wants to remain a member of the Republican majority caucus and will meet soon with incoming Speaker Harris to discuss his future. Harris is honeymooning in Hawaii.

House Majority Leader John Coghill, R-North Pole, said he believes Kott would be welcomed back in the majority caucus.

"He is highly respected among Republicans, and I think there is a willingness to work with him," Coghill said.

But Coghill said Kott's role in the coup would need to be considered when figuring out his standing within the caucus; two other Republican members of the uprising lost their committee chairmanships as punishment.

Kott said he has no plans to push for plum committee assignments. He said he could use his legislative experience in a more behind-the-scenes role.

He said he probably would not have run for re-election this fall if he had known his fellow Republicans were going to replace him as speaker. Kott easily won another two-year term, defeating Alaskan Independence Party candidate Nick Begich with almost 64 percent of the vote. Kott said he now has an obligation to the district that elected him.

"That's kind of where the real dilemma is for me," Kott said. "Even if (a job) were to come open and be a good offer, it's going to be one of those decisions I will have to wrestle with."

There is also a potential legal issue. The state constitution says legislators have to wait a year after leaving office to get a state job that was "created, or the salary or emoluments of which have been increased, while he was a member" of the Legislature.

Gov. Frank Murkowski has twice gotten around that limitation by offering legislators state jobs but not officially creating the job until after the legislator had resigned from office.

Murkowski spokeswoman Becky Hultberg said the governor's office hasn't heard from Kott about wanting a job.

Public evaluates psychiatric plans

■ 2 PROPOSALS: Centers could keep young Alaskans near home.

By LISA DEMER
Anchorage Daily News

Two big corporations — one known for prisons, the other for health care — are pushing proposals to create residential psychiatric treatment centers for Alaska children and teenagers.

The public weighed in on the treatment center plans at a hearing Wednesday and offered some support, but also raised questions about staffing, medications and other operational issues.

Hundreds of Alaska children are sent Outside for residential psychiatric treatment because there is not enough help in the state. Cornell Cos. and North Star Behavioral Health System say they want to fill that gap and help children stay connected to their families and communities.

The work also can be profitable. Centers in Alaska last year received about $325 per child per day in residential psychiatric treatment; rates are lower Outside, but the Alaska children there tend to stay in care longer.

North Star operates a children's psychiatric hospital in Anchorage and residential psychiatric treatment centers for youths in Anchorage and Palmer. It wants to break ground in the spring for a $10 million, 60-bed treatment center for boys and girls next to North Star Hospital on DeBarr Road.

"We think it's a real positive proposal for the state. We've been working on it for years," James Shill, North Star chief executive officer, said at the hearing. North Star is owned by one of the country's biggest for-profit hospital operators, Universal Health Systems of King of Prussia, Pa.

Cornell is proposing to turn the MacKay Building annex into a 60-bed psychiatric treatment center for adolescent boys at a cost of more than $6 million.

"We want to make sure what we're providing is to help support a healing process," said Tim Marshall, a business development director for Cornell.

Cornell is a Houston, Texas-based operator of prisons and treatment centers for adults and juveniles, running about 70 facilities across the country. It operates halfway houses in Anchorage, Bethel, Fairbanks and Nome, according to its application.

Before the projects can go forward, the state must determine they are needed and will provide quality care. This is the first year residential psychiatric treatment centers have been required to obtain a "certificate of need." Health officials were concerned there could be a flood of such facilities trying to help "bring the kids home," so they successfully sought legislation to add the review.

The state could reject the applications, approve both, or approve one, and it could tack on special conditions of operation.

The questions are many. Is treating children in institutions the best approach? What about help near home for children in Bush Alaska? Will two new centers in Anchorage draw staff — and clients — from mental health agencies already in business? And are these the right companies to provide the care?

The state's oldest children's agency, Alaska Children's Services, operates two residential psychiatric treatment centers in Anchorage and decided not to expand such care, said Jim Maley, the agency's president and chief executive officer. Instead, it's offering more services to children in the kids' own homes and in therapeutic foster homes.

"Residential beds should never be constructed at the expense of community services," Maley said at the hearing.

He estimated that it would take another 200 mental health workers to staff 120 beds and said there are already shortages in this field.

At the most, a total of 60 new beds in Anchorage should be approved, not 120, Maley said.

Regina Manteufel, a Fairview activist, urged the state to make sure there are tight controls over such centers. The state must make sure children are not overmedicated and that new drugs are not tested on them, she said. Workers will need to undergo thorough background checks, she said.

The Disability Law Center of Alaska already is looking into complaints at North Star Hospital, which provides inpatient psychiatric care in Anchorage and at its long-term residential treatment centers, lawyer Edie Zukauskas said at the hearing.

The law center is investigating complaints from parents, state workers and advocates for children about excessive medication of children, use of restraints and difficulties in working with parents, she said at the hearing.

A psychiatrist from the University of Washington looked into the complaints for the law center and found that children were being frequently tranquilized. The report by Dr. Kathleen Myers also found that there were 62 incidents of children being strapped down from June to August and 121 incidents of children being restrained by someone holding them.

Many of the problems are the result of understaffing or inadequately trained staff, Zukauskas said. The law center has forwarded the report to the state Department of Health and Social Services, which has asked the federal government for advice on what to do, said Dr. Dick Mandsager, director of the Division of Public Health.

North Star chief executive Shill and medical director Daniel Mardones said after the hearing that the care is excellent and in line with standards for psychiatric hospitals. The hospital is accredited by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Health Care Organizations and is licensed by the state, they said.

Children admitted to the psychiatric hospital can be violent, Mardones said. Some are sedated or restrained to keep them from hurting themselves or another. In addition, the Washington state psychiatrist may have not been aware of difficulties in treating Alaska children, such as those with fetal alcohol disorders, Mardones said.

The use of restraints has dropped 19 percent in a year, he said. In Alaska, even just holding a young child who runs to follow his mother as she leaves is considered a physical restraint, he said.

Cornell also drew criticism at the hearing. Dee Hubbard of Sterling has been researching the company since it tried to build a private prison in Kenai and now is president of a watchdog group called Private Corrections Institute.

But as she tried to lay out her concerns about Cornell's record with juveniles in other states, the state official conducting the hearing cut her off.

"We're not here to talk about Arkansas," David Pierce, the certificate of need coordinator, said. He later apologized for cutting her off.

Hubbard is submitting written documentation of problems with juvenile treatment and detention facilities in Arkansas, Pennsylvania, Colorado and South Dakota.

For instance, a detention center in South Dakota closed in August just three months after opening when the state refused Cornell's demands for a rate increase of more than $50 a day, and a treatment center at the site never opened, according to news reports. Investors have blasted the company's performance, the Houston Chronicle has reported.

Marshall, the Cornell representative, said the company is on stable financial ground and is committed to the Alaska project.

As of August, 456 Alaska children and teens were being treated in psychiatric centers Outside, according to North Star. Residential psychiatric treatment capacity in Alaska is about 120 children at any time.

At the hearing, a mother spoke up in support of more psychiatric centers in Alaska. Fatima Hoger said her 17-year-old daughter is in treatment in Texas.

"I'm here to testify and say it's time," Hoger said. "I want my daughter home."

Pierce, of the state Department of Health and Social Services, is reviewing the applications. He will make a recommendation to Commissioner Joel Gilbertson by Dec. 14. Gilbertson will make the final decision on the certificate of need.

The Divine Appendage

HI, FRANK ... Longtime and, alas, former Daily News columnist Mike Doogan started his new job Tuesday as press aide to the legislative minority, meaning the Democrats.

Yes, it's true, darlings. And Ear can hardly bear it. How much fun will this be? Presumably he will write press releases responding to the antics of Frank and The Republicans. Just like when he was a columnist.

When Ear chatted with Mike, he seemed to be controlling his excitement at the new assignment. He's less than thrilled at the prospect of moving to Juneau for four months. And he mentioned the honor of being the only person in Alaska history to take a state job paying less money than his old job.

Irritated. That's the way we want him.

POEM FOR PETE ...

So what's the story with Pete Kott?
Is he resigning or is he not?
He's lost his might
He's vanished from sight
And Anchorage R's are eyeing his spot.

It's all talk so far, d'Ears. The rumor mill is spitting out Anna Fairclough, Dan Kendall and Deborah Luper as wannabe replacements. Ear predicts. Pete isn't going anywhere unless he can line up some lucrative lobbying gigs, presumably in addition to Veco.

BUMMER ... Did you see all those pictures of Catherine Stevens breaking a bottle on the bow of the new state ferry Chenega? Earwigs report the broken bottle cut her hand and she had to go to the hospital for stitches instead of to the christening party.

STAND-UP ECONOMICS ... When the fall 2004 Revenue Source Book came out last week, everyone went for the oil price section, skipping over Ear's favorite part, namely the "Dedication," which read:

"... dedicated to Chuck Logsdon, who retired sometime between July and November 2004 as our chief petroleum economist. Chuck, who estimates he spent between 22.6 and 29.4 years at the Department of Revenue, issued more oil price and production forecasts than anyone in Alaska history.

"His insights, dedication — and probably his last long-term forecast — will all be missed. Thank you, Chuck, for your years of service."

Alors, darlings. Three economist jokes in a row. Who says they don't have a sense of humor?

AND NO TRANS FATS ... A DEC situation report issued Tuesday on the Selendang Ayu oil spill offered a bizarre break from oiled birds and otters:

"One beach in Skan Bay, which was previously believed to be oiled, was found instead to be covered with soybeans."

SIGNING OUT ... Earwigs with inky fingers report Alaska Newspapers Inc. is ceasing production of the Anchorage Chronicle after the Dec. 30, 2004, edition. "We have no plans to sell it and we will be concentrating on the strengthening of our other publications," said the e-mail.

Three economist jokes in a row. Who says they don't have a sense of humor?

MERRY XMAS ... Governor Frank surprised and delighted his Anchorage staff by throwing them a lovely Christmas party Wednesday at Dianne's restaurant on the ground floor of the Atwood Building. The big debate was whether alcohol would be served since it was technically not in a state office.

It wasn't. But the hot cider was fine.

SOUND TRACK ... Guess who sings with Alice Welling, Queen of the Fly by Night revues, on Kurt Reimann's newest Alaska album? None other than Mr. TV News himself, John Tracy. ADN writer Josh Niva called the cut a "sassy little rendition of 'Baby, It's Cold Outside.'"

MUSH ... Norman Vaughan is celebrating his 99th birthday today by raising money to pay for a trip to the top of Mount Vaughan next year on his 100th birthday. Earwigs will remember the peak named after him is in Antarctica and commemorates his adventures as a dog handler for Admiral Byrd's South Pole expeditions.

The party is open to all fans at the Anchorage Marriott Downtown on Seventh Avenue. It costs $49.99 and runs from 6:30 to 9 tonight.

MIRACLE SEASON TALE ... Ellen Arvold, owner of Out of the Closet downtown, took a bag of expensive designer clothes home from the shop, intending them for the dry cleaner the next day. Alas, she left the bag close enough to the trash that her son, doing his take-out duty, put it out for the garbage man along with everything else.

Ellen called hubby Chip Trantina, catering manager at the Cook and Bede's brother, the next morning in a panic. Some of them were one-of-a-kind designs by people like Chanel and Gucci, she said. The garbage had already been picked up so Chip called Solid Waste, which located the driver, who said he hadn't dumped his load yet but was on his way. Ellen and Chip dove into boots and Carhartts and raced for the dump.

Everyone was great, reports Chip. The driver dumped his truckload and staff put cones around it to ward off the tractors. Chip and Ellen slogged around knee-high in garbage for an hour but finally found the clothes. The plastic bag was intact, he reports.

"Luckily it was 11 degrees," Chip said. The dog poop and lime-green paint and boozy bottles were all frozen and the smell wasn't that bad.

Chip reports the following flying factoid: Half of Anchorage uses white plastic garbage bags. Half uses black.

One significant face missing from Juneau

Friday, January 7, 2005 - by Bill McAllister

Jason Kohler/KTUU-TV

Juneau, Alaska - The legislative session begins Monday, but where is outgoing House Speaker Pete Kott? Verified Kott sightings have been few and far between since the Eagle River Republican was ousted from his leadership role just after the November election. But an aide says Kott will be sworn in for another term Monday.

As the final weekend before session gets underway, the capital has come alive with the ritual sights and sounds of January. This evening, perhaps half or more of the 60-member Legislature has found his or her way to Juneau.

But one absence remains conspicuous.

KTUU file

Few people have seen or spoken with Pete Kott, whose term as House speaker will end Monday morning. In a vote of the new House Republican Caucus after the November election, Kott was narrowly defeated for speaker by John Harris of Valdez. He then tried to assemble a coalition of Republicans and Democrats to regain the speakership.

But the coalition failed under pressure from other Republicans and the party leadership.

There were hard feelings at the time, but now Speaker-designate Harris says he would welcome Kott back.

"I want to make full use of the speaker, Speaker Kott, if he will make himself available for that," Harris said.

Speculation has been rampant that Kott would resign his seat. But his chief of staff says it isn't true.

"He's been a loyal supporter of his district since he began in 1992, I think it was, and he looks to carry forward with his people again," said Judy Ohmer (right), Kott's aide.

Jason Kohler/KTUU-TV

FBI - Stevens-101

As speaker, Kott was noted for his bipartisan approach, especially in 2004. So Democrats also want to know what role he will play this year.

"In a sense how they treat Pete Kott, I guess, is going to be a litmus test of whether we're going to have a bickering session or a getting-things-done session," said Rep. Eric Croft (left), D-Anchorage.

194A-AN-13620-M-45 ~~194A-AN-13620-177~~ 1-14-05

Harris says he wants to deal fairly with everyone in the House, including Democrats and including Pete Kott.

"Some ideas that would make Kott a very valuable member of our group," said Harris (below).

The coming week should indicate whether or not there's a house divided.

Jason Kohler/KTUU-TV

Judy Ohmer says his absence really isn't that mysterious. Kott has a flooring business and has been doing a different kind of "floor sessions" this week in Bethel and Sitka. Ohmer says Kott is in Anchorage tonight for a military function, and he will fly into Juneau Monday morning in time to get sworn in.

PARTY ON . . . Wasn't the inauguration lovely, darlings. The Alaska delegation feted Alaska fans at a gala for about 300 held in the Library of Congress. Invitation only, of course. Gate-crashing earwigs report there were some actual Alaskans there, including Randy Ruedrich, Bill Allen, Jerry Hood, Frank and Nancy, Mary Hughes, Larry Baker (where has he been?), and Gregg Renkes, who was described as "working the room like a D.C. lobbyist."

And the point is?

CHORAL BEEF . . . Who says our guys in Juneau don't take on the tough stuff? Sen. Gary Wilken, R-Fairbanks, is handing out little laminated cards to his brethren. The cards list all the senators, split into two groups: pausers and not pausers.

What Gary means is those senators who pause periodically during recitation of the pledge of allegiance to the flag each morning and those who barrel through taking only one breath, or maybe none.

Huh, you might say?

It seems the senators take turns leading the pledge. Some pause. Some don't. With just a glance at the handy-dandy cards, the rest of the chamber knows whether to say,

"Ipledgeallegiancetotheflagoftheunitedstatesofamericaandtotherepublicforwhichitstandsonenationundergodindivisiblewithlibertyandjusticeforall."

Or: "I pledge allegiance to the flag (pause) of the United States of America (pause) and to the Republic (pause) for which it stands (pause) one nation (pause) under God (pause) indivisible with liberty and justice for all."

Or something like that.

Earwigs report Wilken thinks it's messy and undignified for the senators to stumble all over each other instead of delivering the pledge in unison. He created the pause-no pause cards to end the problem.

Said one bemused senator, "He did it in the last Legislature also. This is not abnormal behavior anymore."

A PUZZLE . . . How did Pete Kott end up head of Legislative Affairs? First Pete lost a fight for House speaker to John Harris but was given Legislative Affairs as a consolation prize. Then he was speaker for five minutes during that embarrassing coup. Then he was sulking and in the dog house after the coup fell apart and Carl Gatto, who remained loyal during the coup, was given Legislative Affairs. Then all of a sudden, turncoat Pete has Legislative Affairs back and loyal Gatto is out.

So what's the lesson here, darlings?

Ear hears a number of R-Veco legislators were encouraged to rehabilitate Pete. Did one of them really say, "It's my Christian duty to give him another chance?"

ALL TOGETHER NOW . . . Let's guess why long-time BP spokesman Paul Laird really quit his job as communications director for Governor Frank after two weeks? It's probably just a coincidence that he bailed right after the governor dropped his little ELF bomb on the oil industry.

Right.

VOICELESS . . . Speaking of Frank's ELF, earwigs are tickled by the absence of any comment on the issue by the people who run the Voice of the Times page in the Daily News. Frank is their guy big time. Oil is their industry, even bigger time.

Maybe they can't write anything because their heads exploded.

ON THE MOVE . . . Valley earwigs report Matanuska Electric Association has hired back Michael Pauley as its spokesman. He worked on the campaigns of Loren Leman and Mike Miller so he's real experienced at running political organizations.

NOT MOVING . . . Rep. Carl Moses has been excused from the current session to date so he can tie up the sale of his hotel in Unalaska and work on oil spill operations there. Carl already holds the record as the only legislator in state history to run for his seat in three different political parties and get elected each time. Now he may hold the record for the elected legislator who has gone the longest without being sworn in.

KUDOS . . . Former Anchorage Assembly member (and Daily News reporter) Charles Wohlforth's "The Whale and the Supercomputer" has been named one of the best books of 2004 by Library Journal.

A QUESTION . . . Was it too tres cynical of Ear to laugh upon learning that Gov. Frank and Nancy Murkowski flew to Seattle on their way to the inauguration on a commercial plane, in coach seats? Their seats were way in the back, reports someone who was on the flight, so everyone saw them trek the length of the aisle.

OK, let's examine this. Are we supposed to feel sorry that he has to hang with us peons and buy him a jet? Or do we think he's figured out that putting his jet envy in the headlines again, right as he begins his campaign for re-election, might have been a bad move?

Earmites report the governor stopped off at the boat show. Is he shopping for a new yacht?

ON THE MOVE . . . Jessica Bury, wife of muni lobbyist Bill Bobrick, has been offered a scholarship to the Mayo Clinic Medical School and will be off this fall to become a doctor. She and Bill plan to do the long-distance relationship thing. Bill was all right with the idea, looking forward to being married to a rich M.D. Then Jessica told him she plans to work with the poor.

Don't worry, Bill, medical school will cure her of that idea.

RESULTS . . . For earwigs watching the tumultuous doings of the North East Community Council, Peggy Robinson and Bill Wielechowski held on to their seats against an effort by the Anchorage Baptist Temple/Tom Anderson coalition to unseat them. Earmites report it was close.

STRIP PLEASE ... Citizens having business at the state courthouse Monday arrived to find new security measures that required them to put their coats through the X-ray machine and take off their shoes.

Ear isn't sure (it's a secret of course), but it looked like the guards were no longer allowed to just wand someone who beeped, but had to force them to disrobe instead.

Well, d'Ears, you can imagine the mess between 8 a.m. and 8:30 a.m. on the first day, when just about everyone showed up with just enough time to get to where they were supposed to be. The result was a long line and grumbling that included the phrase, "The judge is waiting." And then attorney David Weber stuck a blow for the oppressed that was still being celebrated two days later.

The trouble apparently started when Weber's belt beeped and he was told to take it off. That was one step too far in what Weber calls "the illusion of protection." Could he be hiding a deadly weapon in his belt?

Weber told Ear there was some discussion about nine motions or muscle flexes or something being required to remove a belt, but only five to remove a pair of pants. So that's what he did. He took off his pants, walked through the metal detector in his underwear, and calmly re-robed.

Earwigs loved it, but some normal people were scandalized. "He shouldn't do that," said one observer. "He's a lawyer." Of course, that just made earwigs laugh harder.

NAMING NOWHERE ... Sen. Gary Stevens of Kodiak has introduced a resolution to change the name of Fairbanks.

No, Ear doesn't know why a Kodiak guy would do this. You ask him.

"Whereas there is located at the confluence of the Tanana and Chena Rivers in this state a city of pride and prosperity that has long been suffering under the burden of a non-indigenous name ... blah blah blah ... Be it resolved by the Alaska State Legislature that in response to the pleas of the people of the aforementioned city for freedom from the onus of a name forced upon them by an indifferent and unfeeling federal government, the legislature does hereby endow that city with a name that is its natural inheritance -- Barnette's Cache."

Darlings, Ear couldn't make this stuff up. Check the bill search function on the legislative home page. The routing number is SCR-4. Obviously these guys don't have enough to do.

FBI - Stevens-106

FYI, Barnette founded Fairbanks and it was originally named Barnette's Cache. But according to historians, he was the one who convinced people to rename it Fairbanks after Charles Fairbanks, an Indiana senator who later became vice president under Teddy Roosevelt.

ON THE MOVE ... Former ASEA rep Alison Reardon has been named legislative director for SEIU, the largest and fastest growing union in North America. "Legislative" as in U. S. Congress. She lives in Washington, D.C., and will orchestrate the union's congressional activities. Given what's being written about her boss, SEIU president Andrew Stern, it should be an exciting job.

Exposure to cold water, contagious diseases, body fluids and sharp implements is not required. Neither will he have to grapple with or restrain people, lift more than 50 pounds or be able to distinguish tastes. And thank goodness for that.

However, he will occasionally have to walk, stand, bend, squat, kneel, climb, push, pull and be exposed to wild animals. "Seeing objects peripherally" is not essential, according to the form. Which means tunnel vision is OK.

And that's also a good thing.

REST OF THE STORY.... State Rep. Tom Anderson called to say he didn't have anything to do with the recent Northeast Community Council election that saw Bill Wielechowski and Peggy Robinson keep their board seats in the face of opposition from the Republican Party and the Anchorage Baptist Temple. And Ear believes him. Really.

"If I had anything to do with it, they would have lost," said the irrepressible Tom from Juneau. Earwigs will remember Peggy ran against him last year for his Muldoon House seat and may do so again.

NOTABLE ... Did everybody catch Governor Frank last week on HBO's "Real Time," holding his own very nicely with Bill Maher? The governor appeared via satellite from Anchorage. The subject was ANWR of course. Frank was for opening it. Bill was against. The audience seemed half and half, judging by the applause. Frank was all, let's just find out if there's a bunch of oil there, using "a very small shovel" to explore. Bill was all, it's not enough oil to matter so we need to find alternative energy sources instead of drilling.

At the end, Maher, a PETA board member, couldn't resist a jab against the Iditarod. He suggested the race could be eliminated because Alaskans have already proved that "if you hit an animal, it will run."

"The dogs are bred for it," Frank said.

"That's what they said about slavery," said Maher.

REST OF ANOTHER STORY ... Earwigs who count neither carbs nor calories report the results of the weigh-in mentioned here last week are as follows: Rep. Les Gara, no change. Rep. Ethan Berkowitz gained four pounds. Darlings, wasn't this supposed to be a weight loss contest?

Whittier drops private prison plans

CORNELL COS.: State now can pursue its own prison near Sutton.

By TOM KIZZIA
Anchorage Daily News

The city of Whittier is cutting its ties to Cornell Cos., a private corrections operator, finally ending a political battle over new prisons that has held Alaska in gridlock for a decade.

The Whittier City Council voted 5-1 last week to drop its three-year effort to win state money for a huge, privately run prison in the isolated port town. A Cornell spokeswoman said that's the end of the line for the Houston-based corrections company.

"At this point we're not going to be pursuing anything," Cornell communications director Lisa Tauser said. "We're disappointed but we respect their decision."

Private prison advocates have been wielding influence in Juneau since 1995, as proposals for private correctional facilities in Anchorage, Delta Junction, Kenai and Whittier found favor among legislators. Two prison deals were approved, and two others made it through the state House. Competing proposals to build state-run facilities were pushed aside.

But each private plan eventually died, falling victim to local opposition, resistance from correction-worker unions and skepticism from some state officials.

Meanwhile, the number of state prisoners shipped to the Lower 48 because of inadequate space in Alaska has grown to 760.

The demise of the Cornell private prison shifts attention in Juneau to plans for a big state-built prison near Sutton in the Matanuska-Susitna Borough. Money to build such a prison is likely to be a key element in budget negotiations this spring between the Legislature and Gov. Frank Murkowski.

The state has said it wants to build a facility of 1,200 to 2,200 beds. Even a 1,200-bed prison would be twice the size of the state's biggest existing prison, the Spring Creek maximum security facility in Seward.

The cost of such a prison has been estimated at $90 million to $200 million, state officials said. One possibility under discussion has been for the Mat-Su Borough to sell bonds to build the prison, paying them off with guaranteed annual payments from the state.

Nothing is settled, Murkowski spokeswoman Becky Hultberg said.

"The governor understands the need for a new detention facility," she said. "We're continuing to evaluate alternatives."

The state could also do nothing and continue to send prisoners to Arizona at a current cost of around $14 million a year. That's cheaper than running a new mega-prison here, which last year was expected to cost as much as $40 million annually.

Advocates of prison construction in Alaska have said it is foolish to export money and jobs to the Lower 48 to house the prisoners. They also argued that inmates' chances for rehabilitation are much better if they are kept closer to families and programs geared to Alaskans, especially imprisoned Alaska Natives.

Whittier city officials started traveling to Juneau in 2002 to make those arguments after Cornell approached them about a prison in the town of 180 year-round residents. The state House approved a Whittier prison that year, but the measure stalled in the Senate.

The Whittier council has seen a big turnover since then. Developing a comprehensive plan pushed the new council toward a future of recreation and tourism, Mayor Lester Lunceford said.

"Small and shoreline-poor as Whittier is, why would we want to use that area at the head of the bay for a prison?" Lunceford said Tuesday.

Cornell continues to play a role in Alaska, operating halfway houses for the state. Cornell is also working with the state to develop a juvenile psychiatric treatment facility in the old MacKay Building annex in downtown Anchorage.

Cornell has undergone turmoil nationally in the past year, with a hedge fund buying up stock and pushing to sell the company. The roiling led recently to the ouster of chief executive officer Harry Phillips Jr., whose name will live on here in the campaign contribution files of the Alaska Public Offices Commission.

Critics have long maintained that political contributions and high-priced lobbying played a major role in the Legislature's deliberations over prison space. Debate centered on whether inmates could be housed reliably, and more cheaply, in a facility designed and run by a for-profit firm. The stakes were high. A 25-year prison deal, worth $1 billion, would have been the largest state-private contract in Alaska history.

The earliest plans were promoted by Allvest, a local halfway-house management firm run by former legislator Bill Weimar. Allvest sold its prison interests to Cornell in 1998, in the midst of planning for a private prison in Delta Junction. The sale price of $21 million included the "goodwill" value of the future prison, according to the company's annual report.

The Legislature approved a Delta prison, but a local political shift resulted in the city backing out. The private consortium led by Allvest/Cornell sued. Delta Junction finally settled last October, paying the consortium $1.25 million, according to city finance officer Dave Zimmerman. The Legislature loaned Delta the money for the settlement.

The Kenai Peninsula Borough then teamed with Cornell and its high-powered design and construction allies to win state approval for a private prison in Kenai, only to be slapped down by local voters in a landslide.

Lurking around each successive plan were complaints about backroom dealing.

"What I see, over and over, is repeated sole-source, prearranged, heavy-money deals that go to specific contractors," Rep. Eric Croft, D-Anchorage, complained in a hearing last year. "It's never been a clean competitive proposal."

As late as last year, the private/Whittier and state/Mat-Su prisons were deadlocked. Compromise legislation was passed allowing the state to develop a prison with either group. But the bill saddled Cornell with new qualifications for guards and requirements for competitive bidding. Cornell's interest in the Whittier project withered after that, spokeswoman Tauser said.

Sen. Lyda Green, R-Wasilla, said last year's law will allow the state to go forward now to work with the Mat-Su on bonding for a prison, perhaps one built in smaller, less expensive increments. Such bonds would be paid off through the state's operating budget rather than as a single big-ticket capital project.

Green, co-chairwoman of the Senate Finance Committee, was cheered Tuesday by news that Cornell had dropped out of the game.

"I think it probably clears the air and helps us go ahead," she said.

FBI - Stevens-109

History of private prisons in Alaska

Plans to build the first private prison in Alaska have set off controversy in recent years:

- APRIL 1997: Corrections Group North, a partnership between halfway house operator Allvest and oil field service company Veco, withdraws plans for controversial 768-bed medium-security prison in South Anchorage. Project is scrapped days before city voters reject the plan by a 2-to-1 margin.
- JANUARY 1998: Voters in Delta Junction approve plan by Allvest to build 800-bed prison on former Fort Greely Army post.
- AUGUST 1998: National prison company Cornell Corrections Inc. buys Allvest for $21 million.
- SEPTEMBER 1999: Delta Junction City Council repeals contract with Cornell/Allvest.
- OCTOBER 2001: Voters on the Kenai Peninsula defeat a proposal, backed by Cornell, for an 800-bed private prison by a 3-to-1 margin.
- MAY 2002: Plan allowing private prison in Whittier, proposed by Cornell, passes House and stalls in Senate during Legislature's closing days.
- MARCH 2005: City of Whittier cuts ties to Cornell, and company says it has no plans to pursue a private prison in the state.

Ben Stevens:

Legislator or lobbyist?

What's the difference between a legislator and a lobbyist? A recent article in the Juneau Empire raises that question in regard to the propriety of Senate President Ben Stevens' legislation reallocating Gulf of Alaska ground fisheries. The article cites the senator's financial disclosure which evidences he's on the payroll as a consultant to several fisheries interests for a total last year of a whopping $174,200. Do any of those interests stand to profit from the senator's bill? I have no idea.

However, further examination of his disclosure forms show that the senator's employers also included not just the state of Alaska, which paid him $28,040 last year, but Veco Corp., the vocal cords behind "The Voice of the Times." Veco not only hired him for $47,500 but lavishly lauded him in an editorial for having the courage to do its bidding by introducing legislation that would invade the heretofore chaste Permanent Fund earnings absent a public vote. Since this has long been a prime objective of Veco, perhaps it will accord him a pay raise as well.

On the surface these awards make Scott Ogan's involvement with Evergreen seem penny ante. Yet surely there has to be a substantial difference or fellow legislators would have screamed in envy, if not outrage.

The Veco "Voice of the Times" has lusted for years after Permanent Fund money, realizing that once it is no longer virginal further assault will be far easier. If they can get into your prospective dividend dollars they believe, with justification, pressure for increasing oil taxes will decline along with the possibility of, heaven forbid, an income tax — even one capped at no more than your dividend. Instead they would impose a "head tax" on all and only Alaskans by reducing your prospective dividends.

Many of our so-called "conservative" legislators seem delighted that finally someone has had the "courage" to penetrate Permanent Fund earnings without the public consent the governor has said he would demand. Certainly $47,500 should buy a lot of courage, especially when the buyer's interests are compatible with one's own. Certainly no "conflict of interest" can be charged between Veco and Ben.

What started out as a relatively modest $300 million plus nonconsensual ravishing of the once virginal Permanent Fund earnings has allegedly ballooned to about $1 billion as more and more legislators line up in lustful anticipation of trophies to take home to their districts.

Apparently, many hope that in the flare of massive capital spending for "motherhood" programs, such as education, voters will be blind to the fact that many will have broken faith with constituents.

The sad thing is it's so unnecessary. There is a simple and proper way to have the Permanent Fund help provide essential government services. That's by creating a POMV, which would split up to 5 percent of the fund's annual market value, 60 percent for dividends and 40 percent for public services. The governor has indicated support for this front-door approach and opposition to attempts to crack open the back door without voter permission.

Such could even be done this year by statute so long as the corpus of the fund was not invaded. If the $600 million then made available were to go out in Wally Hickel's proposed "community dividend," no public vote would be required. After all, the governor's promise was that he'd demand such a vote for any uses other than dividends, therefore the community dividend would require no such vote, save at the community level.

So, to get back to the original question as to just what the difference is between a lobbyist and a legislator, my answer remains: "Darned if I know." All I do know is that if as Senate president I had been paid not $47,500 but even a mere $47.50 by, say, the Sierra Club for "consulting," no one would more loudly scream "conflict of interest" and demand my impeachment than would the Veco "Voice of the Times."

The Divine Appendage

CHEER UP ... With last week's weather, it's almost believable. Men's Health magazine has published a list of America's happiest and most depressed cities and Anchorage is No. 12 on the happy list.

The ranking is allegedly based on the sale of anti-depressants, on suicide rates and the number of days inhabitants reported being depressed.

OK, so they obviously did their counting last summer. Or talked to Alaskans on vacation in Hawaii. Or maybe it's just that we medicate with booze, not Zoloft. Or we just lied.

Actually, the first clue the ranking might be bogus was the fact that three of the four happiest cities are in Texas (Laredo, El Paso and Corpus Christi) and the other one is Jersey City. Get real.

Buffalo, Bakersfield and Fresno are all happier than we are.

The most depressed city in America is Philadelphia, followed by Detroit, St. Petersburg, St. Louis and Tampa.

ON THE OTHER HAND ... A financial advisory newsletter called BottomLine/Tomorrow is running the following warning to "savvy" travelers in its spring issue:

"Tourist Traps to Avoid ... Alaskan cruises. Sadly, the ports of call have become fake places that are designed to take as much money from tourists as quickly as possible."

A better bet for cruise tourists are the ships and schooners sailing the New England and Canadian coast or the "spectacular fjords of Scandinavia," the newsletter says.

Other "traps" include "overbuilt Caribbean islands like Nassau," "Hawaiian 'fantasy' resorts," "Venice in summer" and "Aspen in winter."

SET IT STRAIGHT ... All right, darlings, it goes against Ear's nature but the Divine Appendage must come to the defense of Crash McGuire, aka Chair of the House Judiciary Committee. It's true Crash is supporting the effort to lower the cap on non-economic jury awards in lawsuits against doctors. She says she's against all those nuisance suits filed over small matters by people just after money.

It's also true that she offered to settle for $325,000 a personal injury lawsuit, which includes claims of "emotional and mental distress," filed under her married name (McCracken) against attorney David Shoup and his wife, Trish. That is above the $250,000 max she is proposing for the rest of us. But maybe a lot of it is for lost wages or doctor bills or something. So maybe she's not an official hypocrite.

Of course, Crash does have state health insurance and, let's face it, how much could she have lost in wages?

FYI, the suit is for damages sustained in the car crash that earned Lesil her beloved nickname. She wasn't driving, but it was her second crash in a short period of time. Earwigs report she swore during a deposition last year that she wouldn't have gotten in the car that night if she suspected her friend Trish was drunk. Pardonez Ear? According to the same deposition, Trish tested out at 0.258 percent blood alcohol content, more than three times the current DWI level.

And finally, there is no evidence that the tantrum last week at the Triangle Club that had the Capitol Building all atwitter was anything but an honest disagreement over whether there was a conspiracy to rig a bowling tournament and deny her team first place. Yes, the last bowling fracas was alcohol fueled and ended up in a police report, but this one did not. So leave the poor lady alone.

WARNING ... Is Ear reading it wrong, or was the message on invitations to an April 20 fundraiser for Dan Sullivan, Anna Fairclough and Paul Bauer a threat? It read:

"If you were unable to contribute before, this will be your last chance to help end these campaigns on a positive note."

Is Ear channeling to an alternate universe, or is there an implied "or else?"

KUDOS ... Former Assemblyman Charles Wohlforth has won the L.A. Times Book Prize for science writing for his terrific book on climate change in the Arctic called "The Whale and the Supercomputer."

Charles said the L.A. ceremony was supercool — a limo, huge TV screens, a banquet with ice sculptures, celebrities and Sally Ride making the presentation. "Not at all what I am used to," he writes.

• Katherine Gottlieb, CEO of Southcentral Foundation and Alaska's only genius award winner (that's officially a McArthur Fellowship), was awarded an honorary doctorate by APU at its commencement ceremonies yesterday. So does Ear have to call her Dr. Kathy now?

A QUESTION ... Do certain favored lobbyists have keys to the Capitol Building and various offices therein? That's a story going around Juneau, attached to the names of two well-known flesh-pressers. But the Omniscient Orifice must question the grapevine. The official "Capitol Key Policy" mentions only legislators, staffers and support personnel as eligible for the numbered, "don't copy" keys.

On the other hand, lobbyists are sort of "support personnel," right?

FLYING FACTOID ... The Fairbanks Economic Development Corp. just extended the employment contract of its airport marketing director Anders Westman, according to the News-Miner. But this time, they are insisting he do the job in Fairbanks, not Detroit, where he remained after getting hired last year. Guess those sales pitches about how it's a great place to refuel, but I wouldn't want to live there, weren't going over too well with the locals.

OLD BUT GOLD ... A rumor has been circulating for months that Republican Party boss Randy Ruedrich is working to get rid of Sarah Palin by using his oily contacts to get her husband, Todd, transferred from the North Slope to, say, Bahrain. That way she won't be around to run for anything and pull votes from the designated party candidate. Always assuming Sarah is not the designated party candidate.

Anyhow, Ear finally asked Sarah, who laughed and referred the Divine Appendage to her 14-year-old daughter, Bristol, who apparently fronted Randy at election central in November and asked him point blank.

Unfortunately, Bristol's geography was a little off and she asked Randy if he was going to get her dad transferred to Berlin. Earwigs report Randy looked puzzled and replied, "People shouldn't spread those kinds of rumors." Or words to that effect.

What Randy told Ear is that he's never given the subject a single thought.

If the earwig report of the November conversation is correct, which would be a miracle in itself, Ear can't help but notice he didn't just say no.

ON THE MEND ... ADN columnist Heather Lende should be back in Haines now after a plane and ferry trip home this weekend from the hospital in Seattle. She can't walk, and can barely sit, while her pelvis is mending from being run over by a truck while biking in Haines, but is expected to heal completely.

Former state lawmaker Masek charged with DWI

Former state representative Bev Masek was arrested Sunday on charges of drunken driving and driving with a suspended license, according to Alaska State Troopers.

Masek, 41, of Willow, served in the Legislature from 1994 to 2004. She was stopped about 1:30 a.m. near Mile 58 of the Parks Highway after a trooper noticed she was driving slower than the speed limit and had drifted over the center line several times, according to a written statement released by troopers.

Her blood alcohol level was later measured at 0.189, more than twice the legal limit of 0.08 for driving, according to a report filed with the Palmer district attorney's office.

Masek was taken to the Mat-Su Pre-Trial Facility in Palmer and released on her own recognizance. She could not be reached for comment Monday.

Title: Comp Bill Can't Do Good Work In The Dark

Character/Classification: 194A-AN-13620 · 355

Comp bill
Can't do good work in the dark

One of Gov. Frank Murkowski's must-pass legislative priorities, the workers compensation bill, may have enough constitutional holes to sink it. That's what you get with a process that's done behind closed doors.

The workers' comp bill suffers from some squishy language -- how exactly do you define "substantial" cause of injury in an incident that exacerbates old injuries? Based on this legislation, nobody knows.

There are questions too about potential inequities in calculating workers' benefits, how chronic pain and other medical conditions will be covered and whether the new appeals commission concentrates too much power in the hands of the governor.

Critics say this legislation, which even its supporters have said is only a start, could get a judicial toss before its start is much under way.

The administration's response? Don't worry; we'll fix any problems next session. In closed-door sessions again? With last-minute amendments and changes?

Alaska's workers' compensation law is an important issue. High rates of insurance can strap small businesses. Medical expenses can multiply rapidly. Some cost controls are in order, and at one point in the regular legislative session, the House had a decent bill that offered modest changes and empaneled a task force to report on more.

The bill as finally passed still puts a task force on the case. There's no guarantee that it will bring insurance rates down. So what have we a gained? A big maybe that may be short-lived due to legal problems?

It's a risky business to predict what courts will rule. But there's well-informed doubt about

194A-AN-13620-M-53

Senate Bill 130 that suggests its passage was more about winning than sound reform to serve all hands.

The more important the issue, the more important is open scrutiny. Any time the governor or lawmakers rush a "must-pass" bill with a promise of "we'll fix it later," red flags should spring to attention -- especially when the last rush is done out of public view.

BOTTOM LINE: Legal questions around workers' comp bill reflect poor crafting and the results of doing the people's business behind closed doors.

Title: Clark To Lead Talks On Gas Line

Character/Classification: 194A-AN-13620 · 357

Submitting Office: Anchorage

Indexing:

Gov. Frank Murkowski is putting his chief of staff in charge of the state's gas line negotiations.
Jim Clark, widely viewed as the governor's most trusted and loyal aide, will try to finalize a contract with potential builders of a $20 billion gas pipeline by the end of summer so it can be presented to the Legislature in a special session this fall, the governor said Wednesday.

The contract would set tax, royalty and other terms for the proposed pipeline to carry Alaska's vast reserves of natural gas to Lower 48 markets. It would be the biggest project in the state since construction of the trans-Alaska oil pipeline, the governor said.

"We're further along in the last 24 months than we've been in the last 24 years. There's absolutely no question about that," Murkowski told reporters at a news conference in Anchorage.

Clark will keep his chief of staff job, although some chores may be delegated to Cabinet members, Murkowski said.

Murkowski said Clark has been intensely involved with the gas line negotiations and is the right person to lead the talks to a successful conclusion. He will replace international oil and gas expert Pedro van Meurs, a Dutch citizen who lives in the Bahamas, as lead negotiator. Van Meurs, who charges $3,500 a day plus expenses, will remain a consultant to the state, the governor said.

Former deputy labor commissioner Ed Fisher, who was working as a subcontractor to van Meurs at $225 an hour, is no longer working on the negotiations, said Susan Taylor, administrative services director.

Murkowski called the gas line talks the highest priority of his administration. He said that's why he has chosen Clark to conclude the negotiations, which have reached a critical stage.

"He's extremely well organized, and I have the utmost confidence in his commitment and capabilities," Murkowski said.

Before becoming Murkowski's chief of staff, Clark was a Juneau attorney who often represented timber and mining companies. He's known as a tireless and capable worker who can be pushy and controlling.

Rep. Ralph Samuels, R-Anchorage, said he has had scuffles with Clark, as have other legislators. But he thinks Clark is the right person to represent the state in talks with North Slope oil and gas companies, TransCanada and the Alaska Natural Gas Authority, the three groups that have submitted gas line proposals.

"You want someone with a strong personality to get the job done," Samuels said. "He's a tough guy. He understands the issues."

Samuels is the vice chairman of the Legislative Budget and Audit Committee, which acts as a liaison between the Legislature and the administration on gas line matters.

Greg O'Claray, state labor commissioner, said the governor's decision to tap Clark indicates how important the deal is to Murkowski.

"He's placing his best person at his disposal to bring those discussions to a closure," O'Claray said.

Rep. Ethan Berkowitz, D-Anchorage, questioned Murkowski's choice.

"Jim Clark does not have experience in oil and gas. That's not his expertise. I don't know why we're trusting the biggest deal this state has ever faced to someone who spent his formative years as a timber lobbyist," said Berkowitz, who plans to run for governor next year.

Clark said he doesn't need to be an expert in oil and gas. That's why Pedro Van Meurs is staying on a consultant, he said. Clark sees his role as coordinating experts in economics, law, engineering and other fields involved in the mega-project.

"Look at me more as an orchestra leader," he said.

Clark rebuted talk that the governor had offered the chief of staff job to Health and Social Services Commissioner Joel Gilbertson and that Gilbertson declined.

"It's just poppycock," Clark said.

If the governor had asked Gilbertson to do it, he would have accepted without hesitation, Clark said.

Gilbertson did not respond to interview requests.

Deputy chief of staff Mike Nizich and budget director Cheryl Frasca will take over many of the day-to-day tasks of the chief of staff, Clark said. They will act as de facto co-chiefs of staff while Clark turns his attention almost exclusively to the gas line, he said.

Clark said he plans to work 15-, 16- or 17-hour days until a gas contract that's good for Alaska is reached.

"It's time to finalize things and bring it home."

FLASHLIGHT

Should he stay or should he go?

A recall petition aimed at taking out state Senate President Ben Stevens could be filed soon, according to Ray Metcalfe, the man behind the petition and the founder of the Republican Moderate Party. Metcalfe said Monday, June 27 that he already has more than the 972 signatures of voters from Senate District N that he needs, but that organizers "need a little more cushion," adding that his goal is 1,900 signatures.

Ben Stevens was out of town this week, according to Senate Majority press secretary Jeff Turner, who said Stevens has a standing "no comment" on the matter. That might change if Metcalfe ever turns in those signatures to the state Division of Elections - but Turner wasn't making any promises.

Stevens ran unopposed in 2002. He was initially appointed to his senate seat in 2001, by then-governor Tony Knowles, a Democrat. Metcalfe believes he should be recalled because Stevens, while a senator, has worked as a consultant for the oil field services company VECO (Stevens reported $47,500 in income from VECO last year). That amounts to failing to uphold the state constitution, Metcalfe says.

In his application for a recall petition, Metcalfe wrote that the state constitution requires Stevens to seek the "highest possible payment for Alaska's resources," and that working for VECO conflicts with that oath. Metcalfe is referring to Article Eight of the constitution, which says, among other things, that state-owned natural resources should be developed "for the maximum benefit" of the people.

Flashlight figures that whether an oilfield services company - or, say, a commercial mushroom buyer - is diametrically opposed to that constitutional goal is anybody's guess. We said as much to Metcalfe.

"Do you understand the term 'serving two masters'?" Metcalfe said. "Then what part of the picture doesn't fit? He's not working for (VECO) as a roughneck. He's helping them navigate the political waters of Alaska, and their objective when navigating those waters are the opposite of Alaska's best interests."

The recall is a three-step process, in which Metcalfe needs 10 percent of the number of votes cast in Stevens' last election, or 972, for the first round. If the Division of Elections approves those signatures, Metcalfe will receive official petition books and need 2,431 signatures to clear a 25-percent hurdle. After that, voters would decide if Stevens should be recalled.

Metcalfe said he's spooked about his signature cushion because of a lawsuit the state faces over a statewide initiative that would ask voters to impose a $50-per-passenger cruise-ship head tax and create new taxes for shipboard gambling. Election officials certified that petition, saying it gathered 174 more signatures than the 23,286 that were required. The industry hired a private contractor to comb through the petition books and is claiming in court that the initiative is actually short by 1,200 signatures.

Group paid for trip by governor, aide - 'PERFECTLY LEGAL': Murkowski went to meeting of Republican state leaders.
Anchorage Daily News (AK)
July 15, 2005
Author: MATT VOLZ
The Associated Press
WIRE
Estimated printed pages: 3

A November 2004 trip made by Gov. Frank Murkowski to a meeting in New Orleans was paid for by a so-called 527 political committee formed last fall by a prominent Juneau banker.
The group, the Alaska to America Energy Initiative, spent $1,908.57 to send Murkowski to the Republican Governor's Association annual meeting, according to a Nov. 17 state travel authorization form.

The group also spent $2,592 for former Murkowski policy director Kris Knauss to make the trip, according to tax documents provided by the Washington-based watchdog group Center for Public Integrity.

"The question is, is it ... unethical to accept this money from a 527 for this purpose," said Center for Public Integrity researcher Kevin Bogardus. "Here's a state official being paid for a trip by a 527, and I've never seen that before."

A 527 is a tax-exempt, nonprofit political committee formed under Section 527 of the IRS code. Some 527s, such as MoveOn.org and Swift Boat Veterans for Truth, have been very influential in national and state political campaigns.

Murkowski, at a news conference Thursday, referred specific questions to staff, but said 527 committees were "perfectly legal" and there was "nothing uncommon about them."

Spokeswoman Becky Hultberg said a gift disclosure for the trip had not been located and she did not know whether one had been filed by the governor. The trip to New Orleans was considered personal business, according to the travel authorization form.

The document says the group reimbursed Murkowski just for airfare. Hultberg said it was not immediately known who paid for the governor's hotel or meals during his stay in New Orleans.

194A-AN-13620-M-57

The governor's trip cannot be considered state business because he was attending a politically partisan meeting, Hultberg said.

Knauss' trip, however, is considered state business that could have been paid for by the state, according to a June 17 memo from Linda Perez, the administration's designated ethics supervisor.

The state has traditionally paid for staff members who are required to travel with a governor attending either the Democratic or Republican Governors Association meetings, Perez wrote.

Knauss also was given the task of collecting governors' signatures for a petition to open the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to oil and gas drilling, she wrote.

Knauss filled out an ethics disclosure form June 20. He has since left state government and could not be reached Thursday for comment.

Hultberg said later Thursday that the state would repay Alaska to America Energy Initiative the $2,592 given to Knauss.

"It was simply a mistake on our part," she said. "We should have done a closer review at the time and seen it was legitimate state business."

The Alaska to America Energy Initiative, in its 527 organization filing with the IRS, says its purpose is not to influence elections to state office in Alaska. Instead, it aims to "inform and educate about the importance of obtaining energy for the nation from Alaska and to support candidates who support that goal," according to the IRS document.

The Alaska to America Energy Initiative was formed by Juneau banker Win Gruening on Sept. 15. The group did not claim exemptions from filing reports on contributions in its organizational filing, meaning it has to disclose who donated money to it and where the money was being spent.

Knauss' travel reimbursement was listed as an expenditure on a Jan. 28 filing, but the payment to Murkowski is not listed on any of the group's disclosure forms.

Gruening did not return several calls to his office and home Thursday.

From September through January, the latest information available, the group received $15,000 in contributions. Two $5,000 donations came from oil services company Veco Corp. and Alaska lobbyist Sam Kito Jr. Also donating amounts of $2,000 or $1,000 were Anchorage residents Mark Pfeffer, Gerald Neeser and Robert Evans..

■ DISCLOSURE: Political opponent files complaint about money details.

By RICHARD MAUER
Anchorage Daily News

The leader of the independent Republican Moderate Party is accusing state Senate President Ben Stevens of failing to properly document what he did to justify more than $1 million in outside fees he's received from resource-dependent Alaska businesses over the last four years.

In a complaint filed Thursday at the Alaska Public Office Commission, Ray Metcalfe said Stevens failed to comply with Alaska law "which requires that Legislators provide the public with details when describing the nature of the services they are being paid."

Stevens

But Christina Ellingson, the assistant director of the agency, said that in the past it has accepted the kind of generalized descriptions used by Stevens, though she added that she hadn't had a chance to review the specifics of Metcalfe's complaint and wasn't prepared to comment on its merits.

A legislative spokesman for Stevens, Jeff Turner, said Stevens wouldn't comment.

Since his appointment to a vacant state Senate seat in 2001, Stevens, a Republican from the Sand Lake and Turnagain areas, has filed disclosures showing his personal business, Stevens & Associates, has collected more than $1.3 million from companies with business before the Legislature or that depend on regulated public resources such as fish, oil and land.

Stevens routinely described his business activity in his APOC filings as "consulting services" or "business services."

That description is too vague, Metcalfe said. He said Stevens had a duty to provide more details.

"The public must know that legitimate work was performed and have sufficient details to discern if that work was within the scope of Ben Stevens' professional qualifications," Metcalfe said in his complaint. He asked the public offices commission to require Stevens to "provide evidence of a work product and evidence (of) corresponding hourly billing."

Metcalfe is also leading a recall drive against Stevens, 46, the youngest son of U.S. Sen. Ted Stevens, 81. Ted Stevens is the U.S. Senate's most senior Republican and the chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee, where he is a powerful force in Congress on fisheries issues, the subject of most of the younger Stevens' consultancies and the source of more than $600,000 in fees that Stevens & Associates collected since 2001.

Ben Stevens was appointed by Democratic Gov. Tony Knowles in 2001 and ran unopposed for his first full term the following year. Before that, he had fished for salmon and crab in Alaska and started Stevens & Associates as a government relations firm in Washington, D.C., while pursuing a master's degree in business administration from George Washington University.

Metcalfe said Friday that his petition effort has gathered about 2,400 signatures, twice the number he needs for the initial petition for Stevens' recall. But he said he lacks the names of three "prime sponsors" from Stevens' Senate District N willing to stand up on behalf of the effort. Metcalfe lives in a different district.

As an example that he cites as justifying both the recall and the APOC complaint, Metcalfe criticized the consulting services that Stevens said he provided to the Alaska oil field service company Veco Corp. Over the past five years, Veco has paid Stevens & Associates an average of $48,600 a year.

"Veco's interests are the reverse of the average Alaskan's," Metcalfe said. "Veco's interests are in getting Alaska to sell its resources for as little as they can possibly persuade them to do. Alaska's interest is in getting as much as possible for those resources to pay for things like teachers, police, etc."

Longtime Veco chairman Bill Allen and president Pete Leathard were not available for comment.

GOP took good care of its candidates in '04

■ CONTRIBUTIONS: Party was top bankroller in state races, giving out $234,365.

By SEAN COCKERHAM
Anchorage Daily News

JUNEAU — The Alaska Republican Party, labor unions and Veco executives were big bankrollers of state Legislature races in last year's election, a new report says.

The Institute on Money in State Politics has created an analysis on money in Alaska's 2004 election. The report looked at contributions to legislative races and party committees. It focused on state races, not taking into account the U.S. Senate fight between Sen. Lisa Murkowski and former Gov. Tony Knowles that drew millions of dollars in donations from across the nation.

The institute determined that Republican candidates for the Legislature brought in $3.5 million. Democrats raised $2.24 million and other parties or independents $190,992.

The money talked. Incumbents on average had campaign treasuries twice as big as their challengers. In the end, not a single incumbent legislator lost in the fall general election.

Anchorage pollster David Dittman said people largely contribute money to lawmakers already in power and who are seen as having the best chance to win.

Some donors give with their "heart" and based on philosophical agreement or a personal attraction, Dittman said. But others donate with their head, and are unlikely to put their money behind a challenger with little chance of winning, he said.

"People who are thinking of it as investments," he said.

The Institute on Money in State Politics is a nonpartisan, nonprofit group based in Montana that does an analysis every two years of the top political contributors in each state. Institute staff said its database encompasses all 2004 information posted online by the state but could be updated if new reports come in. It can be considered at least 90 percent complete, the institute said.

The Alaska Republican Party was the single biggest individual contributor to candidates in the election, according to the analysis. The party funneled $234,365 to its candidates.

The party's biggest candidate donation, $10,000, went to South Anchorage Republican Sen. John Cowdery. Political observers thought Cowdery was in a tough three-way race against Democrat Linda Zaugg and Alaskan Independence Party candidate Eddie Burke. Cowdery won handily in the end.

Executives of Veco, the Anchorage oil field services and construction company, were some of the most generous contributors both to the state Republican Party and to candidates for state House and Senate races, according to the institute.

Three Veco executives were the only individuals who weren't running for office to make the institutes' top 20 of donors to Alaska party committees and candidates for the Legislature. The rest of the top-20 list was composed of groups, such as unions, or candidates who financed their own campaigns.

Veco president Pete Leathard gave $43,750, according to the institute. The company's chief financial officer, Roger Chan, contributed $42,750. Veco chairman Bill Allen contributed $35,923 in the last election cycle, the institute said.

Almost all the Veco executives' money went to either Republican candidates or to the Alaska Republican Party.

Spouses of Veco executives and company employees have also donated heavily to political campaigns. Calls to Veco on Friday were referred to Leathard and Allen, who were both out of the office and unavailable to comment. Veco executives have been among Alaska's most generous campaign contributors for years and have said they support candidates who share the company's philosophy on issues such as natural resource development.

Veco also sometimes has lawmakers on consulting contracts. Senate President Ben Stevens, an Anchorage Republican, reported $47,500 from Veco last year.

The Alaska Democratic Party committees gave about half as much to candidates as the Alaska Republican Party did, the institute's analysis showed. The numbers fit: Democrats control 21 of the 40 seats in the Legislature and there are 67,337 registered Democrats in Alaska and 111,781 registered Republicans.

"Twice as many people, twice as many incumbents, twice as much money," said Anchorage pollster Ivan Moore. "Frankly, I'm surprised the gap wasn't larger than that."

Moore said dollars created a winning Republican Party machine, which in turn generates more money.

"Frankly, the problem the D's have is that success breeds success," said Moore, who works for Democrats.

Dittman, a Republican pollster, said unions are the financial muscle behind Democratic campaigns. Direct union contributions are against state law, as are corporate contributions. But union-affiliated political action committees can donate.

The general trade unions combined gave $362,702 for last fall's election, the institute said.

That ranked only behind candidate self-financing and political party contributions. It was about $50,000 more in political contributions than came from the oil and gas industry, which includes the donations from Veco executives.

Transportation unions, including Teamsters, gave another $186,153, the institute said. That was just behind lawyers and lobbyists and just ahead of those in the real estate industry, health professionals and telecommunications workers.

Electrical workers, laborers and public employee unions were the biggest of the labor contributors. Most of that money went to Democrats, although Republican candidates got tens of thousands of dollars from each of them. Republicans got almost as much from the Teamsters as Democrats did, the report showed.

FACTOID FRACAS ... A strange press release landed on Ear's desk Friday from Commissioner of Corrections Marc Antrim, billed as a response to some bloviating by Bill O'Reilly, star of Fox News and a sleazy phone sex scandal.

"Corrections putting O'Reilly behind bars," the press release promised.

Ear got so excited.

But they were lying. O'Reilly isn't shoveling slop at Spring Creek, or even Cook Inlet Pre-trial. Antrim is just teed-off that O'Reilly included Alaska in a list of states he claims are "soft on child sex offenders," an allegation that is stupid on its face given our law mandating prison for first offenders.

Apparently O'Reilly is OK with the law being soft on people who make obscene phone calls.

However, Ear notes with dismay that in the press release, the commissioner claims to "enjoy watching Fox News." Ear can only hope that's a lie too.

HELP WANTED ... The word is Jim Clark is interviewing for a contract "assistant" to take over some of his duties for three or four months while he's busy with pipeline negotiations. Or maybe to help with the pipeline stuff itself. The rumor isn't crystal clear. Anyhow, word is Jim's telling applicants they'll have to work his hours: 24/7.

* HEARTY PARTY ... Darlings, Ear sometimes wonders about the judgment of non-appendages. The invitation to a July 7 fund-raiser for three House members read: "Hospitality's heavy hitters" invite you to a fund-raiser at the Cross Roads Lounge.

The sponsors were almost all big liquor industry and bar people. The beneficiaries were Tom Anderson, Lesil McGuire and Kevin Meyer. All three chair committees likely to handle proposed liquor laws — commerce, judiciary and finance.

Crash McGuire's reputation — remember the little alcohol-fueled police episode last year? — one earwig wondered if contributions in kind were accepted.

ASKING PRICE ... Earwigs report Sen. Lisa Murkowski's Government Hill home is now officially for sale, on the Multiple Listing — with a $525,000 price tag. Alors! It's a nice house, but half a mil?

People who read mail-forwarding notices report Lisa will maintain her Alaska residency with her place in Girdwood. Hmmm. Doesn't another U.S. senator, the one who is third in line to the throne, do the same? So, with 2 percent of the mighty Senate claiming official residence there, is Girdwood now the most powerful town in America?

HAIL AND FAREWELL ... This was Deborah Williams' last week as executive director of the Alaska Conservation Foundation. But she's not going far. She got a foundation grant to do a study called "Giving Voice to Global Warming" — talking to people who are already being affected. Like mushers, for instance.

Pat Pourchot is the new acting director.

One of her last executive director assignments was to accompany Jimmy and Rosalynn Carter on their first visit to the Kenai Fjords National Park, which Carter created when he signed ANILCA 25 years ago.

According to Deborah, it was an incredible adventure with nature cooperating to an eerie degree. They used the smaller of the Kenai Fjords Tours boats and Carter drove much of the way, displaying a fondness for full throttle, according to Deborah.

Right on cue, two humpbacks appeared, one of them a baby who had a grand old time breaching for 20 minutes about 10 feet from the boat. Harbor seals came to check out the explorers, porpoises joined the itinerary, and every possible bird species made an appearance.

The four Secret Service agents who accompanied the Carters didn't get in the way. Nor did the Coast Guard boat that followed at a discreet distance, Deborah said.

LADIES WHO LUNCH ... Nothing too fascinating from this year's Republican Women's Summer Salad Legislative Luncheon on Thursday. It was at Ermalee's house. Someone brought a crab salad made with imitation crab. Quel tacky.

Andy Halcro was a last-minute no-show. Juneau Rep. Bruce Weyhrauch was the tallest person there. And a bunch of ladies who watched ADN editorial writer Frank Gerjevic on Anchorage Edition last week decided he's a hottie. Said one married woman who admired Frank: "Just because I'm on a diet doesn't mean I can't read the menu."

OOPS ... Talk about idiot Earrors — The new director of the Alaska Native Arts Foundation is Carrie Irwin Brown, Mike's niece.

BEST WISHES ... To Red Boucher, who has been a mayor, a lieutenant governor, a member of the State House, a baseball manager and who knows what else. Red got two new knees on July 8 and is scheduled to go home from Providence Alaska Medical Center tomorrow. His wife, Vicky, says he's already doing stairs.

NEWS NEWS ... Steve Lindbeck, who runs the editorial pages as associate editor of Your Favorite Good Morning Newspaper, is leaving to become a vice chancellor at UAA. Before coming to ADN in 2000, Steve ran the Alaska Humanities Forum. At UAA he's taking Susan Ruddy's old job glad-handing and raising money.

Rural affairs reporter Joel Gay is leaving Alaska after 30 years here, heading for Albuquerque. Joel worked at the Homer News for eons before coming to ADN. Reporter Nicole Tsong is already at her new job with the Seattle Times.

BEARING UP ... Great Bear Brewing Co. of Wasilla is serving up a new brew called Valley Trash Blonde Ale. Darling Ben Stevens might want to give it a try since he coined the derogatory phrase in an e-mail exchange with a Valley voter last year, triggering both outrage and pride among Mat-Su residents.

Earwigs report the beer is pretty good. Crisp and cutting, just like Angry Ben, observed one. Sharp and bitter, is another way to put it.

Legislators call for timeline, commitment on gas pipeline

CONTRACT: A deal must be struck by next month for governor to follow through on plans for a special session.

By SEAN COCKERHAM
Anchorage Daily News

(Published: July 23, 2005)

JUNEAU -- Lawmakers say a huge question surrounding the state negotiations over a natural gas pipeline contract is whether it will include a commitment to build the project and a binding timeline for getting the gas to market.

"The work commitments are something the Legislature has been pushing the (Murkowski) administration on," said Rep. Ralph Samuels, R-Anchorage, "saying, 'This is important to us -- don't bring us a contract that doesn't get a pipeline built.' "

The governor's office has been negotiating for more than a year with the three major North Slope oil companies on a contract specifying state taxes and royalties if the pipeline from the North Slope through Canada to the Lower 48 were built. The talks also involve the governor's proposal for the state to own a share of the line and to take gas as a payment instead of taxes and royalty checks.

Former Gov. Walter Hickel and Anchorage businessman David Gottstein earlier this month raised the issue in a letter to the governor, saying a contract must include "an absolute commitment to build a gas line with a definite construction start date. No contingencies." They argued that, in their interpretation, the state Stranded Gas Act requires such a commitment.

If it is not included, they said, the companies could use the contract to delay the project for years. Critics of the oil companies have claimed they are stalling on developing Alaska's gas in favor of their gas holding elsewhere in the world.

The companies -- Exxon Mobil, BP and Conoco Phillips -- say they are pursuing a gas pipeline. But a BP spokesman said it is unrealistic to require an absolute timeline.

"Anyone who is familiar with large projects knows that to be successful they require delivery of key milestones," said the BP spokesman, Dave MacDowell. "You don't pick a guaranteed startup date before you have approval from government agencies and regulators to proceed. That would be silly."

MacDowell said that after a contract is reached with the state, the next step will be for the companies to spend a billion dollars on prep work needed for regulatory applications to federal energy boards in both the United States and Canada.

The negotiations are confidential. But Jim Clark, the lead negotiator for the governor's office, said the state is "absolutely addressing the issue" of including a construction timeline.

"We are very cognizant of the need to make sure we get a pipeline out of this and not have any sort of open-ended thing," Clark said.

Clark and BP's MacDowell would not say how a timeline might be structured to allow the companies enough wriggle room and still be acceptable to the state. Samuels, a leading legislator on gas line issues, said there needs to a "fine balance," with some flexibility on timing but not too much.

"I think the Legislature requires a timeline," Samuels said. "We want to know when the gas is going to go."

FBI - Stevens-133

194A-AN-13620-342m-61

Another looming issue is when the governor's office will have the contract agreement to give to the Legislature for approval. Gov. Frank Murkowski has repeatedly told the public to expect a special session of the Legislature this fall to approve a contract.

But a deal has to be struck in the next month to meet that schedule, to allow time to draw up formal papers and to provide opportunity for public comment and revisions, according to key lawmakers and state officials.

The Legislature, under the law, could approve or turn down the deal but not make substantial changes.

Lawmakers said the special session likely would need to happen before Thanksgiving because of the holidays. If not, the Legislature could take up a contract agreement during the regular four-month legislative session that begins in January. But Legislators would rather do it in a special session devoted to the complex topic than mix it with other business.

Clark wouldn't say how close the negotiators are to delivering a contract to the Legislature.

"We are very cognizant of the need to get a pipeline built. But as far as an agreement working out what we think is a sensible formula to do that, we're not there yet," he said.

The governor's office has been in separate negotiations with TransCanada, a Calgary-based pipeline company that has also expressed interest in building the Alaska gas pipeline.

But the talks going on right now are focused on the major oil companies, which hold the North Slope gas leases.

"We have progressed on the TransCanada talks further than the one with the (oil and gas) producers," Clark said. "We are trying to bring the producer one up to speed."

There is also the Alaska Gasline Port Authority, a municipal consortium led by the City of Valdez and the Fairbanks North Star Borough, which is pushing for an "All-Alaska" gas line route. The North Slope gas would go to Valdez, to be liquefied and placed on tankers and shipped to a terminal in the Lower 48.

The oil companies have said that approach doesn't make sense. The port authority this spring lost its financial backing from San Diego-based Sempra Enegry but says it has found a new buyer interested in purchasing some Alaska gas.

The port authority would not name the potential buyer. But port authority officials are meeting with the governor to talk about it. Clark said Murkowski would carefully consider it and the other gas pipeline proposals.

Governor to enlist ad firm

GAS PIPELINE: Coming marketing blitz could signal contract will close soon.

JUNEAU -- The governor's office is looking for a company to launch a statewide advertising campaign as soon as the state strikes a deal on a natural gas pipeline contract.

The "educational public awareness campaign" over terms of the contract is expected to start next month, according to the state's online notice. That aggressive timetable is a seeming sign of optimism a deal on a gas contract could ... close.

But the contract negotiations are secret. State officials won't say how close they are to a deal with the major oil companies and others who have expressed interest in building the pipeline to ship the jumbo North Slope gas reserves to the Lower 48.

"I think what is real clear is the governor wants to make sure he is ready to move forward and is assuming we'll end up with a successful negotiation," said Chuck Logsdon, the state's spokesman on the natural gas contract negotiations.

The governor's office has been negotiating for more than a year on a contract specifying what state taxes and royalties would be if the gas pipeline were built. The talks also involve Gov. Frank Murkowski's proposal for the state to own a share of the line and to take gas as payment instead of taxes and royalty checks.

The deal would have to be approved by the Legislature.

The state put out a notice Monday that it wanted companies to send in letters of interest in being hired for what it called the campaign. It's on a fast track; the letters have to be in by 1 p.m. Friday.

The chosen company must have a media relations specialist, copywriter and art director, among other positions. The state's notice mentioned print, radio, and television advertising as well PowerPoint presentations and brochures. Logsdon said the state would negotiate how much it will pay the company.

"I think for people to get an understanding of what any contract means for the state, we want to have a good and comprehensive presentation of just exactly what was done," Logsdon said.

But Anchorage Democratic Rep. Eric Croft said he is wary of the planned ad campaign.

"I think when the state hires a salesman to sell something to its citizens, watch out," he said.

Croft said it remains to be seen whether the governor's office can cut a good deal. He said that in his opinion any deal must include a definite timeline for getting North Slope gas to market.

Legislators said they were hearing conflicting rumors Tuesday about whether the state is really close to a deal.

Logsdon said the estimate of an August start for the four-month campaign is meant to fit with the timeline needed for a special session of the Legislature.

"There has been a real push here over the summer. ...There is a lot of pressure on people to get something done on that timeline," Logsdon said.

Murkowski has repeatedly told the public to expect a special session this fall to approve a gas contract. Key lawmakers and state officials said there has to be a contract agreement in the next

Legislators have said they would much rather address the gas pipeline contract in a special session devoted to the topic than mix it with other state business during the four-month regular session that begins in January.

Lawmakers from both parties, though, have expressed concerns that the governor's office could present a flawed deal to meet the timeline of a special session this fall.

"Everyone I've talked to in the Legislature has clearly recognized that concern, and I believe the Legislature is committed to, if necessary, making the tough decision that says the deal is just not good enough for the state," said Anchorage Republican Rep. Mike Hawker.

Hawker said he has seen no sign the state negotiators are not doing a good job. Jim Clark, the state's lead negotiator in the gas pipeline talks, said last week the governor would not allow a desire for a fall special session to compromise the state's efforts.

Killing the Alaska dream

Corruption is killing the Alaska Dream and it's soon going to take your dividend, and possibly your job, if you don't pay attention.

Twenty-five years ago, State Senator George Hohman's fellow senators expelled him from the Alaska Senate and an Alaska judge sentenced him to three years because someone said he said supporting a certain legislative proposal might be good for a thousand-dollar "campaign contribution."

Today, State Senator Ben Stevens doesn't need "campaign contributions." He's collected nearly two million dollars in "consulting fees" from people hoping to benefit from his legislation. Today, prosecutors ho-hum such indiscretions to death while our ethically bankrupt Senate leadership rewards Ben's behavior with the presidency of the Alaska State Senate.

Nearly a quarter-million of Ben's payments came from VECO, in exchange for services Ben fails to define in his "Conflict of Interest Report" beyond "Consulting fees." If you find all this hard to believe, direct your browser to www.repmod.info and click on "Conflict of Interest Documentation." View the facts and decide!

In 1999, VECO supported a $350,000 campaign seeking voter permission to redirect Permanent Fund dividends to capital projects. The vote was 83 percent "NO."

Since the 1999 vote, VECO has paid $400,000 to six lobbyists and $243,000 to Ben Stevens. They seek ways to fund government from Permanent Fund earnings to thereby reduce public pressure for the state legislature to demand world market value for Alaska's oil.

VECO's interest in raiding the Permanent Fund stems from their wish to sustain an endlessly increasing series of tax breaks (commonly referred to as ELF) that the oil companies lobbied through many years ago. While oil company profits soar, ELF has cut Alaska's tax on oil in half.

ELF's tax breaks increase automatically every year. If not reversed, ELF's increases will soon cut our severance tax on North Slope oil to one-fourth of the original pre-pipeline agreement. If labor leaders continue to ignore this issue, everything from patching potholes to competitive salaries for teachers and troopers will become impossible without taking away dividends and slapping the public with a huge tax. Giving away Alaska's oil is not a winning formula for successful bargaining.

When Stevens was sworn into the state senate, he signed an oath - a contract with Alaska - promising to uphold Alaska's constitution, which requires him to seek the highest possible payment for Alaska's resources. Stevens then contracted his advice and loyalty to a company seeking to extract Alaska's resources for as little as possible.

FBI - Stevens-138

Shortly thereafter, Stevens introduced a bill attempting to redirect $337 million from the Permanent Fund Earnings Account into capital projects. The Permanent Fund Earnings Account has for 25 years been Alaska's piggybank for dividends.

Stevens argued that the cost would just be a few dollars per person, but divide $337 million between 650,000 Alaskans. You'll come up with $518 for every man, woman, and child in Alaska - and you can be sure they will extract more next year.

Contracting to advocate the position of two clients on matters of each client's mutually shared but conflicting interest is generally considered fraudulent and corrupt. Due to the opposing objectives of such contracts, it is not possible for a single consultant to loyally advocate victory for both sides. "By necessity of law," one of any two such contracts was irrefutably signed in bad faith.

Stevens' failure to define what he actually does for his "consulting fees" violates Alaska's Conflict of Interest Disclosure Law, which requires legislators to provide the public with details sufficient to tell the reader what work was performed in exchange for payment received.

Alaska Criminal Law (Sec. 11.56.110) reads: "A public servant commits the crime of receiving a bribe if the public servant solicits a benefit with the intent that the public servant's vote, opinion, judgment, action, decision, or exercise of discretion as a public servant will be influenced." Receiving a bribe is a felony.

If enough Alaskans do nothing while Ben Stevens does VECO's bidding and raids the Permanent Fund, corruption will flourish, and Alaska's Dividend distribution program will soon be history.

Please join us for a media event at noon Thursday, August 4 as we, along with a coalition of "Citizens for Ethical Government," deliver a petition to initiate the beginning of the removal of Ben Stevens from his seat in the Alaska State Senate. We'll meet at the Division of Elections, which is now at a new location on the first floor of a gray, four-story building between Fireweed and Northern Lights. The address is 2525 Gamble Street.

Gas line dividend idea surfaces -
SECOND PAYOUT: Some skeptical, say it's too early to plan for bonanza.

Estimated printed pages: 3

An Anchorage lawmaker wants to set up a special permanent fund -- paying dividends -- with gas pipeline income that could bring billions of dollars to Alaska.
Chuck Logsdon, the state's gas pipeline spokesman, said it's not possible to give a solid estimate of how much revenue would come to Alaska if the proposed gas line from the North Slope gets built. It depends on how and where the project is built, the taxes and other factors

But, Logsdon said, a number that has been "tossed around" is as much as $2 billion or so in revenue a year if gas prices were about $5.50 per thousand cubic feet. The price climbed to over $9 this week, but that is exceptionally high. In 1995, it was $1.55.

"Suffice it to say it would be billions and billions of dollars (at the current price)," said Logsdon, who until recently was the state's chief petroleum economist.

To put it in perspective, the state general operating budget was $2.33 billion for the fiscal year ended June 30.

Rep. Bob Lynn is floating an idea for what to do with a gas bonanza. Lynn said he'd like to use it to create a second Alaska permanent fund, complete with another round of annual dividend checks.

"I just have this quaint idea people can spend their money better than the government can," he said.

The Anchorage Republican said he'd envision gas dividends perhaps being split between the public and local governments.

Juneau Republican Rep. Bruce Weyhrauch sounded skeptical. "Well, we already have one (Permanent Fund). I don't know if there is a reason to duplicate it just because someone else wants to be the father of a permanent fund," Weyhrauch said.

He said he thinks it would make more sense to put the gas revenue into the existing Permanent Fund -- and start using fund earnings to help pay for state services.

Anchorage Republican Rep. Kevin Meyer, co-chairman of the House Finance Committee, said he thinks it's premature to start talking about what to do with gas money.

But Juneau Democratic Rep. Beth Kerttula said it's a good call for Lynn to at least suggest it, although she needs to think about whether it would be a good idea.

Legislators are doing a lot of thinking about a gas pipeline. They are hoping that Gov. Frank Murkowski will soon call them into a special session to consider a contract setting forth the tax and royalty terms of a gas pipeline.

The governor's office is negotiating a contract with the North Slope oil companies and others who have expressed an interest in building a pipeline to bring the gas to market.

The companies appear to favor a pipe through Canada to the Lower 48, while the Alaska Gasline Port Authority is pushing a route to Valdez for tanker shipment.

Those talks will help determine how much money the state would get from a gas pipeline. It is not known if the contract will include a commitment and a schedule for building a pipeline.

State gas spokesman Logsdon said any project would be lucky to get gas to market by 2012.

Murkowski has told legislators to expect a special session this fall. That's still the plan, Logsdon said. But a contract agreement would need to emerge soon to allow time for public comment and other work before a special session.

Natural gas price will be a huge factor in determining how much the state could bring in from a gas pipeline. The last time there was serious talk about a gas pipeline, five years ago, prices were much lower and the revenue department figured a pipeline would bring in a steady annual paycheck of $200 million to $400 million to the state.

Michael Williams, the state's chief petroleum economist, said the current stratospheric prices could inspire more production and less demand. That would drive prices down.

"These high prices have impacts. They may not be felt for four or five years, but they definitely have impacts," he said.

Ben Stevens' work in Juneau beyond reproach; we're lucky to have him

Over the past two years I have spent much time in Juneau during the legislative sessions. From my personal observations and experience I know firsthand that Senate President Ben Stevens is one of the hardest-working legislators and is well-prepared on Alaska issues. I am particularly impressed with his commitment to his family as well as to his responsibilities as a state senator. When the workday is over in Juneau you don't find Sen. Stevens out to dinner with lobbyists and special interests. Rather you will find him at home or at the ice rink skating and watching his children, or returning to his office to spend additional hours studying legislation before him.

Ben Stevens' values are in the right place and I am proud to know him and feel that he is totally committed to putting Alaska's best interests first. He is open-minded and sincere in his leadership role and Alaska is indeed fortunate to have this citizen legislator.

PARTY FAVOR ... As the Talkeetna Bluegrass Festival played out last weekend, volunteers strolled through the beer garden and stood sentry at the exit gate handing out helpful fliers advising revelers how to not get arrested by Alaska State Troopers. Some tips: "STAY CALM! NO VIOLENCE OR THREATS EVER!"

Um, duh? Ear thinks a better tip would be "Hey, hippies, roll down all your windows and use this flier to fan the marijuana fumes from your car!"

Anyway, the flier came from a group called Citizens of the United States of America and also advised folks to invoke their Fifth Amendment right and in dealing with a trooper, to "ALWAYS state that you are in FEAR OF YOUR LIFE! WHY? Because he is armed and is applying force from the first instance, up to and including deadly force to get you to submit."

Eek. Total buzz kill.

SAY CHEESE ... Alaska's own medical examiner, Dr. Franc G. Fallico, made The New York Times last week, appearing in its review of "Grizzly Man." That's the Werner Herzog documentary on Timothy Treadwell, the Californian who sang and whispered to bears until they eventually ate him, and his unfortunate companion, out in Katmai National Park.

The review celebrates Fallico as "a character around whom an entire reality show could be built." Using audio recorded during the duo's deaths and findings from his examinations of the bear's stomach contents (ew), Fallico spins a "graphic, gruesome and thoroughly riveting" account, says The NYT.

MORE TREADWELL ... Santa Monicans are so stoked about this weekend's opening of "Grizzly Man," starring their very own Timothy, that volunteers donned grizzly costumes and prowled a Sunset Boulevard intersection Friday, passing out Bear Claw pastries. Really, darlings, you can't make something like that up.

FAIKS SIGHTING ... Eagle-eyed Earwigs might have noticed former Alaska state Senate diva Jan Faiks in a story in your Good Morning Newspaper last week. Faiks is now vice president for government affairs at the Pharmaceutical Research and Manufacturers Association of America. She's part of a big money campaign against a California initiative to offer prescription drug discounts to the uninsured. Juneau Earwigs still talk about the time Faiks declared, "The rich need representation, too" during a nasty debate on the Senate floor. At least one swears she used to have her dry cleaning sent to Anchorage because she didn't trust the Juneau store to do it right.

TAKE THAT, CITY FOLK ... Eagle River is one of the top 850 places to live in the country — and Anchorage isn't — says CNN and Money Magazine. Both cities made it to the mag's top 1,300, but Anchorage was edged out on the top 850 list.

Eagle River hasn't been a contender before because some argued it wasn't a real city. A rep with the company who did the study said this year they ruled Eagle River "unique enough" to stand apart from Anchorage.

Ear will let you interpret that as you will.

CHEERS ... The rumor mill buzzes that Mayor Mark may have a late-summer fund-raiser by leaders from the Anchorage restaurant and bar lobbying outfit, CHARR. That would be the first time Ear can recall CHARR backing a Democratic mayor — or Democratic anything, for that matter — with a conservative in the picture. That conservative is radio personality and Rambo shrimp pitchman Jack Frost. Where will Jack hold his fund-raisers without the drinking and eating elite supporting him? New Sagaya, perhaps?

Frank Dahl, CHARR boss, said a fund-raiser for Mayor Mark "isn't set yet" and "if he asked me, I would certainly consider it. I'm not saying we're throwing our support for him. Right now we're taking a wait-and-see position. But we are considering all the candidates."

Mayor Mark, are you listening? Are you thirsty?

STRICTLY RESEARCH ... Earwigs in sluggish lunch-hour traffic Friday on Fifth Avenue reported an unusual pair entering the growing strip-club complex across from Merrill Field: Anchorage Assembly members Dick Traini and Anna Fairclough.

Don't get any crazy ideas, darlings. Anyone with eyes has seen that the skin palace holding the Setter bar and the nonalcoholic Fantasies on 5th has spent many months expanding. With that comes a liquor license application, set to go before the Assembly later this month.

So our bold local leaders were simply doing a little recon. Said Traini, "We were going in there to check out the operation to see what it physically looks like."

Traini says it was his first time there, and uneventful at that. When our pair entered, there were no customers and definitely no dancers.

ON THE MOVE ... Channel 11 reporter Maria Martin is set to leave there next week for a public relations job with animal control. Earwigs say Channel 11 reporter Jill Burke is also out of there for a job with rival Channel 2.

Ed McLain has left the Anchorage School District to be an associate professor with University of Alaska Anchorage's Education Leadership Department. McLain had run the testing department for the district and before that was a deputy commissioner for the Department of Education.

Gov. Frank has lost another communications director. If you're keeping track, that's No. 4. Bill Noll was the most recent to leave, named commissioner of the Department of Community and Economic Development. Before Noll, there were Dennis Fradley, Kevin Jardell and Paul Laird, who had the job for such a brief spot that most forgot he had it at all. If Gov. Frank has no communications director, how will we know if he's running for office again?

Alaskans should support Stevens in spite of gadfly's recall efforts

I might not always agree with Sen. Ben Stevens. But as a retiree, I watch a great deal of the legislative sessions on TV and have come to appreciate his integrity and leadership in the Alaska State Senate.

I applaud his political courage and willingness to tackle the tough issues facing our state. I am, however, appalled that perennial political gadfly and former legislator Ray Metcalfe is getting his picture in the paper announcing his intention to lead a recall of Sen. Ben Stevens ("Effort to recall Stevens finds support in police," Aug. 5).

What is worse is the Daily News is paying attention to him. The allegations against a hard working person such as Ben Stevens are nothing but a cruel joke. Ray Metcalfe was a joke in the Legislature and the recall petition more appropriately belongs on the comic page, or better yet, the obituary page rather than on a legitimate news page.

I would urge Sen. Ben Stevens to keep up the good work on behalf of Alaskans and would further remind Mr. Metcalfe that Alaskans do not appreciate lies, deceptions and innuendos.

I and many, many Alaskans are thankful for the senator's dedication and intelligence in dealing with what's good for Alaska.

Shareholders dispute CIRI vote

■ LAWSUIT: Independent contender Jerry Ward seeks recount after close race.

By PAULA DOBBYN
Anchorage Daily News

Cook Inlet Region Inc.'s recent corporate election is being disputed in court and with state regulators.

The June 4 election seated five company-endorsed candidates for the board of directors. None of the four independent candidates won seats, although former state senator and CIRI shareholder Jerry Ward came close.

Ward and two other CIRI shareholders filed a lawsuit last week in state Superior Court in Anchorage that could force a recount. They allege that the Anchorage regional Native corporation is denying them the right to adequately review proxies, or corporate votes, cast to see if the outcome is correct.

"It's about the right to inspect documents," said Fred W. Triem, a Petersburg attorney representing the plaintiffs. "To me it seems like a no-brainer. Votes were cast and they want to see them."

Ward also filed a complaint with the state Division of Banking and Securities alleging a variety of election irregularities, including "actual voter fraud and conspiracy to design a misleading proxy."

CIRI's vice president of land and legal affairs, Keith Sanders, said Wednesday that the election was handled fairly. It fully complied with company rules and state law, Sanders said. He expects to respond to the Banking and Securities complaint by Friday and to the lawsuit within a week or so.

Complaints about elections at Native corporations, especially CIRI, are not uncommon. The congressionally created companies are often run by board members with family ties, tribal connections and, sometimes, old axes to grind. The firms often operate more like families than mainstream businesses.

have attempted to model their elections and business practices after publicly traded companies that are regulated by the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission. CIRI, one of the more high-profile and profitable companies, is a case in point.

This year, the company responded to shareholder pressure to make its elections more democratic. The board decided to include independent candidates on the company proxy for the first time. The goal was to reduce the campaign costs of independents and streamline the number of mailings and solicitations shareholders would receive.

But the proxy that shareholders received was complicated and perhaps confusing, said election inspector Mike Spaan.

It allowed shareholders to cast both directed and discretionary votes. In other words, they could allow the company to spread votes among the board-endorsed candidates however it wanted. Or, the shareholders could cast votes for a particular candidate, board-endorsed or independent.

But instead of writing in the number of shares they owned, they were to cast votes. If someone owned 100 shares as is typical, they had 500 votes.

This was a change from prior years, when shareholders marked down their number of shares and not votes, said director Bob Rude. Many shareholders got confused and instead of casting 500 votes, they only marked down 100, Ward said recently.

In some cases where the shareholder voted 100 shares for an independent, the company took 400 votes and directed them to the board-endorsed slate, said John Rice, an attorney representing Ward.

"This was done to create confusion with the shareholders," Rice said. "This misleading proxy has the effect of disenfranchising shareholders."

Its effect was to give board-endorsed candidates an election sweep, Rice said. Ward lost by less than 15,000 votes out of 1.6 million cast, according to an election summary.

"There was quite a number of people who put in shares, not votes. Some of my relatives put 100 shares in there and they thought the entire 100 shares would be voted for me. But in reality the other 400 went to the board-endorsed candidates," said Rude, who won re-election to the board.

Rude has long been considered a CIRI dissident and shareholder advocate. But this year, for the first time in 22 years, he ran on the board slate. Despite that, Rude said he's disappointed in the way CIRI handled the election.

"My goal, before I retire, is to have fair elections," Rude said. "I think we have a ways to go."

Sanders said the proxy was clearly and legally worded. He's confident a judge and state securities examiners will uphold the election results.

The Divine Appendage

DON'T BOGART THE JAVA ... Costco is selling green coffee beans in Alaska, apparently wholesale to coffee dealers who roast their own. One potential customer faxed Ear a copy of an Aug. 15 price list for five varieties: Colombian, decaf, Costa Rica, Ethiopium, and a house blend.

"Ethiopium?" Sounds like a real pick-me-up. And only $2.10 a pound.

OUT AND ABOUT ... Former Assemblywoman Heather Flynn was in town this past week to visit her family and be feted at Bonnie Jack's Glass Ceiling Breakers event, honoring women who rose to lead the Anchorage Assembly. It was a fundraiser for AWAIC and STAR, at the 4th Avenue Theatre.

Sen. Lisa Murkowski was one of the speakers. She called for more women in high office. We need a woman governor, she said. Fran Ulmer, in the audience, probably agreed.

Some people think the first woman president was just in Alaska, she added, a reference to Hillary Clinton that did not please Republicans in attendance at the nonpartisan affair.

Bonnie, a longtime Republican activist, pointed out that Anchorage, alone among Alaska's leading cities, has never had a woman mayor. "But George Sullivan's mother was mayor of Nenana," she said.

"Now, that doesn't mean I want a woman to run against this mayor," she cautioned. Bonnie was a Republican for Begich.

MS. QUOTE ... The Department of Law put out a press release Monday with details about the sentencing of former Alaska state trooper Daniel Scott for sexual assault, trying to put a happy face on his minimum four-year prison term. It quoted Meghan Gaughan, legal advocate for the Tundra Women's Coalition, practically exulting over the wimpy plea deal: "This is huge. He is being held accountable for this conduct and we are happy it has come to this."

Reporters familiar with the work of the TWC had their doubts.

Sure enough, less than two hours later, a new version of the press release appeared with a "corrected" quote. The huge-happy line had disappeared.

The unanswered question is, did someone make up the quote, or did Gaughan have second thoughts?

A QUESTION ... What were Murkowski flacks Becky Hultberg and Dan Saddler fighting about on the sidewalk outside the state office building in downtown Anchorage? Voices were raised, says an eagle-eye earwig. Gestures were made.

ROLL THE PRESS ... The online progressive media site Insurgent49 plans to debut a newspaper version on Sept. 1. The first print run will be 10,000 copies of a "revolutionary experiment in Anchorage journalism," according to editor Aaron Selbig.

OUT AND ABOUT ... Has Anchorage School District honcho George Vakalis joined the ultracool metrosexual movement? Earwigs report he's dyed his hair strawberry blond and drives a convertible. Alors, the stud is in.

• Was that Sen. Lyda Green pushing a cart full of fabric and pillows last week at Jo-Ann Fabrics, chatting at length with other crafters?

MIXED MESSAGE ... An irritated lobe wrote to complain about the little moose that pops up when you access the Alaska Airlines Web site. Ear has no idea if he's right, but he claims the tracks that walk across the screen while you're waiting for information to appear are caribou tracks, not moose.

"If this were really an Alaskan airline, they'd have the sense to use actual moose tracks," he groused. "Alaskaposers."

Check www.alaskairlines.com and decide for yourself.

NEVERMIND ... Here's how CNN explained it: Weyerhaeuser in Oklahoma fired some employees for keeping guns in their cars in the company parking lot. Then the Oklahoma Legislature passed a law forbidding such firings. Then Conoco Phillips filed a federal lawsuit to get the Oklahoma law thrown out. It seems they also prefer that their parking lot not be loaded with armed cars.

So now the NRA is calling for a national boycott of Conoco Phillips.

OK, darlings. No more filling up at a Phillips 66 station.

Oh, that's right. There aren't any here.

FLYING FACTOIDS ... Rep. Les Gara has begun using a Darth Vader logo bearing the slogan "Return of the Jet" on press releases about you know what.

• SprocketHeads owners Carolyn Robinson and Steve Rychetnik, married last year by Jay Hammond, have a baby now — Theo, born June 18. Mom and Dad are pleased that Jay got to meet Theo a few days before he died. SprocketHeads is a video production company. Steve also plays bass in Chill Factor, John Tracy's band.

ON THE MOVE ... The Democratic National Committee has hired former legislator Kay Brown as its Alaska communications director. The press release said Kay is part of Howard Dean's plan to revitalize the party in all 50 states.

• Mark Thiessen, a supervisor from the Associated Press Salt Lake City bureau, is the new news editor for Alaska. A native of Nebraska, Thiessen succeeds Linda Ashton, who will move to Salt Lake.

• Paul Honeman, a retired police lieutenant, is the new APD spokesman, taking the place of Ron McGee who is headed for a teaching job at UAA. Honeman, like Chief Monegan and a bunch of other city officials, will be double-dipping — getting a salary and collecting his pension. Ear's attorney No-Contest Kelly says it's all perfectly legal.

SMALL TOWN OR WHAT ... From an official police report: "On August 12, 2005, at approximately 0400 hours, Wasilla Police discovered 5 vehicles parked at Wasilla High School that had been vandalized. The vehicles belonged to cheerleaders and football players who were out of town for a game (Wasilla Won!) The total damages are estimated at $1,300."

Keep revenue sharing in ANWR bill

By JERRY WARD

The legal wrangling over land and resources within the Native community is not an isolated fight; it affects every single Alaskan, urban and rural.

Listen to the Outside liberal histrionics and you might believe ANWR is a place too pristine to touch, yet somehow barren and irrelevant to Alaska and our country's energy resources. We know better. With some U.S. Geological Survey data estimates, the 16 billion barrels lying beneath the frozen surface could replace our Saudi Arabian imports for three decades.

But ignoring turmoil in the Middle East isn't the opposition's only tactic to preventing Alaska from handling our own land.

Doomsday for the caribou? Since drilling began at Prudhoe Bay over two decades ago, the herd has grown from 3,000 to 27,500.

Severe damage to the ecosystem? There's a reason environmentalists pack their brochures with pictures from the part of ANWR that will never be drilled.

Disregard for local interests? Inupiat Eskimos, the only tribe indigenous to the Arctic Coastal Plain, are well aware of the economic impact of development on the North Slope and are desperate for more of the same.

As Alaskans, we know all of these facts well, but there is another fundamental fiscal and social benefit to opening ANWR: putting a stop to the welfare state of Alaska Natives and saving taxpayers hundreds of millions of dollars.

One of the natural benefits of opening ANWR is that, geographically, Arctic Slope Regional Corp. would be in a position to receive a portion of the massive oil wealth through a previous land trade with the federal government. However, in accordance with Section 7(i) of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act, the revenues received by ASRC from ANWR should be shared with all Alaska Natives.

A little history: Section 7(i) was one of the last provisions to be inserted into the original 1971 claims act. It resulted from a deal struck by Arctic Slope leaders and Native leaders from the rest of Alaska. The previous legislation granted land largely according to population. But Arctic Slope leaders argued that was unfair since North Slope Eskimos, relatively few in number, had traditionally ranged over a large area to meet subsistence needs.

The other Native leaders agreed to change the land and revenue formula to give Arctic Slope more of the potentially oil-rich land of the North Slope. However, in return, they extracted a key concession: Arctic Slope as well as other resource-rich regional corporations would have to share their wealth. However, a controversial out-of-court settlement arguably allows ASRC to escape its revenue sharing obligations in ANWR.

And now, with the current ANWR bill in Congress, 7(i) is ignored. Unless the ANWR legislation explicitly requires 7(i) revenue sharing, ASRC will be able to circumvent the sharing provisions associated with the ANWR lands. Other Alaska Natives were not informed, nor did we participate, in approving the land trade that gave Arctic Slope oil rights in ANWR or the settlement that gutted 7(i). As a result, we have lost vested property rights without just compensation. Potentially hundreds of millions of dollars may be kept from being shared equally.

The legal wrangling over land and resources within the Native community is not an isolated fight; it affects every single Alaskan, urban and rural. Countless millions of oil dollars and tax dollars are spent on trying to fix the serious societal problems in Native villages. From nutrition, dental care, education, alcohol abuse and many other things, the social and fiscal price tag is staggering.

Enforcing the sharing provisions of 7(i) allows Native corporations to use the revenue, which is theirs to begin with, to work on these problems themselves and build a bright future for the next generation. It also saves the U.S. taxpayer, and Alaska oil coffers, big dollars.

It is incumbent upon all Alaskans, regardless of ethnicity, urban and rural, to take notice while an ANWR bill is still possible. We have an opportunity to do things right from the beginning. Section 7(i) revenue sharing should be enforced and included in any ANWR bill.

Title: Governor In Texas To Talk With Oil Companies

Character/Classification: 194A-AN-13620 · 360

Submitting Office: Anchorage

Indexing:

Gov. Frank Murkowski is in Houston, Texas, to negotiate face to face on a natural gas pipeline contract with the CEOs of all three big North Slope oil companies. The direct talks come as time is running out for Murkowski to strike a gas line deal in time to have the Legislature consider a contract in a special session this fall. Murkowski has repeatedly told the public to expect the contract to be ready so legislators could act then.

The state has been negotiating for more than a year with the three major oil companies on the North Slope -- BP, Exxon Mobil and Conoco Phillips -- on how to build a pipeline to deliver North Slope gas to the Lower 48. Among the issues: determining taxes and royalties, and how the state could own a portion of the pipeline.

Most of the negotiations, led by Murkowski Chief of Staff Jim Clark, have been in Alaska between state officials and representatives of the oil companies. Murkowski's trip is a "heightened level of interaction," said his spokeswoman, Becky Hultberg.

Murkowski brought a team of state negotiators with him to Texas. Hultberg said she didn't know how many, although the list includes Clark and Mike Menge, the governor's senior adviser on energy issues. She said the governor would be in Houston on Wednesday and today and expects to return to Alaska on Friday.

Hultberg described the trip as just a step in an ongoing process of reaching a gas line deal. But she said the plan is still to have a contract in time for a special session of the Legislature this fall. State officials concede that the clock is ticking.

"We're starting to push up against that deadline," said Chuck Logsdon, the state's spokesman for the gas line negotiations.

After a preliminary agreement is struck, there needs to be time to get it published for a public comment period, which would last for at least 30 days. Then state officials would have to go back and negotiate any changes needed before a contract is submitted to the Legislature for debate and an up-or-down vote.

The special session would need to happen before Thanksgiving to meet legislators' schedules. Consideration of a gas line contract could also wait until the regular legislative session begins in January. But the governor and lawmakers would much rather take it up in a special session free from the distractions of other state issues they have to deal with in the regular session.

A gas line contract is likely to be complex and contentious. Murkowski is talking to the oil companies, which are considering a pipeline through Canada to the Lower 48, and a group that is pushing for a pipeline to Valdez. An all-Alaska pipeline would require liquefying the gas and shipping it on tankers.

A big question is whether a contract with the oil companies would include a real commitment to build a pipeline and an enforceable timeline for its construction.

The gas pipeline negotiations are confidential and state officials won't say how close they are to a deal.

"Watching the process, there are just a lot of things floating around," Logsdon said. "Trying to get something to gel, it's not simple."

Legislators responded to education needs

By SEN. JOHN COWDERY

As teachers and students prepare for the start of a new school year they will have many more resources to learn and grow with because Alaska's 60 lawmakers made education funding a top priority this year.

A renewed focus on education funding the past two years has brought together legislators, teachers, parents, students, administrators and the Murkowski administration. We didn't always agree on how to get the job done, but we worked towards achieving the same goal, raising Alaska's public school system to the next level.

School districts, especially in rural areas, needed help. Imagine a child trying to study in a classroom with a crumbling roof and a scanty heating system when it's 40 degrees below zero outside. I think you get the picture.

This year the legislature tackled the problem head on. In the fiscal year '06 capital budget, we funded 48 of the 71 schools on the state Department of Education and Early Development's deferred maintenance list. Almost all of the 48 schools are located in rural areas that waited years to get state funding.

Cowdery

The Legislature also renewed the 70/30 school bond debt reimbursement program. That program makes municipalities eligible to receive 70 percent state reimbursement on voter-approved school bonds. Without it, taxpayers in urban regions would shoulder the enormous cost of school construction and maintenance with property and sales taxes.

I've heard complaints saying this year's capital budget was another example of pork barrel government spending. The truth is the capital budget was on par with previous budgets.

The difference this time was that due to a reduction in federal funding, lawmakers were forced to use a greater percentage of state general fund revenues to make up for the loss of federal dollars.

If we didn't, we would have to slash school construction spending when there was plenty of cash on hand to pay for it.

Using the temporary oil price windfall for school construction was a wise decision because every child, regardless of where they live or their parents' income level, deserves to have a safe, clean school facility.

Building schools is only half the job. School districts are struggling with inflation, soaring fuel costs, higher employee salaries and the constantly growing liability to the public employee and teacher retirement systems.

Every community in the state asked us to help and we listened. Last year we increased education funding by $82 million to $4,576 per student. This year we increased it another $70 million to $4,919 per student. Overall, K-12 education funding increased 23 percent over the last three budget cycles.

That's an unprecedented increase in school funding, and I believe it demonstrates the commitment lawmakers have to the school system.

School districts have understandably worried each spring how much money the Legislature will hand out each year. This session, the lawmakers created the K-12 Education Account to start forward-funding education. That's a tremendous commitment to Alaska's education system.

Money isn't the answer to every problem in our schools. The exit exam law passed by the Legislature several years ago requires high school seniors to pass a basic skills test before receiving a regular high school diploma. The exit exam brings accountability to the schools and assures post-secondary educational institutions and employers that Alaska's high school graduates are adequately prepared.

Just because the session is over doesn't mean lawmakers have stopped doing their homework on education. This interim, a bipartisan committee is reviewing the state's school district cost factor formula, the formula that allocates additional funding to rural schools not connected to the road system. The committee will make recommendations to the entire Legislature and the administration next January.

Education funding should never be a partisan issue. I urge Alaskans to look past the hype and look at what's been accomplished in two short years. If they do, I believe they will agree with me that our education system is moving in the right direction.

Alaska Ear

The Divine Appendage

HAIL, FAREWELL ... Didn't we give Jay Hammond a nice send-off last week, just the right mix of reverence and corn-pone. Ear's favorite tortured metaphor was when Lowell Thomas, pilot and lite gov in Jay's first term, called him "a diamond in the rough with a heart of gold."

Lowell also provided the moment most enjoyed by the jaundiced politicos who call Ear. Right after the diamond-in-the-rough remark, Lowell observed — with Gov. Frank Murkowski in the audience — that while governor, Jay "was very happy to fly his own Cessna whenever he could on official business."

It took a few moments for people to make the connection, then laughter began to spread through the Atwood auditorium and quickly swelled into big applause.

Lowell did an unconvincing oh no, no. "My apologies, folks," he said. "I had not intended ... anything between the lines. It's your imagination entirely."

Yeah, right.

An earwig claims he heard Murkowski later joke to Lowell: "Why don't you teach me to fly?"

P.S. Ear's favorite name for the gov's new jet, suggested by an ADN letter writer, remains "The Longevity Bonus."

PASSING THROUGH ... Anna Dobbs, one-time food queen here during her incarnation as Midnight Sun Produce, was back in town for Jay's funeral from her new home in Syracuse, N.Y. She's now the coffee queen of Syracuse, with three "Freedom of Espresso" shops there, roasting and pouring. She greeted old friends with pastry and bags of a special "Jay's Memorial Blend."

INQUIRING MINDS ... When a reporter asked Murkowski press secretary Becky Hultberg how many people went to Texas with the governor for the gas line talks, she allowed as how she just didn't know. A helpful oil lobbyist called to say it was 17 or 18 but there was no way to check since, well, Becky doesn't know. Earwigs who bump into Becky might ask her what plane the governor flew in to Texas. Perhaps she'll know that.

MAJOR COOL ... The new issue of Sunset Magazine has named as best white wine in the $15-$50 range a sauvignon blanc from the Oregon vineyard of Chancy and Toni Croft. He's an Anchorage attorney and a Big D. The brand is J. Christopher, made of grapes from the Croft vineyard in Monmouth, Ore., priced at $18. "Exceptionally fresh and balanced," said the judges.

TIDY CITY ... Ear got this message last week from an unemployed lobe:

"Dear Ear: In today's classifieds, the municipality is advertising for a new position: Bioterrorism Coordinator. Because, you know, it's always good to keep one's bioterrorism well organized."

PAIN IN THE AK ... Sen. John McCain, in a Senate floor speech just before the vote on the big transportation bill cited, among other wretched excesses, the gazillion dollars going to the Alaska Way Viaduct as an example of all the pork directed to Alaska by d'Ear Don Young. Apparently no one told McCain that project is in Seattle, not in Alaska.

FIXITS ... Yes, d'Ears, George Sullivan's mother, Viola, was mayor of Valdez, not Nenana. Ear knew that. Really. George said she was the first woman mayor in Alaska, in the early 1930s.

And Alaska Airlines says the earwig who thinks the tracks on the airline's Web site are caribou, not moose, is wrong. "We worked with professor (Norm) Harris at the University of Alaska Fairbanks. He even checked their captive moose to confirm the gait. The tracks are definitely moose and not caribou. Caribou tracks are narrower and pointier," says an e-mail forwarded by an earwig.

OUT AND ABOUT ... What were Tony Knowles and Jake Metcalfe talking about at City Market?

• Alors d'Ears, this is the last week to catch the Dinosaurs of Darkness exhibit at the Alaska Museum of Natural History on North Bragaw, just up the turnoff from the Glenn Highway.

• The new fall show at the Fly By Night Club is "The Pork Fat Follies."

CYBER-POLS ... Nate Raymond of Fairbanks, who has "genx" in his domain name, claims we can tell who has political ambitions by checking their domain holdings. For instance, says Nate, Sen. Ben Stevens owns benstevens.com and benstevens.org. Andrew Halcro bought a 2-year lease on andrewhalcro.com last March but hasn't set up a Web site yet, says Nate.

There's a SarahPalin.com and an EricCroft.com, but no Web site yet for either.

There are no domain leases listed for John Binkley, Rick Halford or Rick Mystrom.

MarkHamilton.com appears to already belong to someone in New Jersey.

Ralph Seekins got one for his campaign and leased it through 2012. No current Web site, says Nate.

Title: Producers' Gas Line Offers More Jobs and State Royalties

Character/Classification: 194A-AN-13620 - 361

Submitting Office: Anchorage

Producers' gas line offers more jobs and state royalties

If Gov. Frank Murkowski calls a special session of the Legislature later this year as expected, Alaska lawmakers could be making a decision with lasting consequences.

They will be voting on one or more proposals for a natural gas pipeline from Prudhoe Bay down the Dalton and Richardson highways and across Canada to the U.S. Midwest. The terms could include part ownership in the line by the state.

Proponents of a liquefied natural gas pipeline from Prudhoe to Valdez, who call theirs the all-Alaska line, also submitted a proposal in July and have revised it twice. The LNG pipeline would require refrigerated tankers to deliver gas to the West Coast.

If the state accepts the Alaska Gasline Port Authority's plan, the result could be a financial disaster. It would be a high risk strategy and is not better by any measure.

Though its supporters claim their project would generate more jobs for Alaskans, industry studies show that building along the route through Canada would create more jobs in Alaska than the LNG line -- and probably some jobs for Alaskans on the Canadian segment.

The Alaska Milepost Guide to Alaska shows the in-state highway route to the Canadian border is 796 miles within Alaska. Since the LNG group claims their line will be 800 miles long (the Milepost sets it at 866 highway miles) the in-state portion of the Alaska Highway line would be almost as long as the LNG line.

The LNG line would carry 1.5 billion to 2 billion cubic feet a day; the line to the Midwest would have a capacity of 4.5 billion to 6 billion feet a day.

And since the North Slope processing plant for the line to the Midwest would be much larger and more costly than that for a smaller line, it would provide far more jobs during construction and operation.

AGPA apparently submitted the revisions because the state's experts were unimpressed with earlier versions. The producers' experts claim LNG from Alaska couldn't compete on the West Coast with gas from Pacific Rim countries that have lower production and delivery costs.

BP Exploration (Alaska) President Steve Marshall told an Anchorage audience last week that if the cost of an LNG line were put toward an Alaska Highway line, the investment would produce twice as much gas.

If so, the route through Canada would result in a higher wellhead value on the Slope and more royalty and production tax money going into state coffers and the Alaska Permanent Fund.

Marshall told the Downtown Anchorage Rotary that the cost of the producers' line would be $20 billion to $25 billion. AGPA estimates have varied, but the industry study pegged the cost of an LNG line, tankers and processing facilities at $11 billion.

If the state opted to try for an LNG line and it proved as uneconomic as many experts predict, that could result in no pipeline being built at all.

STEVENS EXONERATION STORY WAS . . .

Buried deep

IT WOULD COME as no surprise if you somehow missed the news that the Alaska Public Offices Commission has tossed out a complaint alleging state Sen. Ben Stevens did not adequately explain consulting fees paid to him.

If you missed it, you are not alone. Many who knew what the APOC did, and knew to look for it, had a hard time finding the story in the newspaper.

The silly beef against Stevens, president of the Senate last session, was filed by Republican Moderate Party head Ray Metcalfe, who also is leading a recall drive against Stevens, although he lives in a different election district.

When the complaint was filed, a fairly sizeable, by-lined story ran July 16 above the fold on the Alaska page in the Anchorage Daily News. The news, however, that the nonsense got the heave-ho and that the APOC found Stevens' descriptions of the fees satisfied state disclosure laws rated only an eight-paragraph digest item on B-3, under a Juneau dateline inside the Alaska section, last Wednesday.

Good grief.

It is, we suppose, a commentary on modern times that anyone — with anything in the way of ulterior motives — can file a cheap complaint that ends up being played prominently as "news." How sad.

What's worse is when the target of the attack is exonerated but rates only a ho-hum brief buried in the bowels of the newspaper.

It is the kind of thing that only lends credence to those who assert Ben Stevens is not always treated fairly by some in the news media.

You would think, with his distinguished record of public service, he would deserve better.

Brass knuckles

In its latest proposal to the state, the Alaska Gas Pipeline Authority asks that the state commit its royalty share of North Slope gas to a liquefied natural gas line.

It also asks the state to get it more gas by using some very questionable tactics against the producer companies.

Those call on the state to:

* "Cancel, terminate, allow to expire or fail to renew any lease, Unit Agreement, or other agreements" the state has with the companies;

* Sue the leaseholders for not developing or marketing North Slope gas and require that they sell their gas to AGPA; and,

* Push for legislation giving AGPA the right to seize gas by eminent domain.

This is not the first proposal for a brass-knuckles approach to dealing with North Slope companies, but it certainly is the boldest and most self-serving.

Recall effort against Ben Stevens is part of democracy, not an 'affront'

I was outraged to read Rep. Bruce Weyhrauch's recent letter to the Daily News in which he describes the recall effort against Ben Stevens as an "affront" to the democratic process ("Efforts to recall Sen. Ben Stevens are an affront to our democracy," Aug. 14). Weyhrauch states that the recall procedure should only be used for "serious offenses." What does Weyhrauch call holding the Legislature hostage for weeks into overtime session to gut the retirement system for police, firemen, teachers and other state and municipal workers? What does he call collecting and not reporting thousands of dollars in "consulting fees" from companies that have business before the Legislature? What does he call insulting Alaskans with terms like "thugs" and "Valley trash"? The list of Ben Stevens' arrogant and self-serving affronts to public office is seemingly endless, and if he is so disliked by his constituents that they choose to kick him out of office before he can do any more damage, then we know the system is working. Clearly this is democracy in action.

The real "affront" is that politicians like Weyhrauch and his friend Ben Stevens seem to keep getting away with their arrogant and self-serving disregard for the will of the people. It's time to put a stop to it.

Division of Elections rules against Stevens recall election

Wednesday, September 7, 2005 - by Bill McAllister

KTUU File

Anchorage, Alaska - State Senate President Ben Stevens will not face a recall election unless his opponents are successful with a lawsuit to overturn a ruling made Tuesday by the state Division of Elections. The Division of Elections concluded that the recall effort against Stevens, while it had enough signatures of registered voters to go to a special election, did not provide substantial reasons for removing him from office.

The leader of the recall effort is Ray Metcalfe, a former Republican legislator and founder of the breakaway Republican Moderate Party. Metcalfe says Stevens is either incompetent or corrupt because he sponsored a bill in the last legislative session to take nearly $350 million from Alaska Permanent Fund earnings to spend on school construction.

KTUU File

Metcalfe says that's a conflict of interest because Stevens has accepted a couple of hundred thousand dollars in consulting fees from oilfield services company Veco. According to Metcalfe, Veco has a stake in the use of Permanent Fund earnings for government, in lieu of higher industry taxes, although the company denies the allegation.

Metcalfe says his application for a recall petition should have been approved because the circumstances are similar to a successful petition against former Sen. Scott Ogan last year.

"We're going to go to the court and show them that opinion that came from the Ogan case and say, show me the difference, where's the difference. It's the same charge," said Metcalfe (above right).

"The only similarities is that they were both state senators at the time the application for recall was made. Other than that, they are two different approaches to recall," said Laura Glaiser, the director of state elections.

"This was not a campaign. This was an attempt to smear someone. And I think we have the right conclusion without question," said Randy Ruedrich (left), chairman of the Republican Party of Alaska.

KTUU-TV could not reach Stevens for comment this afternoon, but we are told he will have a news conference Thursday.

This is only the fifth time a recall has been attempted and only the second time against a legislator. Sen. Scott Ogan resigned from office shortly after the recall election http://www.ktuu.com/cms/anmviewer.asp?a=15053&print=yes against him was certified, so Stevens would have been the first legislator actually put up for such a vote. Alaska's law on recalls is considered middle of the road among the states. Purely political recalls are not allowed, but the courts have not required a purely legal approach to the issues involved in recall, either.

State: No grounds for recall

■ STEVENS: Petition backers will appeal decision by elections chief.

By RICHARD MAUER
Anchorage Daily News

The Division of Elections has refused to certify the recall petition of Sen. Ben Stevens, dealing opponents of the powerful state legislator a second blow in less than a month.

State Elections Director Laura Glaiser ruled Wednesday that recall advocates failed to allege sufficient grounds in their petition to force Stevens, the Alaska Senate president, to face his district's voters in a special election.

Stevens

Relying on her own judgment and a legal opinion from the state Department of Law, Glaiser rejected the assertion that Stevens' outside consulting income from the oil-field service company Veco was corrupting.

While Glaiser said she "respects the right of the people to petition the government," state law demands that a recall petition allege facts that demonstrate an office holder's incompetence, neglect, lack of fitness or corruption. She said the Stevens petition failed to do so.

Ray Metcalfe, leader of the Republican Moderate Party and the main figure behind the recall, said he planned to appeal Glaiser's decision in court.

"What did he do for that $50,000 a year?" Metcalfe asked about the consulting fees Veco paid to Stevens, as cited in the petition. "When you are serving two masters with conflicted interests, in common law that is considered corrupt and has been for hundreds of years."

Metcalfe said Stevens did Veco's bidding by backing efforts to spend Permanent Fund earnings.

See Page B-2, STEVENS

The legal opinion, by assistant attorney general Michael Barnhill, said the petitioners failed to state how Stevens' conduct showed him unfit. Given the reality of a part-time state Legislature, "the mere acceptance of outside employment, and presumably the contracting of 'advice and loyalty' that goes along (with) any employment, is not improper," the opinion said.

A spokesman for Stevens, Jeff Turner, said Stevens would not comment Wednesday but might today. Stevens, a Republican and the youngest son of Sen. Ted Stevens, represents the Sand Lake and Bayshore/Klatt areas of South Anchorage. Under the normal four-year cycle, he would next face election in 2006.

Two weeks ago, the Alaska Public Offices Commission staff rejected a complaint filed by Metcalfe that accused Stevens of failing to properly document some $1.3 million in outside income since taking office in 2001. Metcalfe said Stevens should disclose what he did for the money, but the APOC staff said his description of the work as "consulting" or "business services" satisfied the requirements of the law.

Metcalfe said he plans to appeal that decision to the full commission.

The recall garnered 1,232 signatures from the district in the first round of petitioning.

Glaiser, a Republican, said partisan politics didn't influence her decision. She said she chose not to seek a legal opinion from a special outside counsel because she hadn't heard allegations that she or the state's Republican administration had predetermined the outcome of the legal review.

RULING CONFIRMS TIMES HAS DONE . . .

No wrong

TO ABSOLUTELY NOBODY'S SURPRISE, the Federal Election Commission has become the second government agency to embarrass the Alaska Democratic Party and its pals by squelching their attempts to muzzle the Voice of The Times.

The party, which in the last senatorial election acted as a conduit for money and workers in Tony Knowles' failed campaign, assisted an Anchorage woman, Jean Paal, in ginning up a last-minute complaint. It asserted that the Times' payment of production costs to the Anchorage Daily News should be considered a prohibited independent expenditure or an independent expenditure by Bill Allen, Times publisher and VECO's chairman.

The Democrats were particularly rankled by Times columns and editorials advocating the election of Lisa Murkowski over Knowles and claimed they were paid advertisements not entitled to what is known as the "media exemption" from election regulation.

The commission's staff unanimously disagreed.

"This arrangement represents a unique journalistic endeavor between the Daily News and the Voice in an attempt to preserve the different social, economic and political perspectives provided by both publications," the staff said.

"We conclude that the media exemption applies and recommend that the commission find no reason to believe that any of the respondents violated the act, and close the file." The panel did just that.

THE STAFF ALSO recommended Paal not be sanctioned, saying her discussion of the complaint with the news media before the FEC could act did not violate the confidentiality provisions of the law.

So ends with a whimper the Democrats' failed second run at the First Amendment as it applies to the Voice of The Times.

A sorry attempt a few years ago at the state level ended the same way. The Alaska Democratic Party tried to gag the Times during an election. It filed a very similar complaint with the Alaska Public Offices Commission — but did not even bother to show up for the hearing. The agency unceremoniously tossed out that complaint after acknowledging the Times as a journalistic enterprise.

Let's say it plainly again for the umpteenth time, so even the Democrats will catch on. Our publisher is Bill Allen. It says that on our masthead. Every day. Like publishers through history, he has something to say and is politically active. A quick look at public records will confirm that. He has an agreement with the Daily News for a half-page to preserve the editorial voice of The Anchorage Times, which was founded in 1915 and which ceased daily publication in June 1992.

Now, at both the state and federal levels, election watchdog agencies say he is doing nothing wrong and that the Voice is a journalistic enterprise.

Despite the Democrats' aversion to free speech, that's reality.

■ PRESS CONFERENCE: Senator claims recall effort was personal.

By RICHARD MAUER
Anchorage Daily News

A day after state election officials threw out the recall against him, Senate President Ben Stevens declared he was being victimized by "personal attacks" at a brief press conference held at a South Anchorage park.

Stevens declined to answer most questions, including one central to the recall effort — what work he did for the $195,000 he was paid for consulting fees and business services by the oil field service company Veco.

"I don't have to say that," Stevens said. He said his disclosure reports had been ruled adequate by the Alaska Public Offices Commission staff and he wasn't required to do any more.

After six minutes at a podium set up on the grass at Jewel Lake Park, Stevens walked away with questions still coming his way.

The 2 p.m. press conference, arranged by the marketing firm of political guru Art Hackney, featured a live audience of supporters who applauded Stevens, a Republican. He stood at the lectern with his wife, Elizabeth, and their four children at his side. Elizabeth said the three older kids had been taken out of school for the occasion.

> "I've never, and would never, cross the line between my personal business affairs and the oath of office I signed ..."

In his opening statement, Stevens attacked the media and Ray Metcalfe, the leader of the Republican Moderate Party and originator of the recall.

"Ray Metcalfe's charges were baseless," Stevens said. "I've never, and would never, cross the line between my personal business affairs and the oath of office I signed to serve in the Alaska state Senate."

Metcalfe has said that Stevens' lucrative consulting business left him with too many masters and conflicts of interest. He urged Stevens to resolve at least one part of his complaint by proving he actually did work for his fees. Revealing a professional work product could prove he wasn't just selling influence, Metcalfe said.

In its ruling Wednesday, the state Division of Elections said Metcalfe had failed to provide enough of a legal basis for the recall to proceed even though he filed the proper number of signatures in the first round of petitioning.

Metcalfe said Thursday he believes a judge would side with him when he appeals the state's decision in court. Acknowledging he drafted his petition without the help of an attorney, Metcalfe, a former legislator, said the state improperly set too high a bar for what should be a political — not a legal — process. Metcalfe said it's impossible to meet the burden of proof that the Division of Election seems to be requiring when he is limited by law to a 200-word recall statement.

"It would not have made any difference what I would have written in that recall, the Division of Elections would've thrown it out," Metcalfe said. "If the voters think his behavior is corrupt, they should have the right to say so in the polls, and if he thinks we're wrong, he has the right to pursue the votes otherwise."

ADAK SEAFOODS: Partner didn't wrest control; this now affects an Aleut Corp. case.

By RICHARD MAUER
Anchorage Daily News

(Published: September 9, 2005)

An Anchorage judge dealt Adak fish entrepreneur Kjetil Solberg a resounding defeat Thursday in his efforts to wrest total control of Adak Seafoods from the Seattle company that has been his partner since June 3, 2004.

Ruling in the first phase of a lawsuit, Superior Court Judge Craig Stowers tossed out Solberg's contention that he purchased the 50 percent share of Adak Fisheries held by Aleutian Spray Fisheries in an oral deal in March. That alleged transaction, referred to in the five-day trial as "The Deal," didn't even end in a handshake, one of Solberg's lawyers testified.

Stowers said it was "wishful thinking" on Solberg's part to believe that a complex commercial transaction could be completed with the outline of an agreement scribbled on a whiteboard.

Efforts to create a written version of "The Deal," involving multiple drafts of contracts, promissory notes, deeds of trust and other documentation, collapsed in June as the parties grew increasingly contentious. The parties had agreed that Solberg would pay $3 million for the 50 percent stake but had not reached terms on other details.

Stowers also voided Solberg's filings with the Alaska Division of Corporations in which he declared himself the sole owner of Adak Fisheries and state Sen. Ben Stevens the company president.

Control of Adak Fisheries reverts back to Aleutian Spray and its officers, Cary Swasand and his son Chris, both of Seattle, as provided in the original 2004 operating agreement. Aleutian Spray sued Solberg in June, saying he was attempting to hijack their 50 percent share of the business.

Solberg, a Norwegian who came to Adak in 1998, raced from the courthouse as soon as Stowers finished discussing his ruling. Solberg's lawyer, Chris Cyphers of Anchorage, acknowledged the ruling "was a total loss" to his side.

The Adak seafood plant is uniquely positioned to benefit from a $10 million-a-year congressional gift of pollock fishing rights along the Aleutians to Aleut Corp., the Native corporation for the region. Aleut now has control of a former Navy base on Adak, and the company wants the plant to get its fish to help support an industry on the remote island.

Thursday's court ruling opens the way to resolve a related bitter lawsuit in another courtroom. In that case, Adak Fisheries and the Aleut Corp. have traded lawsuit and countersuit over whether Adak Fisheries can continue to rent Aleut Corp. real estate.

After he had claimed control over Adak Fisheries, Solberg sued the Aleut Corp., trying to force the Native corporation to restore its 30-year lease on the island. Aleut had declared the 2001 lease void on several grounds but said it was willing to negotiate a new one as long as it knew a stable, well-capitalized company was involved with Adak Fisheries.

It has said that Aleutian Spray is such a company. But with Solberg in control, Aleut had sought to evict Adak Fisheries. Solberg asserted that Aleut was involved in a conspiracy to shift processing of fish it controls to offshore boats, including those owned by Aleutian Spray. But Aleut chief executive David Jensen said that was nonsense.

Even as he was congratulating the Swasands as they left court Thursday, Jensen was trying to set up a meeting to attempt to resolve the lease impasse.

Stowers, who heard the case without a jury, had agreed to split the lawsuit into two phases so that the Aleut Corp. case could proceed with a determination of who owned Adak Fisheries. The second phase of the suit before Stowers, if it proceeds, will determine whether any party is entitled to damages and whether Stevens has any ownership in Adak Fisheries.

Stevens, a longtime consultant to Solberg, had attempted to buy a 25 percent interest in the company. The Swasands rejected Stevens' bid in December, but Solberg agreed to bring in Stevens after "The Deal."

Stevens irate over suit query

THREAT: Senator says he'll probe newspaper's circulation claims.

By LIZ RUSKIN
Anchorage Daily News

(Published: September 10, 2005)

WASHINGTON -- U.S. Sen. Ted Stevens lashed out at Alaska news reporters Friday, alleging that the Anchorage Daily News and KTUU-Channel 2 are engaged in a "vicious attack" on him and his son, state Senate President Ben Stevens.

"I intend to pursue it to find out why it is the owners of these media, that I have had a relationship with for over 40 years, have changed and decided to maliciously attack me as consistently as they have," Ted Stevens said.

Speaking with four Alaska reporters in his Capitol Hill office, he pointed his index finger, accusing them individually and collectively, blaming them and the companies they work for.

Stevens, 81, was angry that reporters had asked about a lawsuit involving his son and his connection to a company called Adak Fisheries. Ted Stevens said the questions allege that he did favors for his son, which he angrily denied.

"This is a continuation of a vicious attack against me and my son. It's politically inspired," Stevens said.

The lawsuit, which was partially resolved this week, is a complicated fight over control of Adak Fisheries and its agreement with the Aleut Corp. to lease a fish processing plant on the closed Navy base at Adak.

The stakes in the case are high because in 2003 and 2004, Ted Stevens added a rider to a federal spending bill to give the Aleut Corp. exclusive rights to a new $10 million Aleutian pollock fishery with the idea of turning the old Adak base into a thriving commercial fishing town.

A few months before the bill passed, the Aleut Corp. awarded the management of its pollock allocation to Adak Fisheries.

Back in 2003, when Stevens' fishery legislation was pending, the Daily News reported that Ben Stevens was a paid consultant to Adak Fisheries, which was poised to benefit from the bill. The paper also published the elder Stevens' denial that his son had lobbied him on the issue. In addition, the Daily News noted that Ben Stevens was on the board of an Aleut Corp. subsidiary that was working to redevelop Adak.

But a series of lawsuits and countersuits this summer revealed that Ben Stevens may have been more involved than that. According to the lawsuits, Ben Stevens obtained an option to buy 25 percent of Adak Fisheries in 2002. He signed a document attempting to exercise that option in 2004.

A judge issued a partial ruling in the case this week. He will decide in the next phase of the trial whether Ben Stevens' ownership claim in Adak Fisheries is valid, among other disputes.

What apparently ignited Ted Stevens' anger on Friday were questions about whether he awarded the pollock allocation to the Aleut Corp. to benefit his son.

He said he did it to benefit the people of the region and never discussed it with Ben.

FBI - Stevens-175

194A-AN-13620

"It had nothing to do with my son," he said.

He said he only learned of his son's possible ownership interest in Adak Fisheries "in the paper."

Actually, the Daily News has published almost nothing about Ben Stevens and his ties to Adak Fisheries since 2003, with only brief citations in two stories last year.

On Friday, the Daily News reported for the first time that Ben Stevens is a defendant in the Adak Fisheries lawsuit. The story gave the younger Stevens a passing mention and his father none at all. The paper is preparing a longer report and this week asked the senior Stevens for an interview.

KTUU has aired three stories over the past two weeks on Ben Stevens and Adak Fisheries.

Stevens alleged the Daily News and KTUU have been out to get him for years -- starting, he said, with a Daily News story in 2003 about how Stevens turned $50,000 into assets worth about $1 million by investing with Anchorage real estate developers John Rubini and Leonard Hyde.

"I know who you're after," he said, wagging his finger at the Daily News reporter in his office. "You're after me, and you've done a good job so far of keeping me tied down."

He said the "attack" on him involving his son in effect alleged a criminal conspiracy and was "very close to libel."

He said he didn't know why McClatchy Newspapers, the California-based company that owns the Daily News, would pursue the "malicious attack" on him.

"But people that live in glass houses shouldn't throw stones," he said.

He noted that McClatchy has been sued in Minnesota for allegedly inflating circulation figures for its largest paper, the Star Tribune in Minneapolis.

"I intend to find out if they're pursuing that activity in our state," Stevens said. "And I intend to show them we can fight back."

The Minnesota lawsuit was brought by four advertisers. According to a Wall Street Journal account of the case, a Star Tribune distributor whose husband works for one of the advertisers said a Star Tribune field representative told her to order extra papers to boost circulation numbers.

McClatchy maintains the claim is without merit.

Stevens hinted at some kind of congressional action.

"I believe there should be a law, a federal law, that requires truthful disclosure of circulation, and we intend to pursue that," Stevens said, in the course of venting his ire with reporters.

Is there a connection between his interest in accurate circulation numbers and his anger at media coverage of him?

"I don't see a connection, any more than you see the connection in connecting me with my son. OK? You draw your own conclusions," Stevens said.

Daily News Publisher Mike Sexton said the newspaper's reported circulation figures "will stand up to any examination" and said decisions about what to cover are made in Anchorage.

"It's unfortunate that Sen. Stevens has taken the position of attacking the media in an attempt to deflect attention from his son's current situation," Sexton said in a written statement. "I can assure the senator that decisions about what to publish are based on newsworthiness, with those decisions being made by executives and staff located in Alaska."

Sexton said it was a "very interesting approach" to attack the newspaper for "a story about (Ben Stevens) yet to be published."

KTUU news director John Tracy said his station is owned by a family business in Washington state but is run by longtime general manager Al Bramstedt, whose father sold the station to the Washington outfit.

Stevens alleged that Alaska reporters have decreased his effectiveness as a senator, he said.

"And whether you know it or not, I'm responsible for almost $3 billion a year that goes into the Alaska economy," he said. "My ability to do that now is questioned. The reason for my doing that is questioned. I think that you've harmed Alaska by this malicious attack on me."

REALITY CHECK ... Columbia Pictures is planning a horror movie set in Barrow, based on a comic book series called "30 Days of Night."

The Hollywood Reporter says it's set in "the northernmost town in the U.S., where the sun does not appear for more than 30 days during the dead of winter. An evil force emerges from the darkness, striking terror in Barrow."

According to people who have seen the story, the evil emerges from and works its nastiness in town basements.

Uh-oh. No basements in Barrow.

The evil doers are brought to heel by Sheriff Eben Olemaun and his deputy sheriff wife.

Uh-oh. Good Inupiat name, but no sheriffs in Barrow.

The guy who wrote it reportedly has never set foot in Barrow, and Ear is willing to bet not a single scene will be filmed there. Not even the exteriors. The script calls for action featuring the trans-Alaska oil pipeline, but uh-oh, The pipeline isn't even visible from Barrow.

guest of honor, is way over the top. Other auction items include a 2-year-old thoroughbred horse named "One Tuff Mutha," allegedly worth $12,000, a pearl and diamond necklace, a sojourn at the Tyson Foods ocean-front estate in Cabo San Lucas, and "dinner for six at a fire station near you," donated by the Anchorage Firefighters Association.

OUT AND ABOUT ... Spotted Sept. 3 on an incoming Alaska Airlines flight, Art Snowden, former head of the Alaska Court System. The court administration building on Fourth Avenue is named after him. Art lives Outside now. An earmite says he was in first class and coming back to go fishing for trout and silvers on the Kenai.

QUOTABLE ... From Thursday night's Alaska Women's Political Caucus do, featuring gubernatorial hopefuls Ethan Berkowitz, Eric Croft and Andrew Halcro at the palatial South Anchorage digs of Chris Cook and Georgianna Lincoln:

The vertically challenged Berkowitz, referring to himself and the 6-foot-or-so Croft: "I always say that between the two of us we're tall and handsome."

ON THE MOVE ... Word is that two prosecutors, Marcy McDannel and Windy East, have defected from the Anchorage District Attorney's office to become public defenders with the Office of Public Advocacy in Palmer. It's rare but not unique for prosecutors to cross the street that way. However, the Divine Appendage is having trouble getting its lobe around the concept of Maximum Marcy as a defense attorney.

• Milt Radford, a long-time Channel 2 weather person, is leaving the station and Alaska. Milt is headed for KDRV-Channel 12 in Medford, Ore., where instead of forecasting snow all the time he'll get to forecast rain all the time. Actually, earwigs report he was hired as the station's assignment editor but will be called on to do the weather now and then.

VERBATIM ... This was posted last week on Salon's War Room site:

"As the authorities shuffle hurricane refugees from the Superdome in New Orleans to the Astrodome in Houston and other venues scattered around Texas, ordinary people from all across America are posting offers on the Web to let people stay with them.

As Salon reader Sandy Harbanuk of Juneau, Alaska, reminds us, we know of a guy from Crawford who has 1,600 acres of land and a 10,000-square foot vacation estate he's not using just now. We wonder if he's going to post a note on craigslist offering to take some 'good folks' in."

BUMPER SNICKER ... On a car spotted on West Northern Lights this week: "Build the Bridge! Skagway to Honolulu."

QUESTIONS ... Is it possible the dress code at Colony Middle School forbids clothing decorated with rabbit images because rabbits are a symbol indicating support for pornography? A mom out there swears her kid was told that and scolded for breaking the rule.

• Is Channel 11 opening a Mat-Su Valley bureau? That's the rumor. It sounds like a good idea – fastest growing area in the state, as we all know. And Ear, a fan, has been worried about their news operation since they lost their top reporter, Jill Burke, to Channel 2.

CULTURE CLASH ... Radio personality, Sagaya salesman, and mayoral candidate Jack Frost has added a younger, liberal co-host to his KUDO afternoon talk show, Aaron Silbig, editor of Insurgent49, a new progressive newspaper around town.

Says an amused onlooker: "The point-counterpoint is not just liberal-conservative but generational. For me, watching them in the studio is funny — Jack in shirt and tie, Aaron with a turned-around baseball cap and a T-shirt."

FLYING FACTOID ... The Anchorage Planning Commission has been asked to approve a new car wash that features three regular car washing bays, one bay for oversized vehicles, two for RVs, and two for washing dogs.

Ben Stevens has been a good leader for state and the fishing industry

We are disturbed by the attempt to recall state Sen. Ben Stevens. The two issues the recall is based upon are allegations of corruption related to Stevens' consulting job and sponsorship of SB 155.

The first allegation is not factual, but based on the assumption that Stevens cannot separate his private consulting relationships from his public service as a senator. The state doesn't require legislators to quit their jobs before entering office. Many other legislators also have consulting jobs. Where's the evidence of corruption in Stevens' case?

The second issue is equally weak. Stevens sponsored a bill, SB 155, which would have paid for deferred maintenance and construction of K-12 schools across the state using a portion of the Permanent Fund earnings. SB 155 was co-sponsored by 12 other legislators. If legislation using the Permanent Fund earnings is such a problem, why aren't the other 12 legislators being taken to task?

We think it is also important to relay our experiences with Stevens for those who have not had the opportunity to work with him. Stevens, an experienced fisherman, has worked endlessly since becoming a senator to help the entire fishing industry through difficult and changing times. We believe Sen. Ben Stevens is an asset for the people of Alaska and we are thankful to have him working on our behalf.

Hooking a gift fish in the mouth

In June, Aleutian Spray Fisheries, a Seattle-based fisheries concern, sued Ben Stevens, president of the state senate, and Stevens's business partner, Kjetil Solberg. Aleutian Spray Fisheries accused the pair of trying to usurp control of Adak Fisheries. Aleutian Spray says it owns half of Adak Fisheries and that it has loaned the company millions of dollars. Solberg founded Adak Fisheries in 1998, and by some accounts owns half the business.

In 2003, Ben Stevens's father, U.S. Senator Ted Stevens, sponsored a bill that gave the Aleut Corporation, an Alaska Native corporation, 19,000 metric tons of pollock quotas, which could be worth from $10 million to $12 million a year. The Native corporation owns the only fish plant on Adak.

Adak Fisheries leased that plant from an Aleut Corp. subsidiary, Aleut Enterprise. At the time, Ben Stevens was on the board of Aleut Enterprise. He voted for the deal, which gave Adak Fisheries management of the Native corporation's pollock quotas. Ben Stevens said he had no conflict of interest, Aleut Corp. spokesman Curtis Smith said. But it looks as though the deal could potentially enrich Stevens.

Ben Stevens in fact had an option to buy part of Adak Fisheries when he voted to give the company management of the Aleut Corp.'s pollock quotas, Smith told KTUU Channel 2 news last week. Since 2002, Adak Fisheries has paid Stevens $300,000 in consulting fees, Channel 2 reported.

In June, Solberg said Stevens was the president of Adak Fisheries, and that Aleutian Spray Fisheries had no stake in the company, Aleutian Spray Fisheries attorney James Reeves told Channel 2.

An aide at Ben Stevens's Anchorage senate office said the office could not comment on a lawsuit unrelated to his work in the state legislature. A call to Ben Stevens's attorney, Mike Spaan, was not returned.

All-Alaska gas line is wishful thinking

By PAUL LAIRD

As Alaskans consider our options for a North Slope gas project, we'll do well to remember that wishful thinking is no substitute for actual thought.

Wishful thinking says we can build a pipeline to Valdez to sell liquefied natural gas to the West Coast. Real thought tells us the sheer volumes of LNG that would be required in order to make a project economic would depress prices in West Coast markets and undermine the economic viability of the project.

Wishful thinking says Alaska LNG can be marketed in Pacific Rim countries. Real thought says there's already an abundance of less expensive LNG from closer sources, ones that don't require a multibillion-dollar pipeline to reach tidewater.

Wishful thinking says we can tax a gas project into reality. Real thought says we'll only succeed in making Alaska an even less attractive place to invest, not only for gas commercialization but for any world-class resource development project that's subject to the vagaries of state tax policy. It will harm long-term production and eliminate private sector job and business opportunities for Alaskans, only to pump more money in the short term into a bulging state bureaucracy.

Wishful thinking says a pipeline project is economically viable already and doesn't need fiscal terms for gas and oil that are lucid and lasting in order to proceed. Real thought says that's an easy conclusion to reach when it's someone else's money, you aren't the one taking the risks on costs, and you haven't been burnt before when the state changed the rules after you made an investment.

Wishful thinking says Alaskans... can finance and build an "all-Alaska" pipeline without putting any of our assets like the Permanent Fund at risk.

Wishful thinking says Alaskans are entitled to whatever we want in terms of a gas project and won't have to assume any of the responsibility or risk ourselves, that we can finance and build an "all-Alaska" pipeline without putting any of our assets like the Permanent Fund at risk. Real thought tells us no investment bank is going to support a 100 percent debt-financed project the size of a North Slope gas pipeline. If we really want an all-Alaska line, we're going to have to mortgage Alaska's future in order to build it.

Wishful thinking says we can trust the government to build and operate a gas project. Real thought — along with an empty grain silo in Valdez, a failed fish processing facility in South Anchorage and fallow farmland at Point MacKenzie — suggest otherwise.

Wishful thinking says Alaskans can control our own destiny and won't have to depend on Canada if we build an all-Alaska line. Forget real thought. Even proponents of an all-Alaska route now say LNG exports to Canada are the catalyst to their project (the latest version).

Wishful thinking says there will be more jobs for Alaskans with an all-Alaska route. Real thought says there will be a surplus of jobs for skilled Alaskans regardless of which project prevails.

Wishful thinking says we'll get a better deal if we hold out once the one(s) being negotiated by the governor are finalized (never mind that we don't even know the terms). Real thought suggests that once negotiations yield an agreement, it just might be the best prospect for a gas project that many of us will live to see. At best, holding out for something "better" will result in years of delays — and at worst, in no project at all.

Wishful thinking says we can trust politicians who say an all-Alaska pipeline is the only acceptable option because it's best for Alaskans. Real thought says that while political posturing may be best for them, what's really best for us are new jobs, new business opportunities and a reliable new source of long-term revenues and gas supplies for Alaska's communities.

And those will come only through a project with the potential to actually be built.

OUR VIEW

Sen. Stevens

Questions are fair and necessary

U.S. Sen. Ted Stevens has said the Anchorage Daily News and KTUU-Channel 2 have launched a "vicious attack" on him and his son, state Sen. Ben Stevens.

What the Daily News has done is ask questions of both senators about legislation and financial dealings, about consultant work and any connections in the activities of the two men. That's our job.

Neither $3 billion, nor $30 billion, nor $300 billion, gives politicians a free pass.

These are fair questions that all Alaskans — the people both men work for — have a right to ask. We're in the business of asking them, and pressing for answers, because Alaskans have a right to the answers.

The elder Stevens made a point of reminding reporters that he delivers almost $3 billion a year to the Alaska economy.

There's no question that Ted Stevens has delivered for Alaska in a long and distinguished career in the U.S. Senate.

But neither $3 billion, nor $30 billion, nor $300 billion, gives any politician a free pass. No politician is above questions about their financial dealings or appearances of conflict. To regard any such question as an attack is just wrong.

We'll continue to ask the questions.

■ BOTTOM LINE: No Alaska lawmaker, no matter how powerful, is above straight questions from Alaskans. 194A-AN-13620

Governor pushes oil producers to make a decision

Wednesday, September 14, 2005 - by Bill McAllister

KTUU File

Anchorage, Alaska - Alaska Gov. Frank Murkowski hinted today that the North Slope oil producers have a limited amount of time to come to agreement on terms for a natural gas pipeline. The governor said that he wants to hear from the producers next week on a comprehensive offer he has given them for the terms and time line of the $20 billion gas line project.

In a speech in Valdez, Murkowski said that global market conditions are right for a gas pipeline from the North Slope to the North American grid. The governor says he has put something major on the table in the confidential negotiations between the administration and the producers, and he wants them to react to it soon, or else he says he will pursue other options for getting Alaska's gas to market.

Murkowski's apparent impatience with the producers was echoed by a state representative who is gathering signatures on a citizen's ballot initiative to tax the North Slope gas reserves. Representatives of BP Alaska and ConocoPhillips say they are indeed working to make the project happen.

Mike Hederbrock/KTUU-TV

"Speaking on BP's behalf, this is one of the most important projects in our global portfolio. This is a project that our chief executive officer has had discussions with the president and the vice president of the United States about," said Daren Beaudo, BP Alaska (left).

Murkowski says a gas line deal must follow six principles: a fair share of revenues for the government; access to gas for both Alaskans and other energy companies; the ability to expand the pipeline; partial state ownership; and jobs for Alaskans.

"Yesterday we transmitted a comprehensive draft proposal -- which was the state's basic position -- to the producers -- and it covered the six principles which I've outlined," said Murkowski.

"There's an immediacy to trying to get something done. And frankly delaying a project has costs, in terms of revenues and benefits," said Chuck Logsdon, Murkowski advisor (right).

Mike Hederbrock/KTUU-TV

Some of the urgency from the administration arises from the fact that the governor had promised a special legislative session this fall to consider a gas line contract.

The governor says that money from the gas line project could be used to restore municipal revenue sharing, a program he vetoed in 2003. And Logsdon says the tax structure that the governor proposes would be progressive, so that the state would earn more at high natural gas prices.

Alaska inspires big project ideas

By LEW M. WILLIAMS JR.

Gov. Frank Murkowski's administration is negotiating with oil companies to construct a natural gas pipeline from Prudhoe Bay to the Midwest. With the current price, the time is right to get that gas to market. Those wanting a gas line to Valdez also might be successful.

In the next few years, in conjunction with building the gas line, extending the Alaska Railroad south to connect with the continental railway system will be feasible. The governor is promoting the railroad extension, plus a road out of Juneau and a road out of Southeast via Bradfield Canal between Wrangell and Ketchikan.

The time is right for that railroad extension because of the bottleneck at West Coast shipping ports. Container ships have to wait in line to unload. That is why Prince Rupert, B.C., is building a container port.

Prince Rupert is closer to foreign ports, particularly in China, where shipping is booming. The governor points out that Alaska ports, such as Seward and Whittier, are five days closer for shippers than major West Coast ports. All Alaska needs is a railroad connection.

Williams

Alaska inspires big ideas. When Boris Yeltsin, Russia's first popularly elected leader, visited Alaska last month, he and the governor discussed a 42-mile railroad tunnel under the Bering Strait between Alaska and Russia. One problem is the lack of railroads in Russia and Alaska.

The governor brought up the tunnel with Yeltsin after the Rev. Sun Myung Moon, founder of the Unification Church, brought it up at a worldwide religious conference in Washington in June, according to the Washington Times. The Rev. Moon's organization owns the Times, United Press International and a fish processing plant in Kodiak.

Yes, Alaska seems to inspire big ideas. By constructing the Bering Strait tunnel, it would be possible to connect Labrador to Cornwall, England, now that the tunnel under the English Channel is completed. A non-profit Alaska corporation has been pushing the idea since the 1980s. It is the Interhemispheric Bering Strait Tunnel and Railway Group.

"You expect me to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, and then you ask me a question like that!"

Chairman of the corporation is George Koumal of Tucson, a mining engineer with worldwide experience who also speaks Russian. Secretary is Anchorage businessman and attorney Joseph Henri. There are members from Russia. The group is talking with Mongolian government leaders and hopes to enlist Canadian membership.

FBI - Stevens-190

M-92

194A-AN-13620-~~Press~~

There are others. A historical writer, S. Berliner III, of Glen Head, N.Y., proposes what he calls the "Strunnel," a takeoff on the 31-mile "Chunnel" from Britain to France. He pushed the idea unsuccessfully with Yeltsin, President Clinton and Gov. Tony Knowles.

There is an organization based in London called the Bering Strait Tunnel and Railroad Group, also pushing the tunnel idea. Its opponents have organized. They have a Web site, Halfbakery.com, that throws a wet towel over the idea.

Alaskans should hesitate before ridiculing Murkowski for mentioning the tunnel. Like many big ideas, it began with an Alaskan, a veteran of the Klondike Gold Rush.

John Jasper (Jack) Underwood was born in Sydney, Australia, but at an early age followed gold strikes around the world. After alternating between prospecting and editing newspapers in Nome and Council, he wrote a book.

Dodd, Mead and Co. published his "Alaska, An Empire in the Making," in 1913. In predicting Alaska's potential, he wrote:

"It is, therefore, not improbable that at some time in the not-too-remote future, engineers and financiers will join in forces in the construction of a tunnel under Bering Straits, and with the aid of a few hundred miles of railroad in Alaska and Siberia, make it possible to ride from New York to Paris on wheels."

Lots of big ideas have come and gone with Alaskans. The late Ernest Gruening's plan to build a huge hydroelectric dam at Rampart on the Yukon River comes to mind. Gruening was an Alaska governor and one its first U.S. senators.

In 1968, Gov. Wally Hickel predicted he would drive the Turnagain Arm Crossing by 1973. Gov. Murkowski's natural gas pipeline has a better chance. It will be the biggest project in modern times (until the Bering Strait tunnel), and again, the idea was born in Alaska.

The above makes Congressman Don Young's Knik Arm Crossing and the bridges from Ketchikan to Gravina Island seem puny. But let's not disparage the little projects. City of Ketchikan voters rejected a $70 million bond issue last month to expand the city's port. City officials now struggle with alternate plans. They will make it and probably build a new library and new museum along with it.

Alaskans might have two natural gas pipelines, be able to drive out of Southeast — or at least to Ketchikan's airport — and take the train to Paris in this century.

Maybe line between personal life, elected office eludes Ben Stevens

Ben Stevens "would never cross the line between (his) personal business affairs and the oath of office (he) signed"? ("Stevens declines questions," Sept. 9.) Does he know where that line actually is? His constituents want to be assured that none of his $195,000 in consulting fees in any way influenced his work as their senator in Juneau. Instead of producing factual evidence, Ben Stevens pulls his children out of school for a six-minute photo opportunity and claims he is the victim of "personal attacks."

Ben Stevens regularly makes personal attacks such as calling residents of the Mat-Su Valley "trash" and wishing to forcibly put Mayor Begich's head in a toilet and flush it.

If Ben Stevens would "never cross the line" between his personal life and his public life as an elected official, how does he explain the personal nature of his response to questions about his public life? Nothing has been alleged about Ben Stevens' wife or children. Yet Ben Stevens' response to the recall petition consisted of little more than a six-minute public viewing of his wife and children. He offered nothing of substance in response to the question actually posed by the recall petition.

Could it be that Ben Stevens cannot see the line that divides his personal life from his public work as an elected official?

Ben Stevens' secret fish deal

State senator helped steer Adak pollock to a company he had financial stake in

By RICHARD MAUER
Anchorage Daily News

State Sen. Ben Stevens held a secret option to buy into an Alaska seafood company at the same time his powerful father, U.S. Sen. Ted Stevens, was creating a special Aleutian Islands fishery that would supply the company with pollock worth millions of dollars a year.

The pollock allocation alone was projected to provide the company with $1.5 million in profits this year and $3.7 million in 2006, the company's founder said in an affidavit in March, before problems involving the company and the availability of fish cast doubt on those numbers. Under his deal, Ben Stevens would have been entitled to one-fourth of the profits of the company, Adak Fisheries.

During the time he held the option, the company grew in value from about $2 million to at least $8.5 million, according to an owner and court documents.

A copy of Ben Stevens' option agreement surfaced as one of hundreds of documents submitted in the last few months as evidence in several lawsuits involving the company, its owners, its landlord and government regulators.

In the past few weeks, Ben Stevens' attempt to obtain ownership in Adak Fisheries has been the subject of news stories on KTUU-Channel 2 and in the Daily News — coverage denounced by Ted Stevens at a recent news conference.

The secret option was a surprise to officials of the Aleut Corp., the intended beneficiary of the pollock fishery, they said, when they learned of it late last year. The company, the regional Native corporation for the Aleutian Islands and the Pribilofs, had invited Ben Stevens to serve as a director of Aleut Enterprise Corp., its subsidiary charged with the economic development of the former Navy base at Adak.

As a director of Aleut Enterprise Corp., and without disclosing his conflict of interest, Ben Stevens voted to transfer the pollock rights to Adak Fisheries and argued against the Aleut Corp. claiming a larger share of the profits, according to Aleut officials in court testimony or interviews with the Daily News.

Ben Stevens has repeatedly declined to answer any questions from the Daily News about the option or any aspect of his activities involving fish processing at Adak or the Aleut corporations.

"My attorneys have advised not to discuss it because it's before the court," he told reporters two weeks ago.

Nevertheless, Stevens discussed the option on an Anchorage talk radio show last week and asserted he had no obligation to disclose it.

In a deposition Aug. 10, Aleut Corp.'s corporate counsel, Roger DuBrock, said he first heard rumors about Stevens' option in summer or fall 2004, after Stevens left the Aleut Enterprise Corp. board. He said he began worrying about the consequences if it were true and word leaked out.

Ben Stevens

"My concern is that if it ever became public knowledge that Sen. Ted Stevens got legislation passed for a pollock allocation that ended up getting assigned to Adak Fisheries, and that Ben Stevens, his son, had an ownership interest in that company, there would be all kinds of unfavorable newspaper reports written that might damage Senator Stevens and might damage Ben Stevens and might damage the Aleut Corporation," DuBrock testified.

STEVENS: 'He was a friend who helped while I struggled,' Solberg says bility for the plant.

In December 2001, he found another Seattle partner, Icicle Seafoods Inc. Together they created another company, Adak Fisheries LLC, with each partner owning 50 percent.

The new company signed a new lease with the Aleut Enterprise Corp. on Dec. 28, 2001, agreeing to pay rent of $9,000 a month to start. Beginning in 2004, the lease required Adak Fisheries to pay an additional 30 percent share of its profits to the Aleut Enterprise Corp. after deducting the base rent and capital improvements.

CONSULTING AT $10,000 A MONTH

As a new state senator, Stevens was required to disclose his sources of income beginning in 2000. Those documents show that Solberg's companies had paid him $37,000 in consulting fees that year, an amount that increased in the ensuing years.

Solberg said Stevens was worth the money.

"The good thing with Ben is that he's extremely knowledgeable when it comes to fisheries," Solberg said. "He fished out there for several years, battled the same storms."

Solberg said Stevens worked as a consultant, helping him with regulatory issues and business, and traveled to Europe with him to meet fish buyers. Stevens didn't keep track of hours or prepare formal reports, Solberg said.

"He's sending me a lot of e-mails — kind of reports," Solberg said.

Stevens was paid a flat fee of $10,000 a month.

In particular, Solberg said, Stevens went to bat for him on crab issues before the federal North Pacific Fishery Management Council "and the state, the Board of Fisheries," Solberg said. He said Stevens lobbied the state Fish Board on his behalf before he was a state senator.

Stevens did other tasks that could only be done in Anchorage while Solberg was out in Adak, including picking up fishermen at the airport.

"He was a friend who helped while I struggled," he said. "Maybe he believed in me. Who knows?"

The 46-year-old Stevens managed to get his work done despite other demands on his time, Solberg said.

"He is up at 4 o'clock in the morning working out, he can drink beer till after midnight and then be up at 4 o'clock in the morning. He does a lot. I can do a little stuff, but sometimes I need to rest a little bit, and both him and his old man — Ben just keeps going."

On July 29, 2002, Solberg and Icicle offered Ben Stevens the chance to own part of Adak Fisheries.

They drew up an option that gave Stevens until Dec. 31, 2004, to pay $50,000 down, and $450,000 over time, to buy 25 percent of the company. His share would come equally from the other partners, whose holdings would be reduced to 37½ percent each.

The agreement was signed by Solberg, Stevens and Icicle president Don Giles.

The option document notes that Adak Fisheries had been formed with an initial investment of bly worth half that much at the time Stevens obtained the option.

Reciting the reasons for granting the option, the document expresses hope that Stevens will help increase the company's worth.

"Stevens is a consultant with extensive experience in the Alaska fisheries and the skills to help increase the value of the company, and has consulted with Solberg regarding fish processing opportunities in Adak, Alaska, for several years," it says. "In recognition of Stevens' contribution to the company, and incentive for the further efforts on behalf of the company, Icicle and Solberg are prepared to grant Stevens the option as set forth in this agreement."

The company grew quickly, primarily on its cod processing, though it also processed halibut and sablefish. Valuable pollock was still off limits. In the first few months of 2004, the company showed a $2.3 million profit, Solberg has said, though it ended that year with a loss, primarily because of the business failure of a buyer in Norway that cost Adak Fisheries $900,000.

Solberg wasn't satisfied with just processing cod and other under-utilized species. As a finished product in the countries that eat salted cod — mainly Norway, Portugal and Brazil — it's a valuable food. But the best profit is in the final processing in Norway, Solberg said, not the preliminary freezing his plant was doing. Crab was much more lucrative, but the volumes were small, he said.

Getting a share of the valuable pollock catch dominated by the Seattle-based fleet could greatly improve his prospects. Pollock, a white-fleshed bottom fish, is highly valued in Asia.

"Ben and I worked very hard on getting the pollock allocation through Congress," Solberg said in an interview. "It's no secret."

Solberg said Ben Stevens gave him advice, but to his knowledge didn't personally take Adak Fisheries' case to Washington or to his father in particular.

For the allocation to pass into law, Solberg has asserted, it wasn't enough that the fish go to the Aleut Corp. The Native corporation also had to assure Congress that it had a solid long-term lease with Adak Fisheries specifically, or "it would not have been eligible for, nor would it have received, the allocation," Solberg's attorney said in a court filing in July.

At the time, Ted Stevens said giving the pollock to Adak was important for the state, for the Aleut people and for making use of a military installation that cost taxpayers more than $3 billion.

Aleut officials and Solberg stressed that processing the fish on shore would promote long-term stability for Adak's economy. There was only one onshore processor on Adak: Adak Fisheries.

In October, 2003, with Ted Stevens' $10 million pollock rider pending in Congress, a deal was struck: The Aleut Enterprise Corp., with Ben Stevens voting as a board member, amended its lease to assign the prospective pollock allocation to Adak Fisheries.

In return, Adak Fisheries' base rent doubled to $18,000 a month and the company agreed to make additional investments in the processing plant.

Moller, the Aleut Enterprise Corp. president, said she wanted an additional change in the October 2003 agreement: a bigger share of profits after rent and capital investments were deducted. The original lease called for a 70-30 split of profits: 70 percent for Adak Fisheries, 30 percent for Aleut Enterprise Corp. She proposed a 50-50 split.

"Our argument was that there was a lot to do on Adak. Lots of improvements, lots of things that need to be done, and it's a partnership, 50-50," she said in an interview.

But Stevens, she said, "was instrumental" in convincing her to let Adak Fisheries keep 70 percent of the profits.

CONCERNS AT ALEUT

Moller said she and other Aleut officials knew Stevens worked as a consultant to Adak Fisheries, but they had no idea, even as he voted on her board, that he had a personal economic interest in the company.

"Kjetil came to a meeting we all had once, with Ben as his consultant, and I asked him, 'Well, what's Ben do,' because I think he might've been on our board at that time, but I don't remember. He said, 'Oh, you know, lobbyist, and stuff like that.'"

By coincidence, on the day the Aleut Enterprise Corp. board was scheduled to assign the pollock rights to Adak Fisheries, a story appeared in the Daily News about Ted Stevens' pollock rider pending in Congress. The story mentioned Ben Stevens' consulting relationship with Adak Fisheries.

Moller said she read the story with concern. She said she expressed her worries to David Jensen, the Aleut Corp. chief executive and the chairman of her board of directors.

"This is blatant, front-page news," she recalled, urging him to get Stevens to "put it on the table."

Jensen took up her request, she said. During the meeting, Jensen asked Stevens directly whether he had any conflicts of interest other than his consulting income from Adak Fisheries.

Stevens said he didn't, Moller said.

The pollock rider passed in January 2004. Federal fishery regulators initially told the Aleut Corp. the company could obtain more than 15,000 tons of pollock in 2005 and the same in 2006, Moller said.

Despite the good news, Adak Fisheries was going through turmoil.

"They wanted to own everything themselves," Solberg said of his Icicle partners. "And I fought back and bought them out."

Solberg couldn't afford the takeover on his own, so he found another partner, Aleutian Spray Fisheries Inc., also of Seattle.

Cary Swasand, the chief executive of Aleutian Spray, testified recently that he first discussed buying into Adak Fisheries in a meeting with Solberg and Stevens on his boat in Seattle on May 1, 2004.

Swasand said he reluctantly agreed to buy in. He became less troubled, he said, when Solberg agreed that Aleutian Spray would have two votes on the Adak Fishery board to Solberg's one, giving Swasand control of the partnership.

So, in simultaneous transactions on June 3, 2004, Icicle sold its 50 percent share back to Solberg for $4.3 million, and Solberg immediately sold it to Aleutian Spray for the same price.

Solberg said he thought the 50 percent share was underpriced — the company was probably worth $10 million at the time, he said.

If Solberg's estimate is accurate, it would mean the value of Stevens' option had grown from $250,000 to $2.5 million in less than two years.

Solberg said he told Aleutian Spray's president, Swasand, about Ben Stevens' option and Swasand agreed to honor it. Swasand has testified that he learned of the option during the meeting on his boat, but whether he agreed to honor the option is an issue to be decided in one of the lawsuits. Swasand, his attorney John Young and his son Chris, all of whom are deeply involved in Adak Fisheries today, have declined to answer questions about the option because of the ongoing litigation.

On Nov. 16, 2004, Stevens attempted to exercise his option, sending a $50,000 check to Swasand, according to court documents.

The check was still in the Aleutian Spray office in Seattle in December when David Jensen, the Aleut Corp. chief executive, paid a visit.

The 2001 lease between the Aleut Enterprise Corp. and Adak Fisheries had a 33-year life. But because it was signed while the federal government still owned the land, it required a complex cascade of real estate transactions involving five entities to remain in effect. The lease contained a clause saying it would terminate when the land transfer to the Aleut Corp. was completed. That clause also required the parties to negotiate a new lease with substantially the same provisions as the old, taking into account changed conditions.

"I WAS FLOORED"

The transfer of the Navy base occurred March 17, 2004. The Aleut Corp. declared the lease void and began negotiations on a new one. But the talks dragged on, which is why Jensen visited Aleutian Spray in Seattle in December of last year. He had thought that the Aleut Corp. might propose to take a 30 percent ownership stake in Adak Fisheries and reduce the rent to $1 a year, according to a Sept. 9, 2005, affidavit by Jensen in one of the court cases.

It was there that he first learned of Stevens' option, he testified in the deposition. He was shown the $50,000 check, No. 115, and Stevens' demand letter. That suspended any talk of ownership for the Aleut Corp., since it was suddenly unclear whether 30 percent of the company was even available, he said.

"I didn't say anything other than I was floored," he said. "I had no idea of it."

Jensen also was confronted with a significant ethical issue, he said.

"Had I known about an option or ownership issue, that would have been a real problem," he said at the deposition. As far as he had known, he said, "Mr. Stevens was a consultant for Adak Fisheries, not an owner."

"He was on the board of the directors of AEC (Aleut Enterprise Corp.) ... you can't be on the board and serving your own personal interests. That wouldn't have been acceptable."

Solberg said he and Ben Stevens discussed the option with Jensen when the three traveled to Europe together in summer 2003.

Jensen insisted in his deposition that he never knew about the option until last December. At one point in his questioning, Adak Fisheries attorney Bruce Johnston pressed Jensen about whether Ben Stevens disclosed the option at a meeting in Anchorage in 2003. Jensen held firm.

"I remember him coming and talking to Roger (DuBrock) and I in my office, and he wanted to have an arrangement with Solberg," Jensen said.

"Are you telling me, Mr. Jensen, that if Mr. Stevens were to testify that he did, in fact, tell you about that option, that you would say directly that he is lying?" Johnston asked.

"I would say that he did not tell me about an option," Jensen said.

"Are you telling me that if he were to swear that he told you that, you would swear in a counter sense that he was lying?" Johnston asked.

"I'm not going to call him a liar. I'm not going to tell — I'm not going to say that I heard him say the word 'option.' Because I never heard 'option.' I have never heard that from him," Jensen said.

While Ben Stevens told reporters Sept. 8 that he couldn't discuss the case, last week he spoke by telephone to talk show host Dan Fagan on KFQD-AM and asserted that he had no requirement to disclose the option to the Aleut Enterprise Corp. The comments were rebroadcast Friday on KTUU Channel 2.

"I didn't own any interest" in Adak Fisheries, he told Fagan. "I owned an option that had to be granted. It was a right to buy under an agreement that the owners would agree to sell to me."

An expert on business ethics and the law, professor Daniel Kane of George Washington University in Washington, D.C., said conflicts involving outside directors like Stevens are not rare in business but are remedied by disclosure.

"He has a duty to tell the other directors," Kane said. "Why does it have to be a secret if it's up and up? ... It definitely could raise ethical questions of what the hell is going on."

Alaska corporate law also provides that directors must disclose conflicts to other directors and shareholders. Failing to do so opens the door to a lawsuit that could void contracts or transactions touched by the conflict of interest.

Moller, the Aleut Enterprise Corp. president, said she first learned about the option in December 2004. She was having coffee with Young, the attorney for Aleutian Spray, when he told her about it.

"I was astounded," she said. "He (Stevens) was on our board and he was apparently exercising a personal right into something that he should've been looking at as a board member. He should have at least disclosed it.

"A lot of what we did over the last five years at the board level was dealing with fisheries," Moller added. "We did have several meetings, throughout several years on what to do with the fish plant, everything from NorQuest to Icicle and Aleutian Spray."

As a board member, Stevens was privy to the discussions and voted on matters involving those Solberg companies.

Moller said Stevens signed a conflict-of-interest statement for his board service and in it failed to disclose the option.

APOC TO WEIGH IN

On Aug. 3 of this year, five days after the Daily News contacted his lawyer about the option and three years after he was offered it, Stevens asked the Alaska Public Offices Commission staff for the first time whether it was something he needed to report, according to Christina Ellingson, the agency's assistant director.

Ellingson said she told Stevens the law wasn't clear. While it specifically requires disclosure of options to purchase real estate, she said, the law doesn't specifically require the reporting of an option to buy a business.

Stevens argued to the public offices commission staff that he shouldn't have to report the option because it couldn't be sold and therefore "had no intrinsic value," she said.

Ellingson said she has sought additional documentation out of the court cases and expects the full commission to consider the issue of Stevens' option when it meets later this year.

On Dec. 23, 2004, Young returned Stevens' check and rejected his demand to exercise the option. Young's letter, entered as evidence in one of the court cases, acknowledged that Aleutian Spray's Cary Swasand knew about the option before he bought into the company. But Young said any agreement Swasand made was based on information about the company provided by Stevens and Solberg.

"As you are aware," he told Stevens, "many of those representations turned out to be inaccurate and the financial position and business prospects of the company are significantly different than what was represented to Mr. Swasand."

Those misrepresentations voided any obligation of Aleutian Spray to honor the option agreement, he said.

Relations between the Swasands, Solberg and Stevens deteriorated from there. In March, the Swasands agreed in principle to sell their 50 percent share to Solberg for $3 million, payable over two years. They said the deal was never completed; Solberg said it was.

Solberg, asserting he was sole owner of Adak Fisheries, accepted Stevens' $50,000 check on March 28 and honored the option, though Solberg's lawyer said he never officially transferred ownership, pending legal resolution of the competing claims.

On June 9, Aleutian Spray called a meeting of

KEY PLAYERS

Kjetil Solberg
Norwegian-born entrepreneur owned a small freighter business in the 1990s, at times hauling fish from Alaska to Europe. On a tip, he visited Adak in 1998, after the Navy closed its base there, and discovered a rich, untapped cod resource. He made a deal with the Aleut Corp. to open a seafood processing plant on land the Native corporation hoped to obtain from the Navy. He befriended and then employed Ben Stevens as a consultant to a succession of companies he was associated with on Adak. He owned 50 percent of Adak Fisheries in 2002, when the company granted Ben Stevens an option to buy 25 percent of the company. He is now embroiled in lawsuits involving his partners over the ownership of the company, and with Aleut Corp. over his lease.

Ben Stevens
Son of U.S. Sen. Ted Stevens, fished for salmon and crab in Bristol Bay and the Bering Sea before starting a lucrative consulting business, Ben Stevens & Associates. Appointed by Gov. Tony Knowles to fill a vacant seat in the state Senate in July 2001, he became Senate president in 2004. He continued to do extensive consulting work while a state senator. He served as a director of the Aleut Enterprise Corp, an Aleut Corp. subsidiary, from October 1999 to October 2000 and from June 2001 through July 2004. As a director, he voted to assign $10 million worth of Aleut Corp. pollock to Adak Fisheries, a company in which he held a secret interest.

Ted Stevens
Senior Republican senator long involved in fishing issues. Served as Appropriations Committee chairman and authored a controversial rider in 2003 that allocated thousands of tons of Aleutian Island pollock to the Aleut Corp., the same fish his son voted to assign to Adak Fisheries.

TIMELINE

■ December 2001
Norwegian Kjetil Solberg and Icicle Seafoods form Adak Fisheries. The 50-50 partners invest about $2 million in the venture. They lease land and facilities for their shore-based plant from Aleut Enterprise Corp., a subsidiary of Aleut Corp., a regional Native corporation.

■ July 2002
The two owners of Adak Fisheries grant Ben Stevens an option to buy 25 percent of the company for $50,000 down, with the remaining $450,000 to be financed by Adak Fisheries. The three parties agree to keep the deal confidential. The option has to be exercised by Dec. 31, 2004.

■ Fall 2003
After lobbying by Solberg and the Aleut Corp., a rider surfaces in a Senate Appropriations bill that would grant about $10 million in pollock to the Aleut Corp.

Ben Stevens writes a check for $50,000 to exercise his option. But Aleutian Spray says his option is no longer valid. That is one of several ownership issues now in court.

ADAK FISHERIES

Adak Fisheries was founded in December 2001 by Solberg and Seattle-based Icicle Seafoods. It is the third venture by Kjetil Solberg to establish a fish-processing operation on Adak.

Adak Fisheries ran the seafood processing facility on Adak under contract to the Aleut Corp. Icicle was replaced in 2004 by another Seattle company, Aleutian Spray Fisheries, which paid $4.25 million for half of the company.

Ben Stevens received $280,000 in consulting income from Adak Fisheries between 2002 and 2004. He also obtained an option to buy 25 percent of Adak Fisheries from Solberg and Icicle in 2002, and he attempted to exercise that option in November 2004, but Aleutian Spray Fisheries refused to honor the option.

Now the validity of Stevens' option is the subject of a lawsuit in Anchorage.

Bering Sea pollock fishery
One of the world's largest commercial whitefish harvests. Annual catch exceeds 3 billion pounds, or about a third of all U.S. fish landings by weight.
Japan is the main market for pollock surimi, a fish paste, and pollock eggs or roe. The United States and Europe are the main markets for pollock fillets.

Adak
Former Navy base located halfway between Seattle and Japan, 1,300 miles southwest of Anchorage.
Adak is the southernmost city in Alaska.

North Pacific shipping routes
Solberg believed that Adak was ideally situated to process fish and ship it from the Adak facility. The main shipping route through the North Pacific passes near Adak, moving goods between the U.S. and Asia.

STEVENS: Fish processing deal generates ethics controversy, litigation

TED STEVENS DENIES A LINK

There is no evidence that Ted Stevens created the pollock allocation to benefit his son. In angrily denying any such link, the elder Stevens told reporters on Sept. 9 that doing so would be a crime.

In fact, he said, he never discussed the pollock allocation with his son. He said he only learned of the option from recent news reports.

Stevens said he pushed the measure to spur the economic development of Adak.

"The people I talked to are (Aleut fish consultant Clem) Tillion and the (federal North Pacific fishery management) regional council people, and I'll be glad to show you the memos that (Senate staffer) Matt Paxton wrote to me back in '03," Stevens told reporters.

The next business day, Monday, when a Daily News reporter asked to see the memos, Stevens rescinded the offer.

George Lowe, Ted Stevens' chief of staff, offered Tuesday to go "off the record" to explain why Stevens now will not provide the documents, but the Daily News declined to accept the information under such a restriction.

Stevens' spokeswoman, Courtney Boone, said Stevens' offer to provide the documents was valid only during the course of the Friday press conference. Stevens said nothing about a time limit on access to the documents at the time, although he did say the press conference would be his last comment on his son's option.

A SECRET OPTION

Corporations often grant stock options to executives as an incentive for performance that raises the value of the stock. An option typically gives the holder the right to purchase shares at a specified price during a given period of time. The price may not be discounted at the time the option is given, but the option generally anticipates a rise in value.

ON THE WEB

■ THE OPTION: To view a copy of the July 29, 2002, option agreement between Ben Stevens and the owners of Adak Fisheries and their acceptance on March 28, 2005, go to www.adn.com

Though Adak Fisheries was a limited liability company — more like a partnership than a corporation with stock — Ben Stevens' option was similar to a stock option. It gave him the right to buy a 25 percent stake in the fish processing company for an immediate payment of $50,000 and another $450,000 paid over time. The option does not specify an interest rate or term for the note.

Stevens had 29 months, until Dec. 31, 2004, to exercise the option.

Among the unresolved questions now subject to litigation is whether Stevens' option is valid.

Until two weeks ago, when a judge ruled in one of those lawsuits, Stevens was president of Adak Fisheries, for which he was paid $10,000 a month, according to a company owner's testimony.

Disclosure of Ben Stevens' option adds new political and ethical dimensions to a controversy that began in fall 2003, when a plan by Sen. Ted Stevens to allocate pollock to the Aleut Corp. surfaced in Congress.

At the time, Ted Stevens was chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, a powerful position from which he was extraordinarily able to push legislation through Congress. By attaching unrelated legislation to a vital spending bill and allowing it to go along for the "ride," he could bypass the usual process of introduction, committee hearings and waiting for debate to be scheduled on the Senate floor — stopping points where opponents could slow, change or kill the measure.

The pollock allocation to the Aleut Corp. was such a rider.

The rider caught the attention first of Alaska reporters and then the national press because of Ben Stevens' known connections to that part of the fishing business.

Those connections were public because, under state law, Alaska legislators must disclose their business interests. Ben Stevens had reported that, between 2002 and 2004, his consulting company, Ben Stevens & Associates, received $280,000 from Adak Fisheries.

In addition, in 2000 and 2001, three related companies — NorQuest Seafoods, Adak Fisheries Development Corp. and Adak Seafoods — had paid $77,500 to his consulting firm.

Ben Stevens also reported his service on the board of directors of Aleut Enterprise Corp., for which he received a small fee.

In 2003, the media reported on Ben Stevens' consulting relationship with Adak Seafoods in connection with his father's pollock rider. At the time, Ted Stevens dismissed any connection between his fish rider and his son's consulting activity, and any criticism of their activities.

"I don't care what they say about me. My son's now a politician. ... He doesn't care what they say about him," Stevens said in one of those stories. "Neither one of us is getting rich. That's for damn sure. And we're doing what we think is right."

At the time, Ben Stevens' year-old option was still secret, Aleut officials said.

Adak Fisheries was growing quickly in value — from an estimated $1 million to $2 million in 2002 to at least $8.5 million in 2004, according to one owner, Kjetil Solberg. As the value of the company increased, so did the value of Stevens' option.

And Adak Fisheries had the potential to grow much more, according to Solberg.

With the exclusive right to catch and process pollock, and the lease to do it at Adak, the company could eventually be worth as much as $100 million, he said.

'A RIDER ON FISHING RIGHTS'

The option eventually came to the attention of Adak Fisheries' landlord, the Aleut Corp., and raised conflict of interest concerns.

In the mid-1990s, the federal government began the process of transferring ownership of the decommissioned Navy base on Adak to the Aleut Corp. In 1997, the Aleut Corp. created a subsidiary, Aleut Enterprise Corp., to manage conversion of the base to civilian use. Ben Stevens was invited twice to join the board of directors of the Aleut Enterprise Corp., serving his longest stint from June 2001 until he resigned in July 2004, according to a company spokesman.

The Aleut Enterprise Corp. first leased some of its Adak real estate to Adak Fisheries on Dec. 28, 2001.

On Oct. 24, 2003, the rider allocating pollock rights to the Aleut Corp. was still pending in Congress but expected to pass. The Aleut Enterprise Corp. agreed to transfer the rights to those fish — worth an estimated $10 million a year — to Adak Fisheries as part of the lease agreement between the companies.

There were three directors of the Aleut Enterprise Corp. when it voted to assign those rights to Adak Fisheries. One of them was Ben Stevens, according to Aleut Corp. spokesman Curtis Smith.

Aleut Corp. chief executive David Jensen, who also serves as chairman of the Aleut Enterprise Corp. board, testified in a deposition on Aug. 9 that Ben Stevens never disclosed that he had an option to become a major owner of Adak Fisheries.

Jensen said when he found out about the option, in December 2004, he was "floored."

The secrecy surrounding the option was no accident. The parties to the deal pledged to keep it secret. In the section of the agreement headed "Confidentiality," it says:

"This agreement and its terms are to be kept strictly confidential, except to the extent necessary for any party to comply with public reporting or other requirements related to public service."

Though the language referring to public service suggests Stevens considered reporting the option in his required financial disclosures as a state senator, he never did. A spokeswoman for the Alaska Public Offices Commission said the law is unclear about whether disclosure of such an option is required.

ORIGINS OF THE DEAL

Ben Stevens was brought into the Adak deal by a plain-speaking Norwegian seaman who saw a big opportunity in a relatively untapped fishery. The Norwegian, Kjetil Solberg, recognized that Ben Stevens could be a powerful ally — even before, he says, he knew Ben Stevens was the son of Sen. Ted Stevens.

Solberg, now 49, was born in the fishing north Norwegian coastal town of Narvik and went to sea when he was 15. Later, he graduated from the Royal Norwegian Naval Academy and served in the special forces of the Norwegian navy.

After the navy, Solberg went into the sea-transport business, where he occasionally found himself in Alaska, picking up frozen cod for delivery in Europe. In Dutch Harbor in 1998, he ran into a fisherman who told him about Adak.

"He said if you go to Adak and build a fish plant there, you'll create the cod capital of the world. Naive immigrant as I was, I believed him," Solberg said, "but he was right."

With the end of the Cold War, the U.S. Navy was closing its sprawling base there, while the Aleut Corp., which hoped to obtain the site in a land trade with the U.S. government, was looking for economic partners.

"And I went home, and I looked at the globe," Solberg said. He saw the future.

"That's where you want to be if you want to do shipping in 2025 and fishing," he said. "It's a perfect location."

While an Alaskan might view Adak as the remotest of the remote — 135 miles closer to the Kamchatka capital of Petropavlovsk than to Anchorage — to Solberg, it looked like the on-ramp to a freeway connecting major ports on both sides of the Pacific.

"It's right there on the Great Circle (shipping route). Several times I crossed just south of Adak on my way from Japan, Tokyo Bay, to the U.S. Northwest and the Bay Area," he said.

Dutch Harbor, 450 miles east at the head of the Aleutian chain, is the nation's leading fishing port, serving the massive pollock fishery in the Bering Sea. To Solberg and the Aleut Corp., it wasn't a farfetched dream that the old Navy base at Adak could be transformed into another fishery hub well situated for transport.

Solberg flew to Adak in April 1998. He couldn't find a single fishing vessel, so he borrowed a rubber dinghy and a fishing pole and caught more cod than he dreamed possible.

"I was on top of an undetected chest of treasure," he said. "Cod is called 'the gold of the ocean' in Norway."

As he flew out of Adak, he drafted a letter to the Aleut Corp. expressing his desire to embark on a new line of work: fish processing.

By the end of 1998, Solberg had raised nearly $1 million by selling his Norwegian businesses and real estate, and moved his family to America. Within a year, with a Norwegian friend, Irgen Iverson, Solberg launched Adak Seafoods by converting an old Navy building at the edge of the Adak harbor into a processing plant.

In November 1998, the same Dutch Harbor man who told him about Adak introduced Solberg to Ben Stevens.

Stevens had limited involvement in Alaska public policy at the time, primarily the politics of fishery regulation and marketing. He had fished for salmon in Bristol Bay and captained a crab boat in the Bering Sea.

When he met Solberg, Ben Stevens was building a career working with regulatory agencies and giving advice — some of it on issues in which his father was involved. At that point, Solberg said, he didn't know who Ted Stevens was.

When Solberg did learn about Alaska's senior U.S. senator, he said, he didn't make the connection between father and son. In fact, Solberg was angry with legislation that Ted Stevens had recently pushed through Congress — the American Fisheries Act. The law Americanized the fishing fleet nationwide and divided up the vast pollock resource of the Bering Sea and Aleutian Chain among competing U.S. fishing groups.

Because it based fishing rights on past catches, and the Navy hadn't allowed fishing near Adak, the law excluded Solberg and others from a potentially lucrative pollock fishery in the area.

"It was quite some time after I met him (Ben), I had to ask him if he was related to that guy over there that was doing all these terrible things to me. And he said, 'Yeah, that's my dad.' "

Ben Stevens' advice to Solberg was to buy and process under-used species like brown crab and cod from local waters and be patient about changing the law, Solberg said.

In 1997, the Aleut Corp. created the Aleut Enterprise Corp. Its president and chief executive was Sandra Moller, a civil engineer educated at the University of Alaska Fairbanks.

Leaders of the parent company thought it would be helpful for the subsidiary to bring in directors with special expertise, Moller, 41, said recently.

Both Ben Stevens, with his fishing background and family connection to Ted Stevens, and Art Hackney, an Anchorage political and marketing consultant, were named as outside directors of the Aleut Enterprise Corp. on Oct. 20, 1999.

Hackney served through early 2001, according to a company spokesman. Stevens left after a year and then rejoined the board June 7, 2001. Five weeks later, Gov. Tony Knowles appointed him to a vacant state Senate seat from Anchorage.

Solberg, meanwhile, had begun the first in a series of troubled partnerships.

He and his friend Iverson sold Adak Seafoods to the established Seattle company, NorQuest Seafoods, which then created a new company, NorQuest-Adak Inc. As payment, Solberg said, he got 45 percent of the new company. But NorQuest-Adak fell behind in its rent to the Aleut Enterprise Corp., and Solberg again assumed responsi-the Adak Fisheries board. It asserted its full control, firing Solberg as chief executive and declaring that Ben Stevens had no role in the company.

On June 15, Solberg filed documents with the state saying he was the 100 percent owner and chief executive and that Stevens had been appointed Adak Fisheries' president.

Meanwhile, the Aleut Corp. agreed to mediate the lease issues with Adak Fisheries.

On May 23, an Adak Fisheries attorney, Paul Davis, urged the Swasands and Solberg to keep their disagreements to themselves and present a "united front" to the Aleut Corp. and the mediator.

Referring to an earlier meeting between the Swasands, Solberg and the Aleut Corp., Davis wrote, "I advised all of you (Swasands and Solberg) that any further public divisiveness at this point in time would be effectively used by TAC (the Aleut Corp.) as an excuse not to negotiate a new lease, and would result in the death of AF (Adak Fisheries). I cannot be more serious in my advice to all of you. Whatever you have invested in AF is at complete and total risk of being lost."

But the relationships, if anything, got worse and more public. On June 16, Aleutian Spray sued Solberg and Stevens, seeking an order establishing that it is still the 50 percent owner of Adak Fisheries. Solberg counter-sued, asking that the alleged March sale be declared valid and seeking damages.

Adak Fisheries has sued the Aleut Corp., demanding reinstatement of the lease, and The Aleut Corp. is in court trying to evict Adak Fisheries.

Last fall, the federal government accused Adak Fisheries and Icicle Seafoods of violating federal crab quotas. The companies are in court fighting the government's proposed $3.4 million fine.

And the Aleut Corp. has sued Solberg for back rent.

The first phase of the ownership trial ended earlier this month with a judge ruling that Solberg had taken over Adak Fisheries illegally, restoring the 50-50 split between Aleutian Spray and Solberg. He voided Solberg's filing with the state that declared himself the sole owner of Adak Fisheries and Ben Stevens as president.

Solberg contends the Aleut Corp. wants to get rid of Adak Fisheries altogether and sell its pollock to at-sea processors. Moller and other Aleut Corp. officials say that's nonsense, they just want a stable company on Adak and hope to negotiate a deal with "the last one standing" after the court cases are resolved.

Somehow, seafood has continued to be processed at the plant under Solberg's supervision. That changed Thursday when Solberg turned the plant over to Aleutian Spray.

With the lease unresolved and almost all aspects of the Adak Fisheries management and finances tied up in litigation, it's unclear whether the company has any value today.

In a hearing on Aug. 22, Solberg was still looking ahead, thinking about how he could get more cod to the Adak fish plant by getting the state to open waters in the Aleutians with the help of Ben Stevens and Clem Tillion, the Aleut consultant and former state legislator.

"If we politically work together up here in Alaska we could secure our cod resource," Solberg told Superior Court Judge Michael Rindner, at times stumbling a bit in his adopted language. "If we can sit together, have Mr. Tillion, have Mr. (Ben) Stevens, and have the Aleuts and myself work together, we can secure that by maybe implement the state Board of Fisheries on an emergency basis — Mr. (Ben) Stevens for us is very crucial in this process. If we cannot do that, if we don't work together, I believe that out-of-state harvesters will profit and we will lose."

Outside of court, Solberg said he wasn't suggesting that Ben Stevens would lobby the state Board of Fisheries, an agency over which he has funding and oversight responsibility as president of the state Senate. Instead, Solberg said, Ben Stevens would work with federal fisheries managers to reduce the cod take in the Bering Sea to offset an increased harvest from state waters.

Politicians who refuse to explain — that's efficiency, not skulduggery

Thanks to Ben Stevens for showing us how streamlined our political system truly is in Alaska. Our legislative offices can be easily melded with other lucrative activities (even if there is an apparent conflict of interest) without concern for accountability to voters. Family clout can help dispel the words of whistle-blowers.

Even when another politician cries foul, a legislator may call it a personal attack and simply say, "I would never do that." He need not bother with even the barest explanation of his juxtaposition with big business bedfellows. This kind of freedom is a boon to those who are actually working against the interests of their constituents. But a legislator fitting this description, when dismissing charges of wrongdoing, should bring the family along for the occasion — it lends a wholesome fragrance to his claims to purity ("Stevens declines questions," Sept. 9).

I don't get all the flap over Stevens. He's just trying to do a good job. Isn't he?

Stevens family's churlish attitudes in stark contrast to Hammond's

When Gov. Jay Hammond died, several friends and I talked late into the night about why we were so sad to lose him. It wasn't because he helped us "get" Permanent Fund dividend checks. It was because we never doubted that he put Alaskans ahead of any personal, political or corporate interests. Hammond was the first person I voted for when I came of age, and he was the last elected official whose integrity I never once questioned.

So it's instructive and disheartening to read that U.S. Sen. Ted Stevens is angry that reporters dare to question him about a lawsuit involving his son, state Sen. Ben Stevens, and a potential conflict of interest ("Stevens irate over suit query," Sept. 10). It's not only acceptable that the press asks these questions — it's necessary. Elected officials and journalists each represent the public's interest in different ways. Both senators are obligated to answer questions not because the press wants to know but because the public deserves to know.

How churlish and unprofessional of Sen. Ted Stevens to appear to threaten media companies with investigations because he's unhappy with legitimate inquiries into his actions. Thanks, Senator, for reminding us again of all the money you bring in, but after all, you're a public servant, not the Emperor of Alaska.

Boy, do we miss you, Jay Hammond.

OUR VIEW

Ben Stevens

Alaskans deserve answers about Senate president's actions

The secret fish deal and "consulting" work of Alaska Sen. Ben Stevens' have raised serious questions about the ethics of one of Alaska's most powerful politicians.

It is time that Ben Stevens stood before the public and answered the obvious and troubling questions about his self-serving actions on behalf of a company that may yet reap millions of dollars from the official actions of his powerful father, U.S. Sen. Ted Stevens.

So far, Sen. Ben Stevens has dodged the tough questions and full disclosure at every turn. His principal response, time and again, has been to impugn the motives of those trying to uncover his activities. So far he has given no hint that he understands, much less embraces, the concept of public accountability for public officials.

As the Daily News and others have reported, Mr. Stevens made decisions that served his personal financial interests while hiding his conflict of interest from the corporation on whose board he served. The fact that he tried to exercise a secret option giving him the right to reap a lot of money — perhaps millions of dollars — from the allocation of a public fishery resource to a private corporation only recently surfaced as part of a complicated fight playing out in state Superior Court.

Ben Stevens

To begin that public accounting, there are two principal questions that need to be answered:

Why did Sen. Ben Stevens conceal his interest in the ownership of Adak Fisheries?

And what does it mean when one of the owners of Adak Fisheries says, "Ben and I worked very hard on getting the pollock allocation through Congress?" What did that "hard work" entail? Did it involve lobbying his influential father or members of his father's staff?

Ben Stevens refuses to say. His father angrily insists he never talked to his son about any aspect of the matter.

Ben Stevens' financial machinations aren't just harming himself and the Stevens family name. It appears that the conduct of the younger Stevens is undermining his father's ability to advocate Alaska's economic and political interests in Congress.

And he is not just the son of the state's most powerful politician. He is himself the president of the Alaska Senate.

Sen. Ben Stevens needs to explain what he has done and why. He needs to answer the questions that will, once and for all, remove the cloak of secrecy under which he has transacted this particular business. And we do not mean the minimal disclosure standards that routinely apply to office holders in Alaska. Alaskans deserve real answers, specific and detailed, to the legitimate questions that have gone unanswered.

If Sen. Ben Stevens can show that he has behaved in an ethical and aboveboard manner, then the controversy can be laid to rest. His reputation will be intact, and his father can return the full focus of his attention to the needs of the state and the nation.

At this point, nothing less than a public accounting will do.

BOTTOM LINE: State Sen. Ben Stevens needs to explain what he has done and why. 194A-AN-13620

■ $1.5 BILLION: Governor says he'd like $1 billion to go to the project.

By MATT VOLZ
The Associated Press

JUNEAU — Gov. Frank Murkowski says Alaska could see a $1.5 billion surplus this year from high oil prices, and that most of it should go to pay for the state's share of a gas pipeline from the North Slope.

The state is trying to wrap up fiscal terms with three North Slope oil producers to build a natural gas pipeline to markets in the Midwest. Murkowski has proposed the state own 20 percent of the line. At an estimated $20 billion, the state's share would come to $4 billion.

Murkowski

The governor said the state could go into debt to pay for its share, but if the cash is there from oil royalties and taxes, it should be used.

"I think a reasonable cash equity is in order based on the good fortune we have had," he said.

Murkowski made the comments in Juneau Tuesday night, moments before announcing the amount of the Alaska Permanent Fund dividend for this year. Later, he said he wasn't proposing to spend the entire surplus on the gas line but figured about $1 billion would be appropriate. He did not specify what the remainder should be used for.

Murkowski also said he expected a deal with the producers to be ready for the public by the end of the week. The state last week presented a contract proposal to the producer group of BP, Conoco Phillips and Exxon Mobil.

Spending the "windfall" from high oil prices was a major point of contention in budget battles this year, with spending on construction projects reaching levels not seen in years. And that spending was with a surplus between a third and half of what Murkowski is predicting for this year.

How to spend the windfall will likely see a heightened debate in January when the Legislature reconvenes in an election year.

The state will have a better grasp of what the oil revenue surplus will be later this year when the state Department of Revenue releases its fall forecast. This spring, the department forecast oil prices would be about $38 a barrel. On Wednesday, the price of North Slope crude was $64.80.

THE ALASKA NATURAL GAS Development Authority is looking into an innovative way to extract propane from a gas pipeline and barge it to coastal communities.

Harold Heinze, chief executive officer, told legislators recently that the authority is considering whether propane could be extracted at the Yukon River bridge from a pipeline carrying North Slope gas. It would then be shipped in large, re-usable tanks down the river to distribution centers in coastal Alaska.

Heinze said the pipeline could produce up to 50,000 barrels of propane and reduce cooking and water heating costs in water-accessible areas of rural Alaska.

The Divine Appendage

DO SEND A FONDU . . . to Reps. Lesil McGuire and Tom Anderson, who announced Thursday at a Young Republicans fund-raiser that they are now married. Like many newlyweds, they were coy about details, promising to reveal when and where at a future party to celebrate the happy event. The grapevine says the marriage, reportedly a quiet affair, happened early in the summer. And it might involve a large diamond ring.

Some grumpy guys groused about nepotism problems bound to arise once the session convenes. For one thing, Lesil is chairwoman of the House Judiciary Committee and Tom is vice-chair. But that seems pretty tame to Ear. The real issue is, how can they live together and live in their separate districts, as is required?

To address this dilemma, Inquisitive Ear consulted former Sen. Mike Szymanski, who was briefly married to Drue Pearce while both were in the state Senate. Mike said their residence problem was solved when he chose not to run for re-election in 1990. Ear predicts Lesil and Tom solve their problem the same way — one of them won't run again. The Omniscient Orifice bets it's Tom.

SPECIAL ALLOCATION . . . Curtis Smith of Lottsfeldt/Smith Creative and a spokesman for the Aleut Corp., quoted in last Sunday's investigative opus about Ben Stevens' secret fish deal, arrived at work Monday to find a dead salmon on the doorstep. It was wrapped in the newspaper story, with his name printed in bold.

"I thought it might be a joke," said Curtis, "but none of the usual suspects took responsibility. Besides, my friends are too cheap to part with a piece of meat with winter coming and all."

Ear still thinks it was a joke. If it was real, it would have been a pollock, right?

AN OVERDUE FONDU . . . Republican honchos report Valley politico Tuckerman Babcock and Kristie Leaf, daughter of Sen. Lyda Green, are now married to each other. Court records indicate each shed a spouse this spring. Ear's invitation to the wedding must have gotten lost in the mail, but belated congratulations.

Q AND A . . . Which wealthy ex-banker and his wife pleasantly shocked Anchorage Symphony executive director Sherry Reddick by leaving a $25,000 personal check on their table at the Symphony Pops event last week without saying a word? Earwigs say it was Ed and Kathy Rasmuson.

NOTABLE . . . The Chamber of Commerce issued its annual list of "Alaska's top 40 under 40" last week. Among the honored, newlywed Lesil McGuire, Anchorage District Court Judge Brian Clark, former and maybe future Assembly candidate Bill Wielechowski and Pat Flynn of the Alaska Railroad.

. . . ADN reporter Liz Ruskin is officially the fastest lady reporter in Washington, D.C. On Sept. 9, she placed first among women members of the National Press Club at its annual 5K scholarship run, with a time of 23 minutes, 17 seconds.

LUCKY TIMING . . . Speaking of Pat Flynn, his mom, longtime Assembly member Heather Flynn, has moved back to Anchorage for good following the death of her husband, Hank Rosenthal, two years ago. Heather reports she sold her house in Galveston, Texas, in April.

CLOSE BUT NO CIGAR . . . Earmites claim that last month in Fairbanks, at a Chamber luncheon, Gov. Murkowski introduced Rep. Jim Holm as "John Holmes." A few hipsters in the audience got the giggles because John Holmes was an old porn star. Meanwhile, at the energy conference in Valdez last week, some emcee introduced Ethan Berkowitz as "Eric Berkowitz," efficiently combining the names of the two Democrats who have declared in the governor's race, Burkowitz and Eric Croft.

Earwigs did not report if Ethan's head exploded.

FLYING FACTOID . . . Hugh Hefner has apparently cut back from seven girlfriends to three, one of whom is "Holly Madison of Craig, Alaska." That's what a Web site called Girls Next Door says, so it must be true, right? Ear finds no Holly Madison in the right age range in state records, but who knows. It could happen.

ON THE MOVE . . . Julia O'Malley, former Juneau Empire reporter now writing for The Oregonian, will join the metro staff at Your Favorite Good Morning Newspaper next month.

OH, PAPA . . . The question is, did they do it on purpose? Hot Topic, the hip national clothing chain with an outlet at the 5th Avenue mall that caters to everyone from punks to Goths to rockers, has produced a line of T-shirts honoring different states. Check www.hottopic.com and search for "Alaska" to see ours. It depicts a map of Alaska crushing a map of Texas, which is as it should be, of course. The slogan accompanying the scene reads, "Who's Your Daddy?"

Hmmm. Is it just a coincidence, or did they pick it up from the Lisa-Tony U.S. Senate campaign?

Anderson to leave district, not post

■ HOUSE: The newly married lawmaker is departing Muldoon.

By SEAN COCKERHAM
Anchorage Daily News

Anchorage state Rep. Tom Anderson has married fellow Rep. Lesil McGuire and is moving out of his Muldoon district to live with his bride across town. But he plans to keep representing his old neighborhood in the Legislature.

Can he do that? You bet, said House Speaker John Harris, a Republican from Valdez. No way, said Kay Brown, a former five-term legislator and spokeswoman for the state Democratic Party.

The law isn't clear. The rules saying a candidate must live in the district to run for election are silent on the question of remaining there once in office.

Anderson

"As far as I know it's a question that's not been considered by a court in this state," said Tam Cook, director of legal services for the Legislature. "It's an open question."

Anderson said he is in the process of moving in with McGuire in the Klatt-Southport area of South Anchorage.

McGuire

He said he intends to finish out the last year of his two-year term and not run again for election.

Asked if he thought it was appropriate to keep representing District 19 when he no longer lives there, Anderson pointed to his Muldoon roots. He said he's lived in the district almost his entire life. He attended Muldoon Elementary, Clark Junior High and Bartlett High School.

ANDERSON: Opinions follow party lines

The second-term lawmaker said that, when last elected in 2004, he had no intention of moving out. He wasn't trying to deceive voters, he said.

But Anderson said McGuire is his soulmate. So he's decided to move in with her.

"I love her so much. And I'm excited about our future together," Anderson said.

McGuire has a house on Kimberly Lynn Circle, off West Klatt Road. Anderson will be leaving his place on East Second Avenue.

He said he won't let this change of residence affect his representation. He said he's been honored to represent Muldoon in Juneau.

"I want my constituents to know that I have always put them first and foremost and I will continue to do that," Anderson said.

Peggy Robinson, a Democrat who unsuccessfully challenged Anderson in the 2004 election, said she doesn't object to him finishing out his term. She said Anderson does have deep ties to the district.

Also, she said, this isn't entirely new. Past legislators have kept up a fiction of residing in their district but spent almost all their time outside of it, she said.

But Kay Brown, communications director for the Alaska Democratic Party, said, "We think the people of his district deserve a representative who lives there."

Brown said she reads the Alaska Constitution to say that Anderson cannot legally move out and keep his House seat, although she didn't know whether the party would formally challenge him.

Here's what it says in Article 2, section 2 of the Constitution:

"A member of the Legislature shall be a qualified voter who has been a resident of Alaska for at least three years and of the district from which elected for at least one year, immediately preceding his filing for office."

William Large, attorney for the Alaska Republican Party, disagreed with Brown's interpretation. He said he didn't see anything in a literal reading of the Constitution to keep Anderson from moving out of his district and still representing it.

But he said his party, at this point, does not have a position on what Anderson is doing.

Speaker Harris said Anderson knows his district well and should be allowed to finish this term.

Harris' opinion holds a lot of weight. Alaska law declares that the state House of Representatives, which Harris leads, is the judge of the qualifications of its members.

FOR ALASKA, AN LNG LINE WOULD BE . . .

A bad deal

PROPONENTS OF a liquefied natural gas pipeline from Prudhoe Bay to Valdez claim their project would employ more Alaskans than a line through Canada to the U.S. Midwest. But the numbers and simple logic don't support the claim.

The in-state portion of an Alaska Highway line would be just a few miles shorter than the LNG line and the capacity of the line through Canada would be three times greater.

The LNG line would be built to carry 1.5 billion to 2 billion cubic feet of gas a day. The Alaska Highway line capacity would be 4.5 billion to 6 billion cubic feet per day.

Those dimensions mean that everything about the line to the Midwest would be roughly three times larger, from the line's diameter to the processing and compression facilities at Prudhoe Bay and along the route. That would involve more jobs in Alaska and hold the possibility of jobs for Alaskans on the Canadian portion of the line.

More important than the number of jobs created in construction is probably that the Canadian line's cost for the throughput capacity would result in far larger tax and royalty revenues for the state.

The proponents, led by Fairbanks North Star Borough Mayor Jim Whitaker, are shrilly adamant in their claims, but in reality there isn't much to support them.

AMONG THE LNG project's other weak points are these:

- It has no gas and no customers. Getting enough gas to justify the line would require years of litigation against the North Slope producers, perhaps decades.
- The plan assumes that the project will have both federal loan guarantees and export permits needed to ship the gas to British Columbia or Mexico. But those two things are mutually exclusive; a pipeline project could theoretically have one or the other, but not both.
- Its costs per unit of gas would be higher than for a large-capacity line through Canada, about $1 more per thousand cubic feet per day. That would mean a significant reduction in wellhead value for the gas and therefore lower tax and royalty payments to the state.
- The plan would put all risk of price fluctuations, completion problems and cost overruns on the resource owners, the producers and the state of Alaska.
- The authority assumes it will receive a federal tax exemption from the Internal Revenue Service. An exemption from taxes may be possible for gas delivered within the state, but is unlikely for gas shipped out of state.
- Its plan calls for sending up to 3.3 billion cubic feet of gas a day to West Coast ports even though no receiving ports exist or even have construction permits. That volume would be greater than the West Coast could absorb and pipelines don't exist to ship it east.

The most likely role the authority could play, if the state accepted its plan, would be to spoil chances of a viable gas pipeline for many years to come.

Ben Stevens redefines the meaning of words for his gain -- a la Clinton

As I read the lengthy Sept. 18 article about Ben Stevens' involvement with Adak Fisheries, I was getting a bit lost trying to track the political intrigue until one statement made it all too clear ("Ben Stevens' secret fish deal"). When asked about why he didn't disclose his option with Aleut enterprise Corp., Mr. Stevens stated, "I didn't own any interest" in Adak Fisheries, "I owned an option that had to be granted." Who is he trying to kid? This is nothing more than a political perversion of reality for personal gain. It is no better than when Clinton redefined sexual relations to exclude his own after he got caught in the act.

Effort to recall Sen. Ben Stevens makes appeal to Superior Court

The committee seeking to recall state Sen. Ben Stevens appealed Wednesday to Superior Court in Anchorage for an order overturning the state decision to throw out its petition.

Citizens for Ethical Government, a group closely aligned with the offshoot Republican Moderate Party of former legislator Ray Metcalfe, said the state Division of Elections improperly rejected the recall Sept. 7 after more than the required 1,232 signatures were submitted. Elections director Laura Glaiser said the organizers failed to allege sufficient legal grounds to recall Stevens, the Senate president and a Republican who represents a South Anchorage district.

Stevens lauded Glaiser's decision last month, but Metcalfe said it was politically inspired. Metcalfe said Glaiser, backed by the state Department of Law, set an impossibly high standard for a political process enshrined in state law.

Metcalfe's appeal was filed by Ken Jacobus, a politically active attorney who served for 20 years as the Republican Party's general counsel until he was replaced in 2003. Jacobus said he hasn't yet developed a legal strategy for the appeal but expects the matter to be handled on an expedited basis by the court.

"I have nothing against Senator Stevens," Jacobus said. "I'm trying to uphold one of the people's democratic rights."

Alaskans have had it with greedy, unethical Stevenses, Murkowskis

As I read the latest "expose" regarding another of this state's career politicians (Ben Stevens), I am curious as to what it will take for the voting people of this state to wake up. Have we had enough yet of the Stevens-Murkowski oligarchy? How many scandals will it take before we vote these crooks and greedy, unethical, privileged renegades out of office?

I see they finally indicted Tom Delay -- big buddy of ol' Uncle Ted. These career politicians who think they are entitled to scam the public whenever they want make me sick to my stomach.

Wake up, Alaska. Let's send the Stevenses and Murkowskis a clear message ... we can't afford to have you represent yourselves at our expense any longer.

Alaska Airlines takes the idea of flying fish to a whole new level

$500,000 grant from federal funding pays for custom paint job on company's passenger jet

By WESLEY LOY
Anchorage Daily News

So, you landed a big king salmon this summer? It can't compare to the colossal king Alaska Airlines plans to land this morning in Anchorage.

The Seattle-based carrier has painted nearly the full length of a Boeing 737-400 passenger jet as a wild Alaska king, or chinook, salmon. The airline has dubbed its flying fish the "Salmon-Thirty-Salmon."

It's a bold promotional move to celebrate wild Alaska seafood and also the carrier's role in hauling millions of pounds of fresh salmon, halibut, crab, shrimp and other seafood out of the state each year.

The fishy paint job was done on a grand scale, company spokesmen said. A team of 30 painters and airbrush artists used more than 140 gallons of paint and took 24 days to render the lifelike chinook — triple the time normally needed to coat an airliner.

"There's no question, at least in my mind, that this is the finest airline art ever conceived," said Bill MacKay, the company's Anchorage-based senior vice president. "People will just be amazed at the detail."

A local nonprofit agency, the Alaska Fisheries Marketing Board, gave Alaska Airlines a $500,000 grant to paint the jet. The money came out of about $29 million in federal funding U.S. Sen. Ted Stevens of Alaska and his congressional col-

Getting the gas deal right is paramount and takes time

Should the state own part of a multi-billion-dollar North Slope gas pipeline? If a deal is finally reached between North Slope producers and the state on a pipeline deal, the state's ownership could be part of it.

It's a big question and it deserves a lot of discussion.

For starters, state and industry leaders would have to explain why having the state as a full-blown partner would help the pipeline get built.

From the companies the best answer I get is that it "aligns" the state's interests with the companies' so as to minimize chances of disagreements and lawsuits in the future.

TIM BRADNER ECONOMY

Having a seat at the table, this argument goes, allows the state to participate in decisions on things like pipeline tariffs — the fees charged for shipping gas through the pipe — a huge source of controversy with the trans-Alaska oil pipeline.

Part of the deal could also involve the state taking its share of gas production — called royalty gas — "in kind," or in the form of gas rather than money paid by the producers after selling this gas. The deal might also involve the royalty share being enlarged to essentially replace the state production tax.

This could amount to as much as a billion cubic feet a day, making the state one of the biggest gas marketers in North America.

All this will need to be fully explained, because as a partner we would assume more risks.

What are those? One is that the project could experience delays and cost overruns, a realistic concern given recent experience with other energy mega-projects, the Sakhalin liquefied natural gas project being one case in point.

It can be argued that the tariff allowed to pipeline owners by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission allows the owners to repay costs, whatever they are, and make a regulated and restricted profit.

An 80 percent loan guarantee by the federal government offers some further protection.

What about the state selling its royalty gas itself? If we make more money by selling our royalty gas ourselves — and transporting our gas through our share of the pipeline — than by letting the producers market the gas for us, this could be a good deal.

But what if we're not so good at marketing gas? Is there a possibility we could make less than if we'd sold our royalty to the producers? It's always a risk.

We were bumpkins 25 years ago and got taken to the cleaners in a royalty oil deal by people touting petrochemical plants in Valdez in return for generous terms on royalty oil. We learned some hard lessons.

We've done much better since then in marketing our royalty crude oil. Let's hope our luck holds with selling gas.

If the pipeline deal works right our risk could be mitigated actually. The guaranteed profit of the pipeline ownership, which is not affected by the ups and downs in the market, could give us some protection.

In a way, this is like balancing your investment portfolio with bonds and stocks. Think of pipeline ownership like a big bond, with guaranteed profits and less risk. Think of selling royalty gas like owning stocks, with more risk.

In fact, we would be exposed to all of the market and pipeline cost risk as a royalty-gas owner whether we take the gas in kind or not. That's because royalty payments are based on the wellhead value, which is determined by market prices minus transportation, the latter determined mainly by construction costs.

Looking at it this way, having some of the pipeline ownership with its guaranteed income actually reduces our risk.

There are lot of questions in all this, but here's one other big one, maybe the most important: What do Alaskans really want from a gas project? Maximum revenues and a fatter Permanent Fund dividend check? Short-term construction jobs? Long-term economic growth? (A gas pipeline will stimulate new gas exploration, and inevitably some oil will be found too.) Gas for Fairbanks and Anchorage? Gas liquids for those long-awaited petrochemical plants in Valdez, assuming they make financial sense? All of the above?

We need to sort out our priorities, but much of the above seems quite possible if this deal is put together right. That's the trick. We're all eager for an agreement and frustrated that it's taking so long.

Pedro van Meurs, an international consultant working with the state in the negotiations, counsels patience.

Getting the deal right in the beginning is all-important. If it takes a few more weeks, even a few more months, to do that, so be it, van Meurs says.

I agree. Ten, 20, 30 years from now it won't matter that it took a little longer.

WALLY HICKEL
COMMENT

It's time to plan for the next boom, whether it's a gas line, the opening of the coastal plain of ANWR, the state and federal construction agenda already in motion, or the large-scale mining operations currently being scoped and permitted.

How do Alaskans, rural and urban, prepare themselves for the job opportunities that will accompany these projects? How do our businesses benefit? How do our communities and state agencies prepare themselves for the increased demand on their services?

Before statehood, we were forced to watch from the sidelines as events like these came and went. All the decisions were made Outside. Now it is up to us.

Two weeks ago, these issues were the theme of the annual Alaska Dialogue hosted by the Institute of the North at the Talkeetna Alaskan Lodge. More than 100 Alaskans, ranging in age from 18 to 86, participated from many parts of Alaska.

The opening panelists recalled the oil pipeline construction in the early '70s, emphasizing the enormous impact of that boom, both positive and negative, and the lessons that Alaskans can learn from it.

Other speakers discussed how to prepare our work force for the future, including the high school students of today, while others explored the impact of another boom on health care delivery, public safety, education, housing and transportation.

My message was something I learned at a young age. In Dust Bowl days in Kansas, where I was raised on a tenant farm, everyone in the family worked. At the age of 8, I drove a gangplow with four head of horses, carving furrows in the rich Kansas soil.

One day I was far from the house when a storm suddenly filled the sky with lightning, and its thunder rumbled across the prairie. I was terrified. I unhooked the horses from the plow and attached a little red wagon, and we galloped for home.

My mother saw me coming from our kitchen window and was standing on the steps when we roared up to the house. By this time, somehow, the sky had cleared. The rain and lightning had stopped. I tried to explain what happened, as an 8-year-old would.

Mom stood there in her apron and listened to my story. Then she smiled and said, "Don't be afraid, Walter. Don't be afraid." Then, in a steady, gentle voice, she told her 8-year-old son to turn that team of horses around and head back to the field.

And that's my message to Alaska. Don't be afraid. Don't fear the future.

Most of the world would gladly welcome the opportunities on Alaska's doorstep, especially 35 trillion cubic feet of proven natural gas reserves at the North Slope waiting to reach the market. And think of the opportunities to create an economy by adding value to that gas if we insist that the gas line remains in-state, something we must do.

Yes, let's learn from the past, and let's be bold enough to embrace the future. Alaska can be a model for how to use wisely the gifts God has given us, not just for ourselves, but for the world.

Everyone says Alaska is unique. That's true, and what fascinates me most is the unique obligation of ownership Congress placed on our shoulders when we accepted the terms of the Alaska Statehood Act, including the provisions in our constitution. It's the responsibility of all of us to ensure that our 103 million-acre entitlement, and the resources it contains, are wisely used and cared for.

That's why the issues addressed at the recent dialogue are so important. By looking forward and planning intelligently, we can be successful in making the owner state work for the benefit of all our people. When we succeed, we truly will be a model for others, including our neighbors to the west, the Russians and Chinese.

And we might even assist the countries in Africa and elsewhere that have been unable to win the war against poverty, the breeding ground of terrorism. These are delicate and dangerous days in the world. People are looking for a new direction. They are looking for a light. And that light can come from the North.

Of twelve editorials and commentaries in the Voice of the Times between May 25 and September 30 of this year that have referenced the Alaska Gasline Port Authority and All-Alaska Gasline Project, all twelve have been negative...

It is detrimental to Alaska to use the Voice of the Times as the voice of Exxon, ConocoPhillips and British Petroleum; who would like nothing more than to make the All-Alaska Gasline project disappear.

The common ownership of the Voice of the Times and major oil field engineering and service company VECO, cannot be ignored. VECO describes itself as a multi-national corporation that provides services to the energy, resource and process industries. In Alaska, the majority of that business volume results from negotiated contracts with the three major producers: Exxon, ConocoPhillips, and British Petroleum.

Of meaningful concern is that the Voice of the Times may be advocating for the self-interest of its owners. A position that is perfectly legitimate in the business world, but not a valid position if the Voice of the Times purports to speak for the good of Alaskans in general.

It is arguably conceivable that the Voice of the Times is advocating for a particular political perspective; say right of center Republicans. However, most right of center Republicans understand and support the Statehood Act, which established and requires that the State own the oil and gas resource. They also support Alaska's Constitution, which requires that Alaskans receive a maximum benefit from the oil and gas resource that they own.

Further, and very importantly, most Republican Alaskans understand the value of a free market economy, which requires and thrives upon competition; not a closed market, dominated by three companies who have a fiduciary responsibility to put their interests first; even if opposed to Alaskans' best interest.

We Alaskans are perfectly capable of discerning the perspective and therefore the motivation of the Voice of the Times, given full disclosure when editorializing on oil and gas issues. The disclosure should read something like this: The Voice of the Times is owned by the same person or persons who own VECO, a large service contractor whose main source of revenue is derived from negotiated contracts with British Petroleum, ConocoPhillips and Exxon. Alaskans can then reach their own conclusions as to whether or not the Voice of the Times speaks for the good of Alaskans, or for the benefit of its owner's business interests.

The same type of disclosure is currently available to the public through the Alaska Public Offices Commission (APOC) regarding those who are specifically tasked with putting Alaska's interests first; those we elect to state level office: the Governor and the Legislature. APOC reports indicate that by far, the single largest contributing group to Gubernatorial and Legislative political campaigns is that group associated with the oil industry, most prominently VECO; a reality which crosses party lines. Alaskans expect that the people they elect to represent only their best interests are doing so, an expectation rooted in the formation of government by the people, for the people, not for the people who contribute the most money to campaigns. The Governor and every member of the Legislature should make it very clear to the public through their words and actions that they are Alaskan Republicans or Alaskan Democrats, not Big Oil Democrats or Big Oil Republicans.

One way they can communicate this assurance to Alaskans is to insist that all business options for Alaska natural gas are fairly and publicly considered, and that a project or projects move forward in the state's best interest. This looms too large in our future to be shrouded behind unnecessary claims of confidentiality or cloaked behind closed-door political gatherings.

What is known publicly is that the All Alaska Gasline is real, ready, and capable of delivering Alaska North Slope natural gas to in-state and domestic markets for the benefit of all Alaskans, with no need for years of additional analysis.

The time is now for a fair and open comparison of project benefits for Alaska if the Legislature and Governor are to assure Alaskans that their best interests are being well protected.

Enough posturing, it is time for Alaska's gas to go to market; or for those who would obstruct a project to pay a high price.

A bad gas deal smells worse than a bad fish deal

Everyone has been wondering what Veco paid Sen. Ben Stevens a substantial "consulting" fee for. If and when Gov. Frank Murkowski brings forward a phony Canadian gas-line proposal, that's when Veco will call on Ben to earn his money.

Veco will lobby the Legislature to rubber-stamp a deal with the oil companies which contains no commitment to actually build the project. At the same time, these same companies are furiously developing their overseas projects to supply foreign gas to America.

Veco will call in all its chits on campaign contributions and contracts they have with legislators, including Sen. Stevens who will be asked to use his position as Senate president to ram through a bad deal for Alaska.

A bad fish deal really stinks, but a bad gas deal smells even worse.

■ MARKETING: How has $29 million in federal money been spent so far?

By LIZ RUSKIN
Anchorage Daily News

WASHINGTON — The Alaska Fisheries Marketing Board, created by U.S. Sen. Ted Stevens in 2003, made a big splash this week with a high-profile project: a $500,000 grant to Alaska Airlines, mostly to paint a giant king salmon on one of its jetliners.

Sen. Ted Stevens

But what else the marketing board has bought with the $29 million in federal funds it has received isn't so clear.

The law that created the board says AFMB must submit an annual report detailing its expenditures to the secretary of commerce. But the board's executive director, Bill Hines, said he is not allowed to release the report to the public.

"A lot of that information is confidential and proprietary," he said.

The board's chairman is state Sen. Ben Stevens, R-Anchorage, who did not return telephone calls Wednesday.

His father, U.S. Sen. Ted Stevens, created the board in a 2003 appropriations bill, saying he wanted to help Alaska seafood compete against imported farm-raised stocks. The state's commercial salmon industry was in crisis, with a value that had plunged 73 percent in a decade. The board was one of several initiatives aimed at reviving the industry.

FISH MONEY: Questions

Sen. John McCain, a regular critic of special funding programs Ted Stevens establishes for Alaska, took a shot at the marketing board when it was up for its second $10 million appropriation.

"Is there something wrong with these fish that warrants such an expensive program to convince us to eat them?" the Arizona Republican asked during debate last year.

The board's structure, as Stevens established it in federal law, is unusual. The board is an independent nonprofit, and its members are appointed by the commerce secretary. Hines, the director, remains an employee of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

The board's money — about $10 million a year — comes from something called the Saltonstall-Kennedy Fund. The fund is derived from duties on imported fish and awards grants to develop American fisheries.

The Alaska Fisheries Marketing Board hasn't produced an annual report for public review, Hines said.

It also has no official Web site, he said. Some of its meetings have been open to the public, he said, but the locations and meeting times aren't advertised.

Hines did, however, provide a PowerPoint presentation that gave a general accounting of the board's budget. The bulk of the money, $12 million, has gone to salmon processors, and more than half of that has gone to the processing titans: Ocean Beauty, Peter Pan, Icicle, Trident.

Hines said the board took a new "performance-based" approach with salmon marketing. Rather than award grants based on merit of individual proposals, the board offered grants based on the amount of salmon each processor had bought.

"It's all based on the amount of fish purchased, so the more you purchase, the more you get," he said.

The grants, though, do come with restrictions.

"They have to submit a proposal for how they would spend that money, and that proposal has to do with marketing," Hines said.

Grantees have to file reports, which the board scrutinizes, he said. Information provided to the board is often sensitive, he said, because companies wouldn't want competitors to know their plans.

The PowerPoint slides also show the board gave $4.5 million to the Alaska Seafood Marketing Institute, a state-chartered organization created in 1981, $3 million to a group that promotes Alaska pollock, and $1 million to promote herring in Japan. It also gave out numerous smaller grants.

Some of the grants, such as the money to promote a branding initiative called Genuine Alaska Pollock Producers or the Japanese herring campaign, have received attention in Alaska fishing circles.

Hines was willing to discuss how some of the companies proposed to spend their grants but said the full accounting was in the report he could not release.

"I am not allowed to just release that report," he said. "That's what I was told (when) I talked to folks in D.C."

He didn't want to be more specific about where the instruction came from.

"I don't think that's important," he said.

He also said that the report didn't belong to the board because he had filed the original, as required by law, with the Department of Commerce.

The Daily News has filed a formal request for the report from the Commerce Department and is awaiting a response.

Mark Vinsel, executive director of the United Fishermen of Alaska, said he'd like to be able to tell his members of the grants available through the marketing board.

"I've been looking forward to them having a Web site," he said. "Without a Web site, I haven't been able to regularly communicate to UFA's 1,300-member e-mail list in the way we have with (other grant programs)."

Actually, the AFMB does have a Web site, although it's still under construction.

The site alaskafisheriesboard.org contains information about the organization.

"It's not an official Web site. It should not be launched," Hines said when asked about it Tuesday. On Wednesday, the site was carrying a red disclaimer saying it was under construction and that "none of the information contained herein has been approved as official content."

The site listed the agency's 11-member board of directors and gave a partial breakdown of entities that received grants and for how much, although it doesn't say what the grants were for. The AFMB board includes representatives of seafood companies, fisheries groups, Carrs/Safeway, Lynden Transport and former Ted Stevens aide Trevor McCabe, who is a business partner with Ben Stevens.

The official location of the agency's office was also unclear. The bylaws on the unapproved Web site say the principal office is in Juneau, where Hines said he lives. Hines, though, said that the office is actually in downtown Anchorage and that the board pays for an apartment for him to stay in there. His business phone is his cell phone, he said, although the organization does have a phone in the Anchorage office.

He declined to disclose his salary, which is paid through the Department of Commerce. Hines said his board members do not receive salaries but are paid $500 per meeting, in addition to per-day expenses.

Ben Stevens, the board chairman, did not list his AFMB membership on his Alaska Public Offices Commission financial disclosure forms for the past two years. The APOC form requires legislators to list profit and nonprofit boards on which they serve. Stevens did list his membership on other nonprofit boards. He was appointed to the AFMB board in late 2003.

A spokeswoman for Ted Stevens said he recommended his son and other members of the marketing board to the commerce secretary for appointment, but she said the senator made his recommendations from a list Gov. Frank Murkowski sent.

The Alaska Airlines promotion is getting national attention, not all of it positive.

Sen. Tom Coburn, R-Okla., told ABC News this week that the money was a waste.

"I don't think anybody's going to buy Alaskan seafood because they see a fish on the side of an airplane," he said in a segment broadcast Wednesday on "World News Tonight."

Keith Ashdown, spokesman for Taxpayers for Common Sense, acknowledged the plane has a lot of "wow" factor. He e-mailed news of the publicly funded paint job, saying "We couldn't make this up if we tried."

10/06/05
194A-AN-13620

Hines said the salmon jet has been a big hit. He called it a "flying billboard."

"It's advertising," he said. "For four to six years, we're going to have that plane flying our message."

In fact, he said, he the message may outlive the board.

"In light of what's going on today, with (Hurricane) Katrina, with Rita and other problems, I'm not optimistic that we're going to get another appropriation this year," he said.

The board was created when the market for Alaska fish was terrible; and it's now much better, he said.

"We have fulfilled our mission," he said. "We have run our course."

Effort to recall Sen. Ben Stevens makes appeal to Superior Court

The committee seeking to recall state Sen. Ben Stevens appealed Wednesday to Superior Court in Anchorage for an order overturning the state decision to throw out its petition.

Citizens for Ethical Government, a group closely aligned with the offshoot Republican Moderate Party of former legislator Ray Metcalfe, said the state Division of Elections improperly rejected the recall Sept. 7 after more than the required 1,232 signatures were submitted. Elections director Laura Glaiser said the organizers failed to allege sufficient legal grounds to recall Stevens, the Senate president and a Republican who represents a South Anchorage district.

Stevens lauded Glaiser's decision last month, but Metcalfe said it was politically inspired. Metcalfe said Glaiser, backed by the state Department of Law, set an impossibly high standard for a political process enshrined in state law.

Metcalfe's appeal was filed by Ken Jacobus, a politically active attorney who served for 20 years as the Republican Party's general counsel until he was replaced in 2003. Jacobus said he hasn't yet developed a legal strategy for the appeal but expects the matter to be handled on an expedited basis by the court.

"I have nothing against Senator Stevens," Jacobus said. "I'm trying to uphold one of the people's democratic rights."

■ DEAL: Frank Murkowski tells top oil producers to take it or leave it — now.

By WESLEY LOY
Anchorage Daily News

Gov. Frank Murkowski on Thursday delivered a contract to Exxon Mobil, BP and Conoco Phillips for state terms on a natural gas pipeline, along with a refrain for the big-three oil producers: Take this deal, and take it fast.

Murkowski declined to reveal the contract's key contents and wouldn't say whether he'll call the Legislature into special session before the end of the year to ratify it.

Pedro van Meurs is an oil and gas consultant for the state.

But he said he's hopeful the producers will accept the contract offer within a few days, after which state lawmakers and the public would have a chance to see and comment on it.

For over a year the state has been negotiating terms on taxes, ownership, in-state use of gas and other points if the producers build the pipeline. Murkowski stopped short of calling the contract the state's last and best offer, saying it might be subject to "modest adjustments."

Spokesmen for the companies had measured responses.

"We're looking forward to reviewing the state's proposal," said Daren Beaudo, the Anchorage spokesman for London-based BP. "We're working extremely hard toward an agreement on a contract that will enable the project to move forward. And we're looking forward to the day when we can discuss a finalized contract. We're striving to meet the governor's desire to have a deal available for public and legislative review as soon as possible."

"We are making good progress toward a fiscal contract with the state of Alaska," said Dawn Patience, Anchorage spokeswoman for Houston-based Conoco Phillips. "We do support the governor's efforts to complete this process in a timely manner."

"We'll evaluate the state of Alaska's fiscal contract and respond when our assessment is complete," said Susan Reeves, with Exxon, based in Irving, Texas.

A pipeline to deliver the North Slope's known 35 trillion cubic feet of gas across Alaska and Canada to the energy-hungry Lower 48 would be a world-class construction project and an economic development plum for Alaska.

But it's also a goal that's frustrated many a governor, as oil companies holding rights to the gas underneath leased state-owned tundra have historically said the potential $20 billion cost makes gas production uneconomic.

Much has changed in recent years, however, especially the price of natural gas, which has skyrocketed to $14 per thousand feet, more than twice what it brought in May and even more expensive compared with the $2 or so it brought through the 1980s and '90s. Congress also has provided major incentives, including loan guarantees and tax breaks.

Now a high-stakes chess game might be reaching a climax. All summer, the Murkowski administration and oil company representatives huddled around the negotiating table, haggling over how the state would tax the pipeline, how big a stake the state would own, how many Alaskans would get construction and other jobs, and presumably when work toward building the line might start.

Meanwhile, the administration seems to have sent some tough signals to the industry, telling Exxon a week ago that it risks losing its leases on the massive Point Thomson gas field if it keeps delaying development. Point Thomson gas would be combined with Prudhoe Bay gas to fill the pipeline.

Aside from this state-corporate tension, some state lawmakers, especially Democratic critics of Murkowski, are pushing for a tax on undeveloped gas reserves. And other groups are pushing ideas for an all-Alaska pipeline, rather than one running through Canada.

Murkowski said Thursday that the state is close to a historic deal to unlock the stranded North Slope gas some 30 years after it was discovered, creating jobs and billions of dollars in state revenue. He said the contract designates four points — the Yukon River, Fairbanks, Delta Junction and Glennallen — where gas could be siphoned for local use, or even for shipment through the North Pacific in liquefied natural gas tankers.

"I anticipate receiving an affirmative response from the producers within the next few days," he said. The governor held up a white folder, about half an inch thick, that he said contained a copy of the "comprehensive contract."

On Sept. 14 in Valdez, the governor announced he had delivered a lesser document, a "contract term sheet," to the oil companies.

Pedro van Meurs, a Dutch-born oil and gas tax consultant and negotiator for the state, said the contract offer, if accepted, would give Alaska the best deal any government has ever achieved in terms of profit share on gas imported into the Lower 48. He said all three oil companies must agree to participate for the pipeline mega-project to work.

Van Meurs said, however, that it was not possible to include in the contract an actual date for construction to start, because of uncertainty in gaining regulatory clearance.

Actual construction is contingent on more than Alaska. Much of the line would cross another country, Canada, where a struggle rages over who holds the right of way for that section of pipe.

Murkowski and van Meurs said that it behooves the oil companies to accept the deal quickly.

Noting his experience negotiating contracts for pipelines and other major projects in many countries, van Meurs noted that the producers risk having to share even more of the profits if they wait. Governments around the world with oil and gas resources to market are demanding higher and higher shares now that oil and gas prices are running so high, he said.

"I believe the contract is fair and, as the governor said, I really urge the producers to have a quick acceptance of these terms," he said.

Harold Heinze, formerly president of the company now known as Conoco Phillips Alaska Inc., attended the governor's news conference and said afterward that he expects an answer from the oil companies pretty quickly. He's now chief executive of the Alaska Natural Gas Development Authority, a small agency voters created in 2002 to try to build a gas line.

"The companies don't want to have this as an open decision for a long time," Heinze said. "People will interpret a long delay as negative, won't they? If you're going to take the deal, take it now."

■ Daily News reporter Wesley Loy can be reached at wloy@adn.com or 257-4590.

What's next for the natural gas deal

1) Oil companies accept the preliminary contract or seek more negotiation.
2) If oil companies accept the agreement, a public comment period of at least 30 days occurs.
3) State commissioner of revenue might seek changes to agreement based on public comment. If so, he negotiates changes.
4) When contract is finalized, the state has 60 days to execute it. During this period, the Legislature must approve the contract as written.
- If the Legislature rejects the contract, negotiations start on a new preliminary deal.
- If the Legislature accepts the contract, the state can sign it.

5) Once the contract is signed, oil companies continue pipeline studies before deciding if they want to do the multibillion-dollar project.

HEARING FROM ANOTHER . . .

Seattle expert

WHEN IT COMES to solving the nation's energy problems, some political leaders and public activists are so blinded by their environmental bias that they don't recognize how foolish they are.

These are the same people who are all in a froth because gasoline prices are rising in the wake of the damage caused by Hurricane Katrina.

And they are the same ones who continually raise shrill opposition to oil exploration and development on the coastal plain of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge.

Go figure.

One of the ANWR critics is Andrew Adams. You probably never heard of him. We hadn't either, until he wrote a column in the Seattle Post-Intelligencer the other day and was identified as — get this — the "state field director for Alaska Coalition of Washington in Seattle."

Another one of those people Outside who are looking after the best interests of Alaskans — and everybody else in the country, according to Adams.

"If the U.S. government opens up one of the wildest, most natural places in the country to drilling, every square mile is effectively put in play," this watchdog for Alaska in Seattle wrote. "That means drilling off the coast of Florida, California and, yes, right here in the Puget Sound area."

Good grief.

AH, BUT THERE'S more: "Do we want to live in a world where nothing is off-limits to drilling and pollution? Where do we draw the line, the refuge in Alaska or Lake Washington?"

Where do these guys come from?

Clearly Adams isn't listening to Pete du Pont, former governor of Delaware, who says "we need to drill for more oil in America."

For starters, he says, there are 10 billion barrels of recoverable oil in ANWR, enough to make it "the equivalent of an oil-exporting nation."

Adams, the Seattle expert, begs to differ with du Pont's Sept. 20 comments in the Wall Street Journal. "The returns on drilling in the Arctic are minimal and unproved," Adams flatly says. Take his word for it.

He probably would have said the same thing about Prudhoe Bay 35 years ago, had he then been occupying his distinguished post as state field director for the Alaska Coalition of Washington in Seattle.

Du Pont has a broader view of things, saying "substantial quantities of oil and gas are out there, and America will be more secure, stable and prosperous if we gain access to them."

And even those who live and work and play in the Puget Sound area and on and around Seattle's Lake Washington will be better off as a result.

Seafood-marketing grants will pay off

By WILLIAM P. HINES

In response to the article "Salmon jet lures fund questions," published in the Daily News on Oct. 6, I wish to address certain issues raised regarding the operations of the Alaska Fisheries Marketing Board.

The AFMB is a private, nonprofit organization composed of 11 members, appointed by the secretary of commerce, representing a wide range of expertise in the seafood industry. Its mission is to serve as a catalyst to market, develop and promote Alaska seafood and improve related technology and transportation.

The funds utilized by the AFMB were appropriated by Congress. These funds, including the funds used to pay for the painting of the Alaska Airlines jet, did not come from taxes paid by Americans. The funds originated from duties imposed on the importation of foreign seafood products collected under the Saltonstall-Kennedy Act, which was enacted in 1954 to assist the U.S. fishing industry. Imported seafood products compete directly with U.S. fishery products, and the S-K Act provides that a portion of the duties collected will be made available as direct industry grants to assist U.S. fisheries to expand domestic and foreign markets. Congress directed the AFMB to use a portion of these funds to market Alaska seafood, with an emphasis on salmon.

The AFMB has received $29 million from Congress. The AFMB determined that the best way to assist the Alaska salmon industry is to focus on increasing the amount of product into the marketplace from producer to consumer. An innovative, performance-based allocation was developed, utilizing a formula that incorporates the amount of salmon purchased by producers from Alaska fishermen. The greater the amount of salmon purchased, the greater the amount of funds available to a qualified applicant. The AFMB focused on individual producers, who are best qualified to market their products and strengthen the link between consumer and producer. The funds allocated to this performance-based approach is $12,750,000, with grants made to 69 recipients in 2004 and 37 in 2005.

The AFMB has made grants to such diverse programs as the Genuine Alaska Pollock Producers, a marketing association established to ensure Alaska pollock remains strong in the marketplace; the Herring Marketing Committee, which will conduct the first-ever statewide herring marketing plan for international markets; and Alaska Protein Recovery for fish waste product development. In addition, a grant of $500,000 was made to Alaska Airlines to paint a 737-400 passenger jet and to advertise and promote wild Alaska seafood.

While the AFMB has thus far expended approximately $24.5 million, its overhead has been extremely low. The AFMB entered into a contract with Alaska Pacific University to perform all of its administrative and accounting functions. The AFMB office is collocated with APU's Pacific Rim Fisheries Program. AFMB's costs to manage and administer its day-to-day operations thus far have been approximately $500,000, an overhead rate of about 2.2 percent. This has allowed nearly 98 percent of the funds expended to be used as grants to market Alaska seafood.

Applicants seeking grants provide confidential and proprietary business information regarding operations and sales, and the AFMB has assured applicants that such information will remain confidential. Congress directed the AFMB to submit a report to the secretary of commerce, which contains information the AFMB considers proprietary business information. However, the AFMB provided the Daily News a summary of its grants and the criteria used to determine how the funds will be distributed. Because the report is now a document in the possession of the Department of Commerce, release of the entire report is a matter for the department to determine in accordance with federal law.

In the past three years, the AFMB has done much to increase the sale of seafood and promote the Alaska seafood industry. The AFMB has viewed the funds received from Congress as an investment, not a handout, with an expected return to the American people. The return is a healthy, sustainable and profitable Alaska seafood industry contributing to the economic well-being of Alaska and the nation.

William P. Hines is executive director of the Alaska Fisheries Marketing Board.

OUR VIEW

Give us enough time

One month is too short for public comment on gas line

Thirty days hath September, April, June and November. All the rest have 31, except the monthlong public comment period for the state's anticipated natural gas pipeline deal with North Slope producers. It should be 60 days.

Alaska's Stranded Gas Act requires a minimum one month for the public and legislators to review and comment on a deal between the state and gas line project sponsors. The key word in the law is "minimum." The other key words, although admittedly not in the law, are multibillion-dollar, multi-year, multi-party contract that will bind the state with the producers until the middle of the century. That's not bad, and no doubt could be excellent, but it certainly is worthy of more than the minimum 30 days for public comment.

The governor and his staff are inching closer to a draft contract with the producers to govern tax and royalty payments on the gas line, including the state's role as possibly a $4 billion investor in the project. Legislators and the public are getting ready for the most eagerly awaited public comment period since parents starting asking their children what they want for Christmas. Alaskans want a lot from the long-awaited gas pipeline, and the answers to all those wants will be spread throughout the contract and its attachments measuring in the hundreds of pages.

State and company negotiators have put far too much good faith into negotiating the deal to now create distrust in the process, which could happen if the public is pushed to read, analyze, discuss and comment on such a major undertaking in the same time it takes to close on a simple home loan. There is nothing simple about the gas line. It's the largest private construction project ever in North America, with the potential to move more than a quarter-trillion dollars worth of natural gas over the 35-year life of the deal.

Negotiations have been under way behind closed doors for more than a year, so we can only imagine the volume of confidential material that will become public after a contract is released. There's no sense in risking all of the hard work by rushing to meet a minimum deadline in the law.

The administration should go for double the minimum, giving Alaskans two full months to think about the deal before the governor gathers up the comments, goes back to the producers for any needed changes, then submits the mega-deal to the Legislature for an up-or-down vote. Alaska has too much at stake, and we trust the governor will agree.

■ BOTTOM LINE: It's better to spend more time reviewing the contract to ensure Alaskans understand the benefits and risks.

It's not nice

Anti-Canadian ad is embarrassing

It's not nice to make fun of your neighbor. It's not funny to perpetuate stereotypes. And it's not productive to turn the dreams of a North Slope natural gas pipeline project into an anti-Canadian television commercial.

Come on, we all love hockey together, so why can't we work together on a gas line project?

Unfortunately, the All Alaska Alliance's recent TV commercial showing a couple of beer-drinking, bar-sitting, cigarette-smoking, slang-talking Canadian guys gloating over their pipeline construction jobs at the expense of Alaskans is in poor taste.

The best gas line project for Alaska is the one that produces the most public revenue for the longest period of time, generating cash to help pay for schools, roads, bridges, ports and all the other needs we have. If that means a profitable line from Alaska through Canada to the gas-hungry Lower 48, and if that means some Canadians get pipeline construction jobs, so be it.

Alaska would prosper with a gas line that could deposit as much as $2 billion a year into state and municipal treasuries. Those would be all-Alaska revenues.

■ BOTTOM LINE: Let's not make fun of Canadians.

Detractor's hoopla over fish is hypocritical
Anchorage Daily News (AK)

THE UPROAR over federal funds being used to paint the image of a fish on the side of an Alaska Airlines jet to advertise the state's wild salmon industry would be laughable if it were not so blatantly motivated by raw politics.
Are we rubes to believe that no other state, no other private company, no other industry has received federal help? Are we to believe that the $500,000 spent on painting a fish on the plane now known as Salmon-30-Salmon, is a huge amount in the scheme of things and the only expenditure of its kind?

Those leading the attacks must be hoping we all have short memories.

The federal government, through efforts such as the Market Access and Export Enhancement programs, along with farm, irrigation, tobacco and research subsidies, funnels billions to companies and individuals to help them grow, manufacture, sell and advertise their products, here and abroad.

There are tax breaks and tax exemptions and tax deductions. There is insurance for companies that invest in risky regions of the world. There are grants. There are loans to prop up businesses. (Anybody remember Chrysler?) There are pet projects. Huge boondoggles. There are millions of ways to spend billions of federal dollars in the private arena.

And the Alaska Fisheries Marketing Board's legitimate expenditure of $500,000 for creative advertising of an Alaska product competing on the world market is somehow a terrible thing? The fish would have been cheap at twice the price. The panel could have gone for a one-minute spot during the Super Bowl (which may or may not have been remembered a month later). That would have cost a measly $5 million or so a minute.

Seattle is upset about the fish. A columnist says so. Somebody ask him about that city's boondoggle rail systems that are costing taxpayers millions. Boston is wrapped in angst about the fish. Ask it about the Big Dig. And they are worried about our fish?

Count us among those who believe government spending must be curbed across the land. We stand with those who believe every dime of tax money spent should be scrutinized and accounted for. But we find it well beyond hypocritical that some detractors only want that to apply to Alaska, not their home states; not their sports stadiums; not their pet projects.

All the hoopla would be easy to write off as more nonsense, more of the colonial mindset of our neighbors to the south and the anti-everything mindset of all too many Alaskans, but it goes further than that. It's cheap politics.

The Alaska Fisheries Marketing Board was set up by Sen. Ted Stevens in 2003 as an independent non-profit to help the state's foundering commercial salmon industry compete against farmed salmon. The board's chairman is state Sen. Ben Stevens.

That pretty much explains everything.

A half-million dollars to paint an airplane with a fish? Outrageous. An annual report that is secret because of proprietary information that could have been deleted? Outrageous. Confusing rules make it difficult to decide what is unethical

I'd like to get a clear understanding of the rules before I run for office.

If my dad, in the U.S. Senate, slips through a bill that grants a windfall to a company I have an undisclosed interest in, everyone gets upset.

But if I get hooked up with some nice consulting contracts with companies that seek to benefit from legislation I'll be voting on, or sponsoring, and where my work consists of little more than cashing the checks, everything's just dandy.

Did I miss anything?

Aleut Corp. election comes amid profit, strife

■ ANNUAL MEETING: Three directors will be chosen to help navigate stormy times.

By PAULA DOBBYN
Anchorage Daily News

The Aleut Corp., a regional Native corporation, will hold its annual meeting in Anchorage today where shareholders will elect three directors to the nine-member board.

The election comes at a time of record profits and internal strife at Aleut, turmoil that spawned a leadership shake-up and a tangle of lawsuits.

"For the Aleut Corp. to survive this current litigation, we will have to work to develop a united front to protect your investment," director and former company president Dick Jacobsen told shareholders in a letter last month.

Jacobsen could not be reached on Friday.

"We now face one of the most serious threats to our regional corporation. Conflict has arisen both in the boardroom and within the Aleut Corp. management," Jacobsen wrote on Sept. 29.

Aleut spokesman Curtis Smith said that he did not know what Jacobsen was talking about and that his comments are confusing.

"It's unfortunate that Mr. Jacobsen feels the need to communicate to shareholders by essentially highlighting his own shortcomings."

Jacobsen provided few specifics about why he thinks the company's future could be in jeopardy. He referred to a lease dispute with a fish processing company on Adak Island, 1,200 miles southwest of Anchorage. But he said the real threat to the company was the behavior of chief executive Dave Jensen and several board members.

"The chief executive officer has actively hidden information from the Aleut Corp. board of directors and encouraged this action be maintained through the president's office and other members of the Aleut Corp. staff. These board members have taken a very troubling course of action in choosing to ignore documentation of information withheld by our CEO," Jacobsen said.

Jacobsen is a commercial fisherman from Sand Point. He and Jensen were placed on administrative leave on June 29 after conflicts between them boiled over. After an investigation by an outside counsel hired by the company, the board removed Jacobsen as president in August. Jensen was brought back and retains the top management job.

Smith returned a call placed Friday for Jensen seeking comment.

"The past few months have been a challenge and stressful for the board and management," chairwoman Debra Mack told shareholders in a September newsletter.

Despite the upheaval, Aleut's balance sheet shines. The Anchorage-based corporation made a record profit of nearly $11 million in 2005, Mack reported in August.

"This is not only record success but also a trend we can all be proud of," Mack said.

The company makes money from government contracting, fuel sales, logistics, transportation and other sectors.

As part of its portfolio, Aleut is attempting to rehab far-flung Adak, a former naval station the company acquired from the federal government last year. Aleut wants to convert Adak into a fishing, fuel and transportation hub. To spur those plans, the company received exclusive rights to the Aleutian Islands pollock harvest through special legislation passed by Congress at the urging of Sen. Ted Stevens, R-Alaska.

"We plan to create a significant revenue stream" by processing the pollock, Smith said.

But future plans for Adak hit a snag this month with the closure of Adak Fisheries, the island's only seafood processor. The disputed lease and ownership of the business have been the subject of a court fight in Anchorage. With the plant closed, seafood is being diverted to Dutch Harbor for processing, Smith said.

"I can imagine that the fishermen are frustrated. The Aleut Corp. stands with them in frustration," he said.

State levy will take form of gas

Jim Clark is the state's lead negotiator.

■ PIPELINE: Contract detail increases risk, but Alaska has experience in marketing oil.

By WESLEY LOY
Anchorage Daily News

Under a proposed contract with major oil companies spelling out terms for a natural gas pipeline, the state would collect its severance tax on North Slope gas production in the form of gas instead of dollars, Gov. Frank Murkowski's chief of staff said this week.

The arrangement would increase the state's risk level in the megaproject because the state would be responsible for finding buyers for its gas — a chore the producers otherwise would bear. Also, the state would have to commit to capacity in the new pipeline, an estimated $20 billion asset that would be designed to a size to meet the needs of gas shippers.

Murkowski on Oct. 6 offered oil giants Conoco Phillips, Exxon Mobil and BP a contract for a gas pipeline to carry prodigious North Slope gas reserves to the Lower 48.

The contract does not guarantee actual construction.

Rather, it sets out tax and other terms such as possible state ownership of a share of the line, jobs for Alaskans and availability of gas for use within Alaska.

See Back Page, PIPELINE

The contract, which Clark says is more than 100 pages long, remains under wraps as Murkowski waits for the oil companies to either reject or sign it, which would trigger a public and legislative review period. The Legislature has final say.

Clark, speaking Thursday at an Anchorage breakfast gathering of oil field contractors, gave tantalizing clues about some of the contract's most important provisions.

Instead of collecting tax dollars from the oil companies, the state would take gas, Clark said. The state would do likewise with its royalty share of North Slope gas production.

Generally, the state gets 12.5 percent of oil and gas produced on leased state land as a royalty. The severance, or production, tax on natural gas depends on average well output but does not exceed 10 percent of its value at the point of production.

In negotiating with the oil companies, Clark said it became clear the state needed to collect its taxes and royalties in gas rather than dollars "in order to have this thing work."

Once the proposed contract becomes public, Clark said, the people will have a chance to compare the projected payoff to the state under the two options — collecting a tax or accepting and selling gas.

People will see that the contract provides Alaska not only with a fair share of the value of the Slope's gas, but a better deal than other governments around the world have achieved, Clark

PIPELINE: Negotiator offers clues about contract's important provisions

What's next for the natural gas deal

1) Oil companies accept the preliminary contract or seek more negotiation.

2) If oil companies accept the agreement, a public comment period of at least 30 days occurs.

3) State commissioner of revenue might seek changes to agreement based on public comment. If so, he negotiates changes.

4) When contract is finalized, the state has 60 days to execute it. During this period, the Legislature must approve the contract as written.

- If the Legislature rejects the contract, negotiations start on a new preliminary deal.
- If the Legislature accepts the contract, the state can sign it.

5) Once the contract is signed, oil companies continue pipeline studies before deciding if they want to do the multibillion-dollar project.

said.

The state taking control of and selling fossil fuels is not a new concept.

And often, the state has ended up with more money than had it allowed oil companies to sell the product and send the state the proceeds.

In recent years, the state has taken a third or more of its North Slope royalty oil "in kind" rather than "in value" — that is, taken oil instead of dollars — and then sold that oil itself on the open market.

Early last year, the Murkowski administration negotiated a contract to sell a portion of its North Slope royalty oil to Flint Hills Resources, which operates the state's largest refinery at North Pole. At the time, state officials said the sale fetched a premium of about 30 cents per barrel, or $8 million annually, over what the oil would have brought had it been shipped Outside at considerable expense.

Spokesmen for two of the three oil companies involved in the gas line negotiations, Conoco and BP, declined Friday to comment on Clark's remarks, citing the confidentiality of the state contract talks.

Chuck Logsdon, former chief petroleum economist for the state and now Murkowski's gas pipeline spokesman, said taking the severance tax in gas instead of dollars is "almost like bartering in a way — you don't have to pay me, just give me the product and I'll take it to the market and take whatever I can get for it."

The state already has people experienced in marketing oil not only to buyers inside Alaska but in Taiwan and elsewhere, Logsdon said. It can rely on these people or it could hire contract marketers, he said, just as the Alaska Permanent Fund hires professional money management firms to handle stock and bond investments.

"In theory, if we had a successful marketing program, we should get roughly the same amount of money" by the state selling the gas versus letting the producers do it.

State Rep. Ralph Samuels, R-Anchorage, said Friday the contract is very complex and people should wait and consider it as a whole rather than looking at any one part and saying, "Well, why the hell did they do that?"

If the state takes gas as payment for taxes and royalties, he said, that adds risk to the state.

"You will have the burden of selling that gas, and obviously that's going to cost you something," said Samuels, who as vice chairman of the Legislative Budget and Audit Committee would preside over the first stage of legislative review of the contract.

On the other hand, taking the gas might help the state achieve an economic development dream it has chased for decades — actual pipeline construction.

"Maybe that moves the whole ball forward," he said.

Consultant: Gas line deal is best deal for firms and state

International oil and gas consultant Pedro van Meurs answers questions after Gov. Frank Murkowski's announcement last week that the state has delivered a gas line contract to North Slope producers.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Pedro Van Meurs helped the state negotiate with BP, Conoco Phillips and Exxon Mobil on the state's terms for a multibillion-dollar natural gas pipeline project from the North Slope.

The Dutch-born consultant has worked with more than 70 governments in the past three decades on big projects around the world.

On Oct. 6, Van Meurs joined Gov. Frank Murkowski for a press conference in Anchorage. Murkowski announced that he had delivered to the oil companies the state's proposed contract on tax, ownership, local hire and other issues.

If the companies agree to the terms, which have been negotiated for more than a year, the state will hold public hearings on the proposed contract, and the Legislature must approve it before it can become final.

While keeping terms of the proposed contract secret, Van Meurs discussed with reporters how it compares with other deals he helped negotiate, why the state wants to be part owner of the pipeline and what could derail the project. Here are excerpts from his comments:

The Alaska deal is the best deal in the world supplying the Lower 48 in terms of government take from the frontier areas. So we will have a deal that is better than any other supplier of the Lower 48; better than the MacKenzie Valley; better than Nova Scotia, better than Venezuela, better than Trinidad, better than Indonesia, better than Peru.

Not only is it one of the best in government takes in the world for gas supplying the North American market, it is among the highest anywhere supplying any market from a long distance. Obviously if you're in a middle of a market, like Alberta, you can get somewhat better terms. But Alberta's take is only slightly better.

The very innovative structure of this contract will be unique in North America. The state will assume equity risk in the project. This drastically improves the risk-reward balance for the investors. This provides the companies with the minimum rate of return necessary for a very high risk project like this, while the state gains the maximum benefit.

I really urge the producers to have a quick acceptance of these terms. Why do I say quick acceptance? Because I work for many governments. All the governors that I work for are telling me "What can we do to increase the government take now that prices are high? Maybe we should get a little bit more." The competitive world next year will look different than this year. So if the producers don't want to sign this year, I think next year they may have to pay more.

I have in my database more than 1,400 international contracts. And I can assure you the quality of the legal work and the quality of the non-fiscal terms are among the best that I have seen from international contracts.

The Alaska hiring and training are unusually strong provisions in this agreement. In many contracts that I have seen, local hire is sometimes sloughed off with a few paragraphs. I can assure you that's not the case with this contract.

Probably the most important benefit to Alaska will be the possible access to low-cost gas, and therefore this agreement has every provision possible to ensure the lowest possible natural gas price for communities in Alaska. In fact, it has unique provisions that I haven't seen anywhere else to protect Alaskans in this respect.

The pipeline will only be full for 18 to 20 years, and then gas production will start to decline. So to make this truly long-term project, more gas needs to be found. I believe that this contract may lead to a very significant exploration effort by many companies that specialize in gas production. So not only will this project result in an economic gas line project, I think it will result eventually in discovering twice the amount of gas we have today. That will ensure its benefits to at least two generations of Alaskans.

Q. You said it's the largest deal in the world. What is the next comparable deal?

A. The next comparable deal are deals such as Sakhalin project in Russia. Just to give you an idea, the Sakhalin project is a $12 billion project; we are talking $20 billion plus.

The big difference between this deal and other very large deals is that in this deal, all of the investment has to be made up front. You cannot export gas if you do not have a pipeline. In many of these other big deals, the development could take place in phases, and some of the production could be sold while constructing the project, so that is much lower risk. If the companies make the wrong decision on this project, this is a company breaker.

We need to realize the major investments in this project will start a few years from now. Companies will not start to construct this line right away. The big problem is that the big investment will have to be made three or four years from now. We don't know what the economic conditions will be at that time. If the gas price is $2.50 four years from now, this is not an attractive project. So it depends on what happens between now and the future to know for sure whether or not it will be economic. You cannot say that today.

Q. Can you lay out the time frame for the start of construction and the completion of construction as envisioned in the contract?

A. As soon as the contract is signed, within a few days the companies will be obligated to start the work. They will have to diligently pursue that program. The total work program was submitted by the producers when they made their application.

Q. What are the repercussions for the companies if they don't follow the work commitments?

A. If they don't follow the work commitments, then the contract can be terminated if it indicates they have not worked diligently on the work program. So consequently, that will have very seriously consequences for them because then all the fiscal stability provisions of this agreement, which are very valuable to the companies, will fall by the wayside. And then it is up to the Alaska Legislature to decide what to do afterwards.

Q. So there's not a firm start date for construction?

A. That's right. That would be impossible to fix because you never know what happens with the regulatory process. There could be delays in that. They will be required to diligently pursue that work program but certain events can delay the program. That is a reasonable situation for a very big complex project of this nature. So that is why there is some flexibility in that.

Q. Some people think the North Slope producers don't actually want to build the pipeline.

A. I have a different opinion. That is because I see this from a different angle.
It is becoming increasingly difficult for the large international oil company to maintain their reserve-production ratios (the percentage of their oil and gas reserves that they produce each year). Because a low reserve-production ratio means low share values (on the stock market), that will have massive impact on the value of their shares. If the companies want to maintain attractive share values, they have to maintain good reserve-to-production ratios.

The 35 trillion cubic feet of Alaska gas would be the single biggest increment in their reserves in the world. So it would be absolutely foolish on their part not to support their share value with a significant addition to their reserve production ratio as soon as possible.

Q. Are there any gas projects negotiated that could come on and drive natural gas prices so low that the Alaska project becomes undesirable?

A. The most important event that is happening in the world's gas market today is LNG (liquefied natural gas, in which the gas is chilled into a liquid for shipment via tanker). LNG technology is improving every day. It is not impossible that 10 years from now, LNG transportation costs will be 30 or 40 percent less than what they are today.

If that happens, very large gas resources will become available from all over the world for the North American market and the competition for Alaska will be much stronger. That is why it is so important to get this deal done as soon as possible. Because if you wait too long, LNG will come in strongly and it will become more and more difficult to get a good price for your gas.

Q. Are there any incentives in the contract for the producers?

A. The only fiscal incentive for the producers is precisely the fact that we are sharing risk with them in the equity investment in the line. That is a very significant incentive. Participating in the project is an incentive that is very important to them. That is what draws the producers to the table and that's what I think will result in a successful contract.

Q. What's being placed into the contract to ensure that the state's not going to be just a minority participant with little or no leverage?

A. The exact participation of the state is confidential at this point. Equity participation (part ownership of the pipeline) improves the rate of return, the net present value and some other economic variables. That is the incentive that we are providing. We are providing the incentive of being a partner. We are not providing other incentives.

Governor spends $3,000 on public relations firm

■ MESSAGE: Move related not to election but to provide "better" information, spokeswoman says.

By MATT VOLZ
The Associated Press

JUNEAU — Gov. Frank Murkowski, who has not said publicly whether he plans to run for re-election next year, used public funds to hire an international firm to boost his public relations message to Alaskans.

Rockey Hill & Knowlton was brought in to help the Republican governor "get more information and better information to the public," said Murkowski's spokeswoman, Becky Hultberg.

She said the public relations contract was not awarded with the 2006 election in mind.

"Some may read into this the governor's future plans, but that would be an incorrect assumption," she said.

The message Murkowski wants to get across, she said, is that he supports resource development, job creation, and funding for schools, roads and services.

Hultberg declined to directly say whether the firm was was given the task of boosting the governor's image, which has taken a beating almost from the start of his administration.

Since he was elected in 2002, critics and political opponents have blasted Murkowski for appointing his daughter Lisa to the U.S. Senate seat he was vacating.

They rapped his early budget cuts, including the state's longevity bonus, which gave cash payments to the elderly, and the state's municipal revenue sharing program.

More recently, House Democrats have criticized how the governor has handled negotiations with North Slope oil producers for a natural gas pipeline.

"The governor right now is not focused on polls or what pundits might say," Hultberg said. "He's focused on the gas pipeline and development, and is focused on communicating those messages to Alaskans."

Rockey Hill & Knowlton is the Seattle branch of the international public relations firm Hill & Knowlton. The $23,000 state contract was awarded in July, but it expired at the end of September with only $3,000 billed to the state. The governor's office is considering an extension to the contract.

Gov. Frank Murkowski used public funds to hire a PR firm.

The contract calls for the company to address the governor's overall communications message; to review and assist the finalization of the governor's media relations and public communications plan; and to provide communications support of state government activities.

Company officials wouldn't detail what work was done for the $3,000.

Company representative John Giese said he could not speak about his work with Murkowski's office without permission from his client. He said the company's core public relations business is with corporations and trade associations, although he does a lot of work for governments and nonprofit organizations.

Hill & Knowlton's Web site says the company helps government agencies "communicate a brand, educate on social causes, promote innovative programs and more."

Rep. Beth Kerttula, D-Juneau, said a $23,000 PR contract from the governor's office gives the appearance of campaigning, particularly if it doesn't yield anything more specific than shaping Murkowski's overall message.

"That looks pretty related and it looks inappropriate," Kerttula said. "I hope they stop the contract at $3,000 and they don't go to $23,000. They've got pretty good press people now."

Hultberg said the Murkowski administration has twice before hired public relations consultants, both times in 2004.

Special session unlikely

JUNEAU — The governor has likely run out of time to call the Legislature into special session this year on a gas pipeline contract, several lawmakers said.

"We've probably passed the point to get to it this calendar year," said Rep. Ralph Samuels, R-Anchorage and a legislative leader on gas line issues.

Republican Gov. Frank Murkowski had said for the past several months that he planned to call the Legislature into special session this fall to consider a natural gas pipeline contract. The contract would set out terms for taxes, royalties and the state's share of the estimated $21 billion project.

But the deal between the state and oil companies isn't finished, and much would need to happen before a special session.

The delay could count for more than the governor missing a self-imposed deadline. It threatens to ball the high-stakes and complex gas line issues up with the deal-making, vote-trading and political side bets of the regular legislative session.

"There would be way too much temptation for basically hostage taking over votes," said Rep. Mike Hawker, R-Anchorage. "It is such an important issue that it needs to be evaluated on its own merits."

Hawker said he believes the practical deadline passed last week for the governor to strike a deal in time to have a special session this year.

But he suggested the scheduled Jan. 9 start date for the regular 2006 legislative session could be postponed. Then, if the contract was ready for ratification, the Legislature might be able to hold a special gas line session in early January.

Murkowski said on Oct. 6 that the state had delivered its contract proposal to the oil companies and that he expected an answer "within the next few days." In an interview this past week, the governor said the companies were still considering.

"I still expect to hear from them soon," Murkowski said.

If a deal is struck, the commissioner of revenue would need to prepare a report on why it is in the best interests of the state. The law also requires at least 30 days for the public to review and comment — and Murkowski wants a longer public period than that.

Any changes to the contract as a result of the public input would require the state to renegotiate with the oil companies.

Only then could the Legislature have a special session on whether to approve the deal.

The contract has been two years in the making through negotiations between the governor's office and the major North Slope oil companies — Exxon Mobil, BP and Conoco Phillips. Murkowski is also proposing the state invest about $4 billion to be a 20 percent owner of the long-sought pipeline from the North Slope to the Lower 48.

Murkowski has in recent days stopped saying when he thought the contract would be ready for a special session. Chuck Logsdon, the gas line spokesman for the governor's office, did not quarrel with statements that it is too late for this year.

Rep. Eric Croft, D-Anchorage, said the governor has been saying for well over a year that a gas contract was imminent. He said Murkowski needs to get tougher.

"Frank's plan is to ask pretty please over and over," Croft said. "I'd suggest that isn't working and is never going to work."

■ HISTORY: For past stories on Alaska gas line plans and negotiations:

www.adn.com

Croft is running for governor next year. He is pushing a ballot initiative to tax the companies on the gas reserves if the pipeline isn't built.

If the governor does strike a deal, he said, it could be a "face saver" that gives away too much.

The governor a month ago threatened the companies that he would "pursue other opportunities" to market Alaska's gas if they didn't give him a positive response to what he called then a draft offer.

The governor dropped the threat, Croft said, which shows the companies he is desperate.

State spokesman Logsdon conceded there is no such hammer hanging over the oil companies at the moment. But there was back-and-forth with the companies after that threat.

Now it is a matter of waiting to hear the companies' response to what the state presented on Oct. 6, Logsdon said.

Legislators Samuels and Hawker said a delayed contract isn't the end of the world.

"Would you rather have a good deal or a fast deal?" Hawker asked.

Metcalfe deserves a hand in trying to expose corrupt Stevens family

Kudos to Ray Metcalfe for his public, spirited efforts to bring down the corrupt Stevens political dynasty. The Republican political machine's dismissal of his recall effort in no way diminishes the validity of his allegations. Nor does ad hominem name-calling ("political gadfly") deflect mounting criticism of Ben Stevens' "consulting" activities.

If current ethics standards were in place a hundred years ago, Soapy Smith would be remembered as a model citizen and president of the chamber of commerce.

The Daily News should get the Pulitzer Prize in journalism for its outstanding exposure of the blatantly self-serving relationships between both Ted and Ben Stevens and the special interests who have dealt them in on the profits derived from their political actions.

Two months after collecting $145,000 in consulting fees from Cook Inlet Region Inc. in 2002, state Sen. Ben Stevens quietly returned the money, acknowledging he didn't fulfill the requirements of the job, according to CIRI chief executive Margie Brown.
Brown, responding to recent inquiries by two dissident board members and the Daily News, said Stevens "indicated he wasn't satisfied, returned the money and paid us interest on it."

Brown's disclosures come as public scrutiny has focused on outside consulting work that has paid Stevens more than $1.1 million since 2001, the year he was appointed to a vacant Senate seat. Among those jobs, all reported by Stevens in his legislative financial disclosures, were the payments from CIRI. While Alaska media and the Los Angeles Times reported on Stevens' CIRI work, the fact that one year's payment was returned came as news.

Many of the companies paying Stevens, including CIRI, have business with the state or have benefited from the actions in Congress of his father, U.S. Sen. Ted Stevens, or both. The L.A. Times story, published in July 2003, used Ben Stevens as an example among several senators' sons and spouses who collected big payments from companies seeking benefits from Congress.

Brown said Stevens' work for CIRI was not directly involved in legislative or regulatory issues.

"He was pursuing, essentially, a business opportunity in bulk water transportation and water bottling," Brown said.

FBI - Stevens-248

She said she was unwilling to describe the work in detail, partly because she only learned of it from reading a file -- the contract was issued by a previous CIRI head, Carl Marrs -- and partly because CIRI may someday want to pursue the opportunity and would not want to help potential competitors. She would not allow a reporter to view Stevens' work product.

194A-AN-13620-M-129

Stevens began the work in 2001, she said. He was paid $72,920, as he reported to the Alaska Public Offices Commission, and adequately completed the first phase of his assignment, she said.

But after accepting payments through 2002 totaling $145,854, Brown said, Stevens acknowledged he couldn't deliver. His check included interest "of a couple thousand bucks," Brown said. The check to CIRI was dated March 6, 2003.

Eleven days later, Stevens filed his official disclosure for 2002 to the public offices commission. It declared the $145,854 as "consulting/professional services," but didn't note the returned money, either as an addendum to the payment or as a debt he owed CIRI. In an interview last week, Stevens said he didn't have to.

"Is there anything in there that says anybody has billed somebody for something and they got to issue a refund, are you supposed to report that?" he said.

Christina Ellingson, executive director of the Public Offices Commission, said she didn't believe the law required Stevens to disclose the refund.

Brown said the files weren't clear about whether Stevens returned the money on his own initiative or whether someone in CIRI had expressed dissatisfaction with his work.

"I actually feel that CIRI has a very straight story here, and Ben appears to act appropriately when he determined that he wasn't going to be able to deliver a product that satisfied him. He did the right thing, returned the money, paid us interest. We got enough worth for four first payments, got some value out of it," Brown said.

Marrs said he didn't remember details of the arrangement with Stevens, but recalled: "He did what we asked him to do."

Through 2002, Stevens submitted invoices and was paid, Marrs said. "He just got overbusy and we sort of dropped the ball on the project anyway. It didn't look like it was going to pan out."

Stevens declined to discuss his CIRI business.

"Proprietary information, what I was doing for them. It's none of your business," he said. "And that's the end of the story. Nothing else to say."

Later in the conversation, he added: "It was a contract that was begun before I was ever a legislator, a relationship that began, it was a business arrangement and it's none of your damn business. I reported it on my APOC statement. End of story."

The two CIRI board members who requested the information, Bob Rude and Harold Rudolph, said they weren't satisfied.

"Me and Harold asked to see the paperwork on it," Rude said. The documents weren't available when Brown explained the matter at a board meeting Oct. 19, but Rude said he hoped to view them soon.

Ben Stevens and Ted Stevens say the consultancies have nothing to do with government. But Ben Stevens' business relationship with the oil field service company Veco, which has paid him $243,000 since 2000, was cited as an example of "corruption" in the recall petition brought against Stevens by Republican Moderate Party founder Ray Metcalfe.

Metcalfe is appealing a decision by the state elections office that threw out the recall petition for failing to state legal grounds to remove Stevens from office.

Metcalfe has demanded that Stevens show the reports he has done for the Veco money to prove that he is not just selling influence. Stevens has said he owes no such public obligation.

Recent news reports have also focused on Ben Stevens' relationship to Adak Fisheries, a company that paid him $280,000 in consulting fees from 2002 to 2004. The company received an allocation of pollock worth millions of dollars through special congressional action by his father. In 2002, the two owners of Adak Fisheries also granted Ben Stevens a secret option for him to purchase 25 percent of the company.

Stevens has declined to say what he did for that money. His resistance to public exposure of his work extends to the court fight in Anchorage over the ownership of Adak Fisheries, in which he's a defendant.

That case is in the pretrial discovery phase, where the sides are required to provide each other with information. The plaintiff, Aleutian Spray Fisheries of Seattle, demanded in August that Stevens provide a detailed statement showing what he did for each payment from Adak Fisheries, along with documents relating to his services and tax returns. It also sought a complete explanation for his receipt of the option in the company.

On Oct. 12, Stevens' attorneys asked the judge in the case to throw out those questions because they were overly broad and asked for personal, confidential information. If the judge requires him to answer, Stevens asked that the judge order the other parties in the case to keep the information secret.

"The information that Aleutian Spray seeks is among the most proprietary and sensitive commercial information it could ask for," Stevens' attorneys wrote. "It is information regarding how Mr. Stevens does his business and exactly how he charges for it. That information, if disclosed, would provide competitive advantage to anyone in Mr. Stevens' field."

Five days after Stevens filed his objections, the matter was likely rendered moot when Aleutian

THOSE CRAZY GUYS at the Republican Moderate Party -- that ersatz, fringe political gaggle dedicated to cosmic drek, disco music and desperate ploys to keep their names in the paper -- have stumbled onto The Big Truth.

And that is this: Anybody in this state can win a prominent spot in the newspaper by going on the attack. If the target is a real Republican, that's good. If it is a noteworthy Republican, that's better. If it's a Stevens, that's the absolute best. If the smear is sleazy, so much the better.

The funsters over at the Disco Party have shown us that if you want attention, you need only file a complaint with the Alaska Public Offices Commission and the rest is virtually automatic. The accusation can be full of pejorative drivel, or false allegations or even moonbeams, but once it is on the record, the newspaper will give it more attention than you can imagine -- or it deserves.

If at first you fail and the APOC tosses the complaint, just change a few words and file it again. What do you care what APOC thinks? After all, you are there for news value, not the public good. You do not have to claim you know anything; you only have to claim there is something to know.

That pretty much sums up the vindictive, personal -- and now boringly repetitive -- attacks on state Sen. Ben Stevens, and anybody who ever sat next to him in a hamburger joint or shared a car or shook his hand. We just wonder: Who's next?

FBI - Stevens-252

The vexing thing to us -- the fly in the horse liniment, if you will -- is that it is very unclear whether The Big Truth is axiomatic. It has never really been fully tested on anybody but Republicans. What would happen, say, if an over-the-hill flamenco dancer from, say, the Democratic Moderate Party -- fronting for the Republicans, of course -- stamped and clapped his way into APOC (hey! hey! hey!) with a litany of charges about a prominent Democrat just to scam some headlines.

194A-AN-13620-M-130

In our heart of hearts, we would like to think The Big Truth would prove out; that the response would be the same across the board in the news media and elsewhere for Republicans or Democrats alike; that Lassie really would rescue Timmy from the well. And when the flamenco guy tappity-taps back (hey! hey! hey!) with more bogus charges, even the same bogus charges, we would like to think Lassie, by golly, will come through.

Unfortunately, The Big Truth may not stand up under close scrutiny any more than the all-Alaska gas line. It may be that real Republicans, noteworthy Republicans, and particularly those named Stevens, are destined to get the short end of the stick.

That, unfortunately, may be The Bigger Truth.

Alaskans tired of Stevens' cronyism, corruption should vote accordingly

Sen. John McCain asked, "Is there something wrong with these fish that warrants such an expensive program to convince us to eat them?" He was referring to the Alaska Fisheries Marketing Board's $30 million federal appropriation ("Salmon jet lures fund questions," Oct. 6). Sen. McCain is on to something. In the first place, our tax dollars shouldn't go to for-profit businesses like Alaska Airlines for a $500,000 paint job on a jet or to Trident Seafood Corp. to help it market its products. They don't share their profits with us, or even pay back the marketing money. And state Sen. Ben Stevens is chair of the Alaska Fisheries Marketing Board. His dad, U.S. Sen. Ted Stevens, created the program and appropriated the money for it, which is improper. Meanwhile, Alaska is forced to cut back on rental subsidies and health care for the poorest of our poor. Voters who elected but disapprove of the cronyism and corruption of the current one-party, Republican regime might want to consider

Asking a lot of a gas line

Alaska wants a pipeline, but we need to think about our wants

Alaskans agree on several things about the proposed North Slope natural gas pipeline. We want jobs, lots of them.

We want to burn the gas in our homes and offices and electrical-generating power plants, which will mean expensive valves and facilities and pipelines along the route so we can take off the gas at our convenience. But who will front the money for construction and guarantee the operating costs?

We want the tax and royalty revenues that will pay for our schools and roads and public services for years to come, so that we can continue to avoid taxing ourselves for all that we want.

We want new oil and gas explorers to come to the state, bringing with them more jobs and spending. And we want to guarantee that as they drill wells in the years ahead, they'll be able to ship their gas down the pipeline — even if it's full and needs costly investments to expand the line.

Some Alaskans also want a petrochemical industry to set up shop in the state, turning natural gas into plastic pellets for commercial uses, even though the state's own consultants say it's probably uneconomical.

And some Alaskans want propane plants as part of the deal, so we can fill up hundreds or even thousands of those round metal tanks and ship them across the state, especially to rural Alaskans looking to get off the expensive habit of burning diesel fuel. It's a good idea, but setting up that network could cost hundreds of millions of dollars. Who should pay?

We want all of this now, as in yesterday, not tomorrow. And we want a promise that nothing will be left out of the deal with North Slope producers, or maybe we'll get angry and ask our legislators to vote against it. Maybe we'll get real angry and vote for an initiative to impose a special tax on the producers as punishment for not building our dream project.

Meanwhile, Alaskans would like the gas sold in-state at below-market rates — let someone else pay the high prices that will supply our tax and royalty checks.

And what about heaping all those demands on the gas line project itself? Yes, we want everything good that can come to Alaska from the project, including, perhaps, someday, a liquefaction plant at Valdez to export gas elsewhere in the world if it's not all needed in the U.S. market.

And who is going to pay or all those wants? Should the state earn less tax and royalty income so that residents can get cheap power? And how much of the project's financial risk should the state take just to make sure our wants are met? As they tell gamblers, don't bet what you can't afford to lose.

Our elected officials, our political parties and next year's candidates need to be careful: Don't promise us more than the project can afford; don't entice us with gifts you can't deliver; don't set us up for disappointment when the numbers show what isn't possible.

And one other thing: Don't get so eager to make a deal with the North Slope producers that Alaska comes away with less than it should receive.

The natural gas pipeline is a risky (price of steel, construction delays, future gas prices), expensive ($20 billion and rising) and unique (possible state partnership with three multinational corporations) undertaking that could make Alaskans happy for decades to come. Let's think, let's be realistic and let's get it right.

BOTTOM LINE: A gas pipeline will be good for Alaska, but maybe it can't be everything that everybody wants.

The 'resource curse'

Alaskans like to think that our huge oil and gas deposits are an unquestioned blessing. Oil pays for so much of state government, we don't need a state income or sales tax. Our oil savings account pays every resident a nice, fat check every year just for breathing. Some lucky workers and local businesses get big paydays from working in the oil patch.

But Alaska's long dependence on easy oil money has a major downside: It's flat-out addictive. Alaskans behave like a family that won the lottery once and is now obsessed with trying to win the lottery again.

For 25 years, political and business leaders here have railed about how oil drilling rigs are locked out of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge, the state's best shot for one more oil bonanza. Alaskans throughout the state are salivating at the prospects that the long-awaited North Slope natural gas pipeline may actually move forward. Meanwhile, the portion of the state's economy that doesn't depend on extracting natural resources or cashing government checks remains puny. Wages have slipped. Job growth is concentrated in the Wal-Mart economy.

Alaska Notebook

It's a classic example of what's known as "the resource curse." Countries that are rich in resources often lag far behind less well-endowed nations. As a New Yorker article in 2001 reported, "A 1995 study of ninety-seven developing countries by the economists Jeffrey Sachs and Andrew Warner found that the more important natural resources were to a country's economy, the lower its growth rate was."

Why?

"A dependence on natural resources fosters the illusion that you get rich by taking what's already there, rather than creating something new," The New Yorker wrote. It discourages entrepreneurialism. It "encourages people to look to the state, instead of themselves, for solutions." (Sound familiar, Alaskans?)

Alaska has escaped the worst of the resource curse thanks to two things: the Permanent Fund and the generosity of Uncle Sam. The recent tripling of oil prices has helped further mask the long-term cost of Alaska's dysfunctional dependence on oil.

But there's no denying it: We're addicted to oil and gas. We want more, more, more. To steal the New Yorker's phrases, we "prefer the comfortable squalor of staying hooked" instead of doing "the work it would take to kick the habit."

Gas line deal raises legal issues

PACT: Conoco, state agree to "base terms"; new concerns arise.

By WESLEY LOY
Anchorage Daily News

(Published: October 22, 2005)

Legal questions surrounding the natural gas pipeline negotiations are so great that they could force resignations from the state's gas pipeline team, state Natural Resources Commissioner Tom Irwin said in a memorandum released Friday night.

Irwin, in the dense, five-page memo, said he and his staff have been put in a "work environment where they seriously question the legality of administrative actions" taken toward achieving a deal with a trio of North Slope oil producers.

His memo to Attorney General David Marquez seeks advice on whether he and his staff members are being asked by the Murkowski administration to break the law by continuing to negotiate a state gas line contract with the oil companies that might run counter to the state's best financial interests.

Gov. Frank Murkowski, speaking from Fairbanks in an unusual after-hours news conference Friday, released the Irwin memo after the conference was over. He mentioned it as an aside to his main news: That one of the three oil companies holding long-dormant rights to develop the giant North Slope gas reserves had agreed to the "base terms" of a contract laying out tax, ownership and other details if the oil companies build the $20 billion pipeline.

That company is Houston-based Conoco Phillips, the state's No. 1 oil and gas producer. The president of the Alaska subsidiary, Jim Bowles, stood at Murkowski's side in Fairbanks and said about the agreement, "the journey has started."

The other two North Slope producers negotiating pipeline terms with the state for more than a year, BP and Exxon Mobil, still have not agreed and contract negotiations continue with all three firms, Murkowski said. A BP representative, Ken Konrad, spoke at Friday's news conference but Exxon did not have a representative.

"This is a significant milestone," the governor said of Conoco's acceptance.

Irwin also did not speak, but his memo, dated Thursday, said a great deal about a contract that remains under wraps.

He wrote that he and members of his staff have concerns they "are being asked by the administration to operate outside current law" and might face personal liability if they sign off on a gas line contract under the state's Stranded Gas Development Act, which authorizes the governor to negotiate pipeline terms subject to final approval from the Legislature.

The contract, more than 100 pages long, remains under wraps while negotiations continue, Murkowski said Friday.

Irwin asked Marquez for his opinion on the legality of pipeline negotiations in eight areas. Among his concerns:

• Whether the administration's proposed contract unnecessarily gives oil companies major incentives to develop the gas, and at the same time seems to relax their existing obligations under state leases to develop the gas in the giant Prudhoe Bay and Point Thomson fields.

FBI - Stevens-257 194A-AN-13620 - M-133 ~~348~~

• Whether it's legal to support a contract provision under which the state would, for decades, agree to take gas instead of dollars as payment for the state's royalty interest in the gas fields. Doing so would shift project risk to the state, which would have to find buyers for the royalty gas, "without proof or compelling evidence" this would improve the viability of the pipeline project, Irwin wrote.

• Whether the contract is in the state's best interest when the state's economic models don't "show the need for the proposed fiscal support from the state to the producers." Irwin does not specify exactly what fiscal support he's referring to.

• Whether the commissioner can support a deal under which the likelihood of a gas pipeline might be tied to an agreement with the producers to alter tax methods or rates on crude oil. Irwin noted that the administration long resisted an invitation from the producers to negotiate contentious oil taxes in conjunction with a gas line. "However, this summer the administration embarked on extensive analysis and discussion of oil taxes under the umbrella" of gas line talks, Irwin wrote.

• Whether it's legal for the commissioner to sign a finding that the gas contract is in the state's best interest, when the contract would later need changes in state law to take effect. Irwin said other prospective pipeline builders who have applied for a fiscal contract under the Stranded Gas Development Act might view that as "changing the rules of the game" to "allow the award of a contract to a favored party on terms other than as advertised."

Irwin concluded his memo with the specter of possible resignations:

"I must point out that putting members of the Department of Natural Resources in a work environment where they seriously question the legality of administrative actions they are asked to participate in is so troubling that it could result in the resignation of exceedingly valuable members of our gas pipeline team," he wrote.

Irwin did not return a message left on his cell phone Friday night. Mike Chambers, a Murkowski spokesman, said he couldn't answer questions regarding Irwin's memo.

"We are very concerned about the issues raised by Commissioner Irwin," said Jim Whitaker, mayor of the Fairbanks North Star Borough and head of an organization with a competing pipeline proposal. "We think they're valid."

Tom Irwin's memo questioning the gas contracts

Memorandum to David W. Marquez, Attorney General

(Published: October 22, 2005)

For close to two years this Administration has been engaged in negotiations with the Producers, comprised of BP Exploration (Alaska) Inc., ConocoPhillips Alaska Inc., and ExxonMobil Alaska Production Inc., under the Alaska Stranded Gas Development Act. Over the course of this period the Governor's Office, together with the Departments of Revenue, Natural Resources, and Law, have become increasingly familiar with the Alaska Stranded Gas Development Act. Additionally, we have obtained extensive knowledge that we did not have at the beginning of these negotiations through the use of outside consultants and our modeling of the various alternatives available to the State for the commercialization of its North Slope gas resources. Moreover, over the course of negotiations, we have seen the positions taken by and terms acceptable to the Administration evolve. As a consequence, we now find ourselves in a position that is causing some members of the Department of Natural Resources—myself included—to seek advice on whether this Administration is operating within the limits of current law as it pushes for the conclusion of negotiations with the Producers. All our concerns may be further complicated by any split among the Sponsor Group into individual companies and whether an individual company meets the statutory requirement to be a qualified applicant with a qualified project. For these reasons, I ask that you provide the Department of Natural Resources (DNR) advice at your soonest opportunity on the matters discussed below.

I am not an attorney, and therefore cannot perform the same analysis as an attorney. However, I am concerned whether members of the DNR are being asked by the Administration to operate outside current law by our continuing participation in negotiations with the Producers under the Alaska Stranded Gas Development Act. Consequently, I would like either assurance that we are operating within the confines of law or advice on how to bring our actions into conformance with current law.

I am concerned about the legality of those negotiations in the following eight areas. First, the Alaska Stranded Gas Development Act is intended to facilitate development of this State's "stranded" gas. "Stranded gas" is defined in AS 43.82.900(13) to mean gas "that is not being marketed due to prevailing costs or price conditions as determined by an economic analysis by the commissioner [of the department of revenue] for a particular project." While it understandably took some time for the Administration and its outside consultants to complete the analysis needed to draw conclusions about whether Prudhoe Bay and Point Thomson gas—if developed as part of the project proposed by the Producers—meets the statutory definition of "stranded gas," that analysis is now complete and, as Governor Murkowski acknowledged in his recent speech before the State Chamber of Commerce in Valdez, that gas must now be considered "unstranded." This conclusion is supported by modeling performed by various staff and economic consultants to the Administration and Legislature. My first question, then, is whether this Administration is operating within the confines of current law by continuing with negotiations with the Producers under the Alaska Stranded Gas Development Act when all analyses indicate that the project gas as a whole—and particularly Prudhoe Bay and Point Thomson gas—does not meet the definition of "stranded gas" contained within that Act. And, if it is permissible to continue with the Producer negotiations, what liability might I or my staff personally face and what damage could be done to the State should I sign a preliminary fiscal interest findings and determination under the Act that concludes Prudhoe Bay and Point Thomson gas is "stranded gas" when the available data indicates that it is not.

Second, it appears that under AS 43.82.130(2) the Administration should not consent to terms in a proposed contract that materially conflict with the obligations of an oil and gas lessee to the State under an existing lease or unit agreement between that lessee and the State. However, I am concerned that the proposed Article 5 provisions on Work Commitments—especially when read together with Article 35.1, and even in spite of the potentially mitigating language proposed in Article 38—are terms that materially conflict with the obligations of lessees BP, ConocoPhillips, and Exxon Mobil under their existing North Slope lease agreements and the Prudhoe Bay and Point Thomson Unit Agreements. This is also complicated because there are other lessees not participating in the Stranded Gas negotiations whose interests would be affected. Furthermore, substantial and continuing pressure is being exerted on the DNR to endorse terms governing Point Thomson development that are inconsistent with and materially weaker than the Producers' current obligations to develop Point Thomson in accordance with the Point Thomson Unit Agreement and the plans of development approved under that unit agreement. Thus, I ask whether the intent and literal language of the Alaska Stranded Gas Development Act is being honored in the Producer negotiations if the Producers' obligation to diligently develop Prudhoe Bay and Point Thomson gas reserves is less under a contract proposed under the Act than under the existing lease and unit contracts with the Producers.

Third, AS 43.82.220 governs proposed contract terms relating to royalty. Subsection (a) appears to permit the Administration to make a long-term commitment to take its royalty gas in-kind and forego its current contractual right to switch to taking some or all of its royalty in value. The proposed Producer contract requires that the State make a multi-decade commitment to take all of the State's royalty gas in-kind without proof or compelling evidence that the viability of the project proposed by the Producers is dependent upon the State taking its royalty gas in-kind. Therefore, my third question is whether it will be legal for me to support/sign a preliminary fiscal interest findings and determination at this time when I believe that the State will assume significant risk without substantially improving the Producer's incentive to develop the pipeline.

Fourth, AS 43.82.400 requires a preliminary finding that the proposed contract terms are in the long-term fiscal interests of the State. DNR is concerned that no modeling can show the need for the proposed fiscal support from the State to the Producers and the need for a guarantee of fiscal certainty extending three decades from the pipeline's in-service date. Based on the Administration's project modeling (which is generally consistent with the modeling discussed publicly by others), I do not believe that the economic viability of the project requires the State's "give" nor that the prospect of long-term changes to the fiscal system are necessary. Therefore, my question here is whether current law permits me to support/sign a preliminary fiscal interest findings and determination endorsing contract terms that runs counter to the best data within the possession of the Administration.

Fifth, AS 43.82.445 instructs the Administration to include terms in any proposed contract which apply in certain events, such as a Producer's breach of a material provision of the contract, failure to comply with the approved qualified project plan, or intentional misrepresentation made in the course of negotiating the contract. It appears that the Act intends to require a commissioner's decision in the event of any such grievance, with appeal to the Alaska Superior Court. Further, the State's right to act on such a grievance by administrative decision (with appeal to the court system) is to continue up until the time the Producers commit to full project funding. However, the procedures spelled out in Article 5 (regarding lack of diligence in pursing a qualified project plan), Article 22 (mandatory dispute resolution), and Article 24 (administrative termination), as well as the definition of "administrative termination period" in Article 1, seem to contradict AS 43.82.445. My question is whether the proposed contract terms are legal under current law as reflected in the Alaska Stranded Gas Development Act, and whether I can legally support/sign a preliminary fiscal interest findings and determination accompanying a proposed contract containing such terms.

Sixth, AS 43.82.010(1) calls for the development of a proposed contract that does not significantly alter tax methodologies and rates on existing oil infrastructure and production. As you know, for a long time the Administration resisted the Producers' invitation to negotiate oil taxes in conjunction with gas pipeline matters. However, this summer the Administration embarked on extensive analysis and discussion of oil taxes under the umbrella of the Producers' application filed under the Alaska Stranded Gas Development Act. Therefore, my question is whether a commissioner can sign a preliminary fiscal interest findings and determination under the current provisions of the Alaska Stranded Gas Development Act if the proposed contract terms or the likelihood of the gas pipeline project itself are tied in any way to an agreement with the Producers regarding alteration of tax methodologies or rates on existing oil infrastructure or production.

Seventh, while I recognize that the Administration has developed a plan to address some portion of the legal impediments discussed above, I am not sure that the plan itself is sufficient or permissible. The plan, as I understand it, is to propose legislation amending current law as needed to bring the law into conformance with the proposed Producer contract. However, the Administration does not intend to introduce the proposed legislation until after the preliminary fiscal interest findings and determination is signed, which raises the issue of the legality of my actions at the time of signature as well as of the actions of this Administration at this time. Moreover, the Legislature may choose not to enact some or all of the legislation to be proposed by the Administration. Furthermore, the Stranded Gas Development Act invited potentially interested applicants to apply and negotiate with the Administration under the terms of the Act as it now reads. Changing the rules of the game at this late stage is much like changing the rules by which proposals received in response to a Request for Proposal (RFP) are evaluated so as to allow the award of a contract to a favored party on terms other than as advertised. This, too, strikes me as potentially improper, and I would like the Department of Law's advice on the issues raised in this paragraph as well.

Finally, DNR staff are assisting the departments of Revenue and Law in preparing the preliminary fiscal interest findings and determination under AS 43.82 (SGDA). In doing so we have been advised by the department of Revenue that the findings and determination will not include a quantitative evaluation of alternatives, such as other applications submitted under AS 43.82. Therefore, I would ask the Department of Law to evaluate whether the proposed preliminary findings and determinations meets the AS 43.82 requirements as well as the Administrations responsibility to provide a full disclosure/comparison which allows the public to adequately evaluate any proposed contract.

The requests for legal advice contained in this letter are not made lightly but with recognition of the serious and long-lasting ramifications of any proposed contract and preliminary fiscal interest findings and determination issued under the Alaska Stranded Gas Development Act. My concerns over the legality of current and anticipated actions are great and I respectfully request receiving a legal opinion on the subjects raised in this letter. Furthermore, I must point out that putting members of the Department of Natural Resources in a work environment where they seriously question the legality of administrative actions they are asked to participate in is so troubling that it could result in the resignation of exceedingly valuable members of our gas pipeline team, which would be a great loss to both the short and long-term interests of the State. For these reasons, I ask for your or your agencies immediate counsel on these issues.

In advance I would like to thank you for your assistance.

Gas line memo fuels talk

■ SIGNIFICANCE: Some lawmakers criticize Irwin; others fear "giveaway."

By WESLEY LOY
Anchorage Daily News

Republican lawmakers Saturday downplayed a memo from the state's natural resources commissioner, who said he and his staff were being pushed by the administration of Gov. Frank Murkowski into supporting a natural gas pipeline contract in conflict with the law and the state's best interests.

The memo by Commissioner Tom Irwin raises no new issues and doesn't threaten a year's work toward a contract laying out tax, ownership, labor and other terms should the oil trio of Conoco Phillips, BP and Exxon Mobil someday build a $20 billion pipeline, the lawmakers said.

But one Republican legislator, Rep. Mike Hawker of Anchorage, said he was disappointed that Irwin wrote the memo to Attorney General David Marquez asking for legal advice on whether the commissioner and his staff faced personal liability in signing off on the contract.

"This memo did not bring up anything new that those of us who have been working on the inside for well over a year were not cognizant of," said Hawker, an accountant and business consultant. Lawmakers have, and will, deal with all the issues and the memo is a "tempest in a teapot" that should not derail the pipeline contract talks, he said.

Irwin raised eight major worries with the contract, which remains confidential as negotiations with the oil companies continue. Irwin said it would give the companies unnecessary financial concessions and it might weaken lease obligations the companies already have to produce the gas beneath state acreage.

Irwin suggested in the five-page memo that people in the Department of Natural Resources who "seriously question the legality" of administration efforts toward a pipeline deal might resign.

"You have a petulant commissioner who didn't get his way. You can quote me on that," Hawker said.

Irwin did not return messages left on his cell phone seeking comment.

As a member of the Legislative Budget and Audit Committee, which would be the first to review a contract should the governor submit one for legislative approval, Hawker said he's received confidential briefings all summer from the Murkowski administration on the status of contract negotiations.

Rep. Ralph Samuels, R-Anchorage, declined to criticize Irwin but agreed with Hawker that the memo shouldn't have much impact.

"There's no big bomb there," Samuels said. "Those things have all been discussed. Some are problems, some are not problems."

The governor's office remained silent Saturday on Irwin and the memo, which Murkowski mentioned and released late Friday during a Fairbanks news conference to announce that one oil company, Conoco, had agreed to "base fiscal contract terms" with the state.

GAS LINE: Memo stirs controversy

Becky Hultberg, Murkowski's press aide, said Saturday the governor's office wouldn't have any further comment on the Irwin memo until Monday.

State Rep. Les Gara, D-Anchorage, said the Irwin memo reveals cracks in Murkowski's approach with the oil giants.

"What Commissioner Irwin said fed all my worst fears — that this could be a huge giveaway," Gara said.

Instead of giving the oil companies unnecessary incentives to produce the Slope's huge gas reserves, the memo lends credence to the idea that the state should "take the leases back and give them to somebody who really wants to develop the gas, rather than hold it in the ground," Gara said.

All the lawmakers interviewed Saturday from both parties said they were caught off-guard Friday when Murkowski gave out copies of Irwin's memo.

Gara said Irwin's memo shows his convictions and fears are "so great that he had to do something extraordinary."

"You have to admire the governor," Hawker said. "He made it immediately available to assure the public of the integrity of the process here."

As for Irwin's suggestion of possible resignations, "the governor should regretfully agree to accept the resignation of all those people who have offered to resign," even if they include Irwin, Hawker said.

Murkowski, a Republican, is the latest in a string of Alaska governors who have tried to persuade oil companies to build a pipeline to carry the Slope's long-dormant trove of about 35 trillion cubic feet of natural gas to domestic or overseas markets. The oil companies historically have cited the high cost of a pipeline as the main impediment.

In recent years, however, the landscape has changed, with natural gas prices spiking to painful highs in the Lower 48 and once prolific North American gas fields now tapping out.

Last December, the trio of oil companies submitted a joint proposal to the state for a contract laying out tax and other terms should they decide to build a gas line. Since then, the state and hired experts have been negotiating with the companies, and on Oct. 6 the governor announced he had offered them a contract and urged them to snap it up as a good deal for all parties.

Now Conoco, the state's top oil producer and most aggressive exploratory driller, has broken ranks with the other two companies and agreed to base terms with the state, Murkowski and the company's Alaska president, Jim Bowles, said Friday.

Samuels said it's not surprising that the three companies aren't in lockstep on the deal. People tend to perceive the oil industry as a bloc, when in reality the companies are global competitors, each with its own business priorities, he said.

"It's good one of them finally said, 'It's good enough for us.' The logjam broke," he said.

Murkowski's press aides worked hard Friday to stoke media interest in Friday's Conoco announcement, calling reporters with newspapers from Los Angeles to Denver to Chicago to New York. Murkowski called it a "significant milestone."

But the Irwin memo, which Murkowski mentioned as an aside, ended up overshadowing the Conoco announcement.

"Unfortunately, the governor mismanaged the moment," Hawker said.

Oil lessons apply to gas line issue

By ERIC WOHLFORTH

Thirty-three years ago, in 1972, Alaskans were faced with the issue of possible state financing and ownership of the entire trans-Alaska oil pipeline. Then-Gov. Bill Egan advanced the state ownership plan because he was worried that the state would not receive an adequate share of oil revenues if the trans-Alaska oil pipeline were privately owned. With oil selling at $4 a barrel, with taxes and royalties figured on value after deducting transportation costs of the pipeline, the state's revenue take was reduced to a mere pittance.

The answer? Gov. Egan said the state of Alaska, not the oil companies, had to finance and own the pipeline to assure adequate state revenues. We had to capture the profit of transporting the oil to Valdez. The oil company presidents he summoned to Juneau in October 1971 hated Egan's suggestion. They were angry that his ownership suggestion would further delay the start of construction, already long delayed after the 1969 sale of oil leases. This bonanza $900 million sale had caused a dramatic ramp-up in state spending which Egan worried was unsustainable.

The hugely important issue demanded a thorough hearing. A joint House and Senate Commerce hearing was planned for March 1972 at the Baranof Hotel.

Sen. Ron Rettig and Rep. Dick McVeigh ran the hearing, and Attorney General John Havelock was the state's team leader, assisted by me as commissioner of revenue and Joe Henri as commissioner of administration.

The department of revenue, which I headed, provided an early computer model of the sharply different picture of revenues under state and private ownership.

Winter storms socked in Juneau, trapping the oil company officials for a week. As if in retaliation, the phalanx of their lawyers lectured us in mind-numbing detail about pipeline regulations and ICC valuation, giving numerous legal reasons why the state could not proceed. However, they were stingy with information the state wanted and needed: How much would it cost? How long would it take? Experts said the state could not market the massive volume of financing within the time required and that any such financing plan would be unconstitutional. The chairman of Standard Oil of Ohio said that he was frightened to death by the delay the state's ownership plan entailed.

After all the testimony Havelock said:

"It has been a long week and I'm sure everyone's recollection of what has taken place in this room is by now crowded with conflicting testimony and strewn heavily with a jumble of numbers."

He continued:

"In this presentation, the industry didn't give an inch, didn't leave the shadow of doubt. We can't tax, we can't regulate, we can't own. As one spectator remarked during the break yesterday, 'You know what I have found out? Everything the oil companies don't like is unconstitutional.'"

All this rhetoric smothered the state's arguments which centered on the tax-free nature of state ownership and state's right to tariffs for transporting the oil.

The oil companies succeeded in frightening legislators into believing that even enactment of permission to negotiate an ownership statute could delay the state of construction.

The oil companies succeeded in frightening legislators into believing that even enactment of permission to negotiate an ownership statute could delay the state of construction.

Unlike the situation today, early start of oil pipeline construction was absolutely essential to state solvency, so rapidly had we ramped up spending since the 1969 lease sale. Legislators were unwilling to risk the responsibility that the oil companies were correct that further work on the state ownership plan might fatally delay pipeline construction.

Legislators gained confidence during the hearings and in the next year passed a range of pipeline and tax measures. As described by Jack Roderick in his book, "Crude Dreams", in 1973 the Legislature narrowly missed inclusion of an option to buy 20 percent of the pipeline in the legislative package that finally passed. Many think that partial ownership of the oil line would have been to the state's advantage then and over the last 30 years, and that partial ownership of the gas line makes sense today.

OUR VIEW

Think of the long term

Alaskans should look at a gas line project with the biggest payday

An illustrious list of public officials, led this past year by the Alaska Gasline Port Authority, has been busy encouraging the dream of the so-called all-Alaska natural gas project.

The authority, heavily promoted by the Fairbanks North Star Borough and city of Valdez, believes it can borrow 100 percent of the billions of dollars it needs, putting up no cash of its own and pledging no existing assets or current revenue as collateral. It proposes to build a pipeline from the North Slope and a terminal at Valdez to liquefy gas for shipment aboard a fleet of tankers to receiving terminals that might be built on the U.S. or Canadian West Coast.

The port authority says its plan would avoid giving any construction jobs to Canadians, as if that should be the controlling factor in such a project. But to keep the line out of Canada would mean overcoming strong environmental and community opposition to liquefied gas receiving terminals on the West Coast; an act of Congress to allow foreign ships to carry the gas, or paying two or three times the price for U.S. ships; and selling an awful lot of Alaska gas into the confined West Coast market.

Isn't Alaska's gas more valuable in a cost-efficient line direct to consumers rather than piped to Valdez, liquefied, loaded aboard expensive tankers, unloaded, turned back into gas, and then stuffed into a pipeline to market?

The port authority — if it can pull it off — says it would share the wealth from its project with the state and all its municipalities.

Meanwhile, the governor is negotiating with the three major North Slope producers for their own proposal to move the gas to market — a pipeline from Alaska to connect with the entire North America distribution grid in Alberta.

While making his own commitments to ensure affordable gas for Alaskans, a fair share of the revenues for the state treasury, jobs and much, much more, the governor has avoided making any disparaging comments about the port authority.

Politics prevent the governor from publicly doubting the authority's questionable plan, but his lack of any forceful critique has helped to keep alive the all-Alaska option and its dangling proposition of more Alaska construction jobs. He will have to deal with those inflated expectations if and when he reaches a full contract with the producers to build the pipeline.

Meanwhile, Friday's announcement by the governor of another step toward a deal with the producers is encouraging, though there's still plenty of work to do.

And tossing in its opinion, the Alaska Democratic Party's state central committee has passed a resolution including the demand that any state deal with the North Slope producers include a specific commitment on the calendar to build a liquefied gas project — as if the Democrats have all the answers to the project's high hurdles.

Isn't Alaska's gas more valuable in a cost-efficient line direct to consumers rather than piped to Valdez, liquefied, loaded aboard expensive tankers, unloaded, turned back into gas, and then stuffed into a pipeline to market? Remember that lower shipping costs mean a higher value for the gas, which means billions more tax and royalty dollars for the state.

The decision should be about long-term public revenues, not short-term construction jobs. The decision should be based on the reality of getting the most for Alaska's gas.

MEMO: Governor mum on Natural Resources head's job situation.

By SEAN COCKERHAM
Anchorage Daily News

JUNEAU — Gov. Frank Murkowski's office refused to say Monday whether Natural Resources Commissioner Tom Irwin still has a job after his publicized warning that the state is giving up too much in the governor's gas line negotiations.

Irwin

Meanwhile, several legislators from both parties said Monday that Irwin raised good questions about the gas pipeline talks. The lawmakers also said they were shocked that Murkowski had made Irwin's concerns public.

The governor at a Friday press conference released the memo Irwin wrote to the state attorney general. Irwin's memo questioned the legality of the negotiations between the governor's office and oil companies over a proposed natural gas pipeline from the North Slope to the Lower 48.

Legislators on Monday reported that rumors Irwin had been placed on administrative leave as punishment. Department of Natural Resources staff members said Irwin was not in the office and routed calls to special assistant Dan Saddler. He said he couldn't answer whether his boss was in trouble.

"You'll have to ask his supervisor, the governor, about that," Saddler said.

The governor's office wouldn't say whether Irwin has been fired.

"I just don't have any comment today on Commissioner Irwin's status," Murkowski spokeswoman Becky Hultberg repeated whenever asked questions about Irwin.

Irwin did not return multiple phone messages Monday. He has not spoken publicly about the memo since the governor released it Friday.

Murkowski appointed the sometimes gruff, no-nonsense Irwin as Natural Resources commissioner in 2003. Irwin was an executive with Fairbanks Gold Mining Inc. and had been operations manager and general manager of the Fort Knox and True North mines.

Irwin and members of his department are big players on the state's gas line negotiating team. He said in his memo the concerns he was expressing were so great they could result in resignations from the team. Anchorage Republican state Rep. Mike Hawker said over the weekend that the governor should accept any such resignations, including from Irwin himself.

Hawker said Monday that, in any organization, a chief executive must have the support of his subordinates.

He had earlier described the memo as coming from a "petulant commissioner who didn't get his way." Other legislators, though, said Irwin did the right thing.

"For me, after reading the memo, every question was a legitimate question," said North Pole Republican Rep. John Coghill, the majority leader of the state House.

Fairbanks Republican Rep. Jay Ramras said Irwin is an honorable man whose worries are a legitimate part of the debate.

Anchorage Democratic Rep. Ethan Berkowitz, the House minority leader, said Irwin showed courage.

"It's a sorry day when people like that get punished," said Berkowitz, who is a candidate for governor.

Several lawmakers said they were stunned that Murkowski made Irwin's memo public. Details of the negotiations with the oil companies over a gas pipeline contract are supposed to be confidential.

Coghill said the memo was an internal document and that he called the Republican governor Monday to ask why it was released. Coghill said late Monday that he didn't get a response.

Irwin aide Saddler said the Department of Natural Resources considered the memo confidential.

"This was something not meant to be public on our end," Saddler said.

Murkowski spokeswoman Hultberg said the governor felt the matter was serious enough to be aired publicly. She said it's in the state's best interest to have the attorney general answer the questions posed by Irwin.

Irwin raised eight legal questions. It challenged the basis for the negotiations, which are being done under the Stranded Gas Act. Irwin said that, since the data shows it is economical to build the roughly $20 billion pipeline, the gas isn't stranded and there's no need for the state to offer concessions to get the project built.

The memo said the Department of Natural Resources is "concerned that no modeling can show the need for the proposed fiscal support" the state is offering the companies. The memo didn't specifically discuss what the state is offering.

It did say the state was considering making the level of state oil tax part of the gas pipeline deal with the companies, BP, Exxon Mobil and Conoco Phillips.

The attorney general's office said it planned to respond this week to Irwin's legal questions.

Legislators said the memo illuminated a fight between two camps in the governor's negotiating team: the departments of Natural Resources and Revenue.

Deputy Revenue Commissioner Steve Porter would not go into much detail but said some of the information in Irwin's memo is a "misunderstanding."

He said that, rather than offering concessions to the oil companies, the talks are about finding a way to give the companies certainty about how, and how much, the state would collect in taxes and royalties. The talks also cover the governor's proposal for the state to own part of the line.

He said the gas is stranded — meaning uneconomical to bring to market — until the investors have that certainty. The future price of gas will also affect the economics, he said.

JUNEAU — State Natural Resources Commissioner Tom Irwin said Tuesday he still has his job despite having written an explosive memo critical of how much the state was giving up in the governor's negotiations over a natural gas pipeline.

But Irwin, who wasn't at work Monday or Tuesday, wouldn't say whether he is suspended.

"It's really not appropriate for me to be talking about it," he said. "It needs to come from the governor's office."

row, would not say Tuesday whether it still considers Irwin to be the state's commissioner of natural resources. The governor's spokeswoman would not comment on Irwin's job status.

Gov. Frank Murkowski released Irwin's gas line memo at a Friday press conference. Murkowski had called the press conference to announce he had struck a deal with Conoco Phillips on terms that would cover state taxes and royalties if the proposed natural gas pipeline were built from the North Slope to the Lower 48.

Murkowski is working on getting Exxon Mobil and BP to accept his proposal for the gas line contract. Irwin was a major player on the state's negotiating team.

Irwin, in his first public comments since the governor released the memo, said Tuesday he didn't mean for the memo to go to the press. He considered it to be confidential.

"That memo was attorney-client privilege. I am amazed, surprised that it ever got put out," Irwin said.

Irwin wrote the memo to Alaska Attorney General David Marquez. It questioned the legality of the ongoing negotiations between the governor's office and the major North Slope oil companies over what the state's share of the wealth would be if the pipeline were built.

Typical of how he posed his questions is this one, about the enforceability of the gas line contract: "My question is whether the proposed contract terms are legal under current law as reflected in the Alaska Stranded Gas Development Act."

The act is the state law under which the talks are taking place.

Irwin said in the memo that all available data show it is economical to build the pipeline and there is no reason for the state to be offering "fiscal support" — under the stranded gas act — to help the oil companies with the project.

The negotiations are confidential, and the memo didn't say specifically what the state is offering. Other state officials have characterized it as a good deal for the state.

Becky Hultberg, Murkowski's press aide, said the attorney general will soon have a response to Irwin's questions about the legality of the gas pipeline talks. The legal analysis will also address Irwin's position that his memo should have been considered confidential under attorney-client privilege, Hultberg said.

Hultberg said the governor released the memo because he thought it was important to make the issues public and get them resolved now. She would not elaborate.

Meanwhile, an attempt by Conoco Phillips to call a closed meeting of the Anchorage-area legislators fizzled Tuesday. Lawmakers reported getting calls from Conoco Phillips lobbyist Michael Hurley inviting them to the meeting at the company's Alaska headquarters in Anchorage.

Anchorage Democratic Rep. Les Gara said that, when Conoco Phillips said it wouldn't open the meeting to the general public, he asked the Legislature's legal division and ethics staff whether it would be a violation of open-meeting laws to attend. Both said their preliminary view was that the meeting could pose a legal problem. Gara said he passed that information on to all the other legislators.

Conoco Phillips spokeswoman Dawn Patience said the company called the meeting to brief the Southcentral legislators on the gas pipeline agreement and give them a chance to ask questions about it. Patience said the company has done the same for business leaders and a handful of other legislators already.

Conoco Phillips canceled the Tuesday meeting "because there were concerns raised," Patience said.

The Legislature has the power to reject the deal Murkowski made with the company. Its details will have to be made public before lawmakers can take action.

■ CAMPAIGN: Alaska's Future aims to counter all-Alaska effort.

By SEAN COCKERHAM
Anchorage Daily News

JUNEAU — A new political group has formed to launch a counteroffensive against the advertising campaign pushing an all-Alaska gas pipeline to Valdez.

The group calls itself Alaska's Future and is advised by veteran Republican political strategist Art Hackney. In an e-mail obtained by a reporter, Hackney said the point of the group is to "fill a vacuum on the nonpartisan, pro-business advocacy side" in the debate over a natural gas pipeline deal.

"The problem is that all the existing groups are tied directly to the (oil companies) or to the governor, whose numbers make him a bad direct advocate," Hackney wrote in the e-mail.

Republican Gov. Frank Murkowski has long been beset with low approval ratings — his "numbers" — in statewide polls.

A bitter fight is being waged over the route of the proposed pipeline from the North Slope. Some favor an all-Alaska gas pipeline to Valdez, where the gas would be chilled and shipped south in special tankers. Others, including the governor and the oil companies, say the realistic project is a pipeline from the North Slope along the Alaska Highway through Canada to the Lower 48.

GAS LINE: BP gave to group

Murkowski is seeking a deal with the oil companies on the state's share of the pipeline costs and revenues. Hackney, in his e-mail describing Alaska's Future, said the new group "will provide a forum for analysis and honest messaging about the deal when it hits the streets to counter the negative ads" that are coming from the All-Alaska Alliance.

The All-Alaska Alliance argues that a pipeline to Valdez offers the state the best chance to get spin-off industries. The alliance is running TV commercials that show Canadians drinking beer and gloating about getting jobs that would have gone to Alaskans if the pipe had not been routed through Canada.

Hackney suggested in his e-mail that Alaska's Future has money to spread its counter message.

"The group has the resources to do statewide microtargeting; using the group that did the same for President Bush in the last election nationwide," he wrote.

Microtargeting is a sophisticated polling technique that is growing in popularity, especially on the national political scene. It involves putting together detailed profiles of voters, including their ages, what kind of houses they live in, how much money they make, even the kinds of places where they go out to eat.

Political groups use the information to target narrow slices of the population with advertising, direct mail, door-to-door visits or other means of influence.

Hackney, in a Wednesday interview, said Alaska's Future is no slick political machine. He said it's a group of young people who want to undertake a nonpolitical grass-roots effort, which he understood would be door-to-door.

He said that hiring a firm that helped Bush get elected was just a suggestion.

The president and one of the founders of Alaska's Future is 31-year-old George Culpepper. He was chairman of the college Republicans at Metro State College in Colorado and a Republican Party activist in that state. But Culpepper said his Alaska group is nonpartisan and includes Democrats.

Culpepper said he means the group to be the voice of Alaskans between the ages of 18 and 40. He said he is a 1992 graduate of Service High School in Anchorage and attended the University of Alaska Anchorage before joining the Marines. He said he came back to Alaska in July.

He said the group has at least 50 members and is going to promote whatever can bring jobs to the state. That includes getting the long-awaited natural gas pipeline built.

Culpepper would not say where the group gets its money. He said it collects donations from its members, which include businesses. He would not say who all is in the group.

Alaska's Future has gotten cash from at least one oil company, BP. Company spokesman Daren Beaudo wouldn't say how much.

Becky Hultberg, the governor's spokeswoman, said Murkowski's office has no involvement that she's aware of in Culpepper's new group. But she said Murkowski is glad to see the interest from a group that recognizes the importance of the gas project and hopes it will add to the public dialogue.

Lori Backes, the executive director of the All-Alaska Alliance, said Alaska's Future has every right to organize and spread a counter message. She said Alaskans should learn as much as they can about the huge gas pipeline issues.

Backes, like Culpepper, would not provide details of her group's financing or it membership.

Governor, talk to us

It's time to tell Alaskans more about the gas line negotiations

Governor, it's better that you tell Alaskans about the negotiations for a North Slope natural gas project than to have your dissatisfied Natural Resources commissioner tell only his one side of the multisided story. Commissioner Tom Irwin's memo of last week, while tantalizing for political commentators, served only to raise questions but not to provide any answers.

Tell us what is the state doing, talking about oil taxes while negotiating a fiscal deal with North Slope producers for the proposed natural gas project. That's what the commissioner's memo says. Are you trying to raise oil taxes, based on high prices, as many Alaskans have asked? If so, people would like to hear it.

Please, governor, explain to Alaskans in more detail why it helps the project if the state takes an ownership stake in the pipeline and also takes all of its royalty share and production tax in gas rather than in cash. How will Alaska sell all that gas? What are the risks to the state? What are the possible benefits?

And where might the state come up with its $4 billion to buy a 20 percent stake in the pipeline itself? What if there are construction cost overruns? Would those be the state's problem too?

And if you tell us we'll listen to why you need changes in state law to carry out the gas line contract. It's not surprising changes may be needed in the Stranded Gas Development Act, first adopted seven years ago. Meanwhile, we're skeptical of Commissioner Irwin's tone of shock and distress in his memo at the possibility, considering that potential changes in state law have been on the negotiating table for months — a table that included a chair for Mr. Irwin.

Alaska has waited almost four decades for a gas line and waiting a little while longer isn't going to hurt

The attorney general also was at the table, and we would like to hear from him soon with answers to the legal questions in the commissioner's memo.

And we need an answer from the revenue commissioner: Is the gas economically "stranded," as defined by Alaska law, and therefore eligible for this long-negotiated fiscal contract to spur development in lieu of the state's existing tax and royalty structure? Commissioner Irwin seems to believe the gas is not stranded, but that's not his decision under the law to make, nor is it up to the attorney general.

Commissioner Irwin also seems to criticize you, governor, for going outside the lines to reach a deal with North Slope producers, but he neglects to say the Stranded Gas Act specifically allows negotiation of "other terms or conditions that are necessary ... in the best interests of the state."

The best interests of the state would be served with a gas pipeline, creating jobs and earning billions of dollars for public services. Is that provision broad enough to allow whatever it is that is under negotiation?

But, governor, the best interests will not be served if you move too quickly with the deal, leaving behind a skeptical public.

So, first, slow down if that's what it takes to do it right. Alaska has waited almost four decades for a gas line and waiting a little while longer isn't going to hurt — and could help get the best deal.

Second, the state needs to stop hiding behind the confidentiality provisions of the Stranded Gas Act. The law was written to protect proprietary information submitted by project applicants, but there is nothing anywhere in the law that says all of the state's research and analysis and policy debates must be confidential.

Governor, don't let loud critics fill the empty sounds of silence. If Commissioner Irwin doesn't like the deal, that's his opinion. Give us the information so we can form our own opinion.

■ BOTTOM LINE: We need leadership from the governor, not complaints from a commissioner.

JUNEAU — Gov. Frank Murkowski said Thursday that state Natural Resources Commissioner Tom Irwin has lost his job after writing a memo saying Murkowski was giving up too much in the natural gas pipeline negotiations.

Irwin's removal prompted the resignation of six senior members of the state Natural Resources Department. The losses include Mark Myers, the director of the state Division of Oil and Gas. Never in memory have so many top Alaska officials resigned in a single day.

Murkowski said at a news conference that he needed a natural resources commissioner who would support the terms of the deal the governor is pursuing with oil companies on what the state would get if a gas line is built. Irwin had raised questions about the legality of the negotiations.

"Obviously there was a legitimate question as to whether Tom was going to support the administration's goal," said the Republican governor.

Murkowski named Mike Menge, his senior energy adviser, to replace Irwin.

Legislators of both parties said they were stunned by the high-echelon exit from a department playing a key role in the gas pipeline negotiations with the North Slope oil companies.

"I'm just concerned, and I suppose most Alaskans are, that he has now peeled off people who will tell him the truth. ... It is going to create a credibility problem with the Legislature," House Majority Leader John Coghill, R-North

IRWIN: Shake-up called 'Thursday afternoon massacre'

Pole, said.

Coghill added there are few state officials he has admired as much as Irwin, who had a background managing gold mines.

Sen. Johnny Ellis, D-Anchorage, called it the "Thursday afternoon massacre." The huge changeover at the state's resource agency is bound to affect gas line talks, said Ellis, the Senate minority leader. "The A Team has just resigned en masse."

Murkowski said he and Irwin agreed that Irwin should go. But the letters of resignation from Irwin's colleagues all said: "I regret that I have to take this action, but I have no alternative following the dismissal of Tom Irwin as commissioner of the Department of Natural Resources."

Irwin did not return repeated messages left on his cell phones and at his home.

The shake-up comes as the state is attempting to negotiate one of the biggest deals in its history. Murkowski and his team have been talking to the major oil companies for two years about how to build the line and decide the state's share of costs and benefits.

Murkowski last Friday had released the Oct. 20 memo Irwin wrote saying the state was offering the oil companies too much. The memo, to the state attorney general, questioned the legality of the negotiations.

Murkowski said Thursday that he didn't like how Irwin handled the memo, which he said was an e-mail copied to the governor's office and other state officials.

"I personally value highly differing points of view ... yet I expect every member of my cabinet to confer with me on major policy issues, major policy disputes as they arise. I don't consider a copied e-mail really sufficient notification," Murkowski said.

Alaska Attorney General David Marquez conceded, though, the Irwin e-mail wasn't the first time the concerns it contained had been raised from within the state negotiating team.

Irwin has said he had not wanted his memo released. Murkowski, though, said, "I hardly felt that was a confidential e-mail. Several people were copied on it, it went through three of my offices, there was no mention (in it) of confidentiality."

About an hour after Murkowski said that, the Department of Natural Resources sent out a press release that said "Tom Irwin would like to clarify" that the e-mail only went to the attorney general, the governor's chief of staff and the three state officials who helped him craft it. The latter three have now resigned.

Murkowski said he was thoroughly familiar with Irwin's e-mail when he released it and that he did so because he thought the public should be familiar with the commissioner's concerns. The governor's attorney general on Thursday released an opinion that basically dismissed Irwin's concerns over the legality of the gas talks.

Marquez said the governor has broad authority to negotiate contracts and any gas pipeline deal will also have to be approved by the Legislature.

Murkowski said he did not expect the gas line negotiations would be hurt. "We're losing some qualified people. But as we all know in life, people come and go. And we will find other people to replace them," Murkowski said.

The resignations are effective Nov. 15.

Deputy commissioners Mary Rutherford and Dick LeFebvre, longtime state employees, stepped down along Myers and the others. Rutherford, who worked for the state for 23 years, and Myers were part of the state's core gas line team.

Myers, the oil and gas director for the past five years, issued a scathing resignation letter. He said the gas line talks have implications for all the state's oil and gas interests.

"I cannot continue as Director and watch silently as the state's interests are undermined by creating barriers for the new oil and gas participants that are so vital to the economic future of our state," he wrote.

Mining, Land and Water Division director Bob Loeffler also resigned. Loeffler had worked for DNR since 1978, permitting all the major mines in Alaska.

One of Irwin's closest colleagues, Office of Project Management and Permitting director Bill Jeffress, resigned saying he was "unable to support the direction of the administration."

Jeffress, a former mining executive, oversaw the coastal zone management program and the permitting of large developments. He had worked with Irwin for years at the Fort Knox gold mine in Fairbanks.

Also tendering her resignation Thursday was project assistant Nancy Welch.

"I think it's unprecedented in state history to lose that many people in one department at one time," said John Shively, a Holland America Line executive and natural resources commissioner under former Gov. Tony Knowles.

Even when a governor is elected, transitions usually unfold over months to allow government to function as smoothly as possible, Shively noted.

Steve Borell, executive director of the Alaska Miners Association, said the sudden loss of DNR's top echelon was disappointing.

"One of the things you want in government is continuity," Borell said. "It's going to cause people to take a deep breath. People are going to wonder what the heck is going on."

Shively said he spoke to one of the deputies who resigned Wednesday.

"Some of them might feel that Tom has been a very good commissioner and that he was not being treated well. And that was not something they wanted to be part of," he said, declining to name the person he spoke with.

Bob Penney, a businessman and politically connected sportfishing advocate, said he's known Irwin for three decades. "He wasn't doing that job for the money. He was doing it for the good of the state. It's a real shame," Penney said.

Energy adviser takes over as commissioner

By WESLEY LOY

Michael L. Menge, named Thursday to replace Tom Irwin as state commissioner of natural resources, moves up from the job of Gov. Frank Murkowski's senior adviser on energy, mining and the environment.

Menge has been one of Murkowski's insiders in negotiating with major oil companies for a pipeline to carry North Slope natural gas to the Lower 48.

A geologist with roots in Arkansas, Menge has held a variety of jobs with government resource agencies.

From 1995 to 2002, he was a staffer on the U.S. Senate Energy Committee, which Murkowski chaired when he was in the U.S. Senate. Murkowski became Alaska governor in December 2002.

According to a resume distributed by Murkowski's office Thursday, Menge had retired in 2002 to a "family ranch in Arkansas," but in August 2003 he took the Juneau-based job as the governor's senior energy adviser.

In the early 1990s, Menge directed statewide environmental permitting, monitoring and enforcement in the Alaska Department of Environmental Conservation.

Prior to that he worked in Anchorage for the federal Bureau of Land Management on issues related to the trans-Alaska oil pipeline and a proposed gas pipeline route.

For most of the 1970s and '80s, he worked for agencies, including the U.S. Geological Survey, evaluating oil and mineral potential in several Western states and in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge.

Legislators question Irwin firing

GAS LINE: Legislature could nix deal if it decides governor acted improperly.

By SEAN COCKERHAM and WESLEY LOY
Anchorage Daily News

Republican leaders of the Legislature tried to talk Gov. Frank Murkowski out of getting rid of state Natural Resources Commissioner Tom Irwin and say Murkowski's decision to ignore their advice could have serious consequences.

"I think it is going to have a very negative impact," House Speaker John Harris, a Valdez Republican, said Friday.

The Republican governor on Thursday announced Irwin was losing his job, and six top officials in Irwin's department quit in protest.

Irwin's removal came days after he wrote a memo to Attorney General David Marquez saying the governor was giving up too much in the ongoing negotiations with oil companies over taxes and royalties the state would collect if a natural gas pipeline is built to the Lower 48.

Murkowski is authorized to cut a deal with the companies by the Stranded Gas Development Act that the Legislature passed in 2003. Harris said he will investigate whether Murkowski violated the intent of that act by removing Irwin.

"The intent was to have the commissioners from all different departments have an equal say in it and not be pushed out," said Harris. "I think that's what happened. One of the commissioners had a dissenting viewpoint and was pushed out."

The Legislature could kill the governor's deal with the oil companies if it decides he has acted improperly. No matter what, top legislators said, the loss of Irwin and the resignations of other resource department officials will make them take a harder look at whatever gas deal Murkowski asks them to approve.

Irwin's removal has ignited a storm of criticism. Even Lt. Gov Loren Leman, also a Republican, said Friday that he wouldn't have done it and that Irwin "is one of the most honest, honorable people I know."

Murkowski said Thursday that he and Irwin mutually agreed Irwin should go. The governor said Irwin was removed because he would not support the gas deal Murkowski is pursuing.

Harris said that top Republican leaders met with Murkowski's senior aides on Thursday shortly before the governor told the public Irwin was out. The legislators, Harris said, told the aides to tell Murkowski that Irwin shouldn't be fired.

"I think we were fairly emphatic. We thought that would ... cause a serious blow to people's feelings about the administration," Harris said.

Others at the meeting, Harris said, were Senate President Ben Stevens and Rep. Ralph Samuels, both of Anchorage, and House Majority Leader John Coghill and Sen. Gene Therriault, both of North Pole. All are Republicans. Harris said they met with Murkowski Chief of Staff Jim Clark and Mike Menge, the governor's senior energy adviser who is replacing Irwin as natural resources commissioner.

Therriault said the group's message was that firing Irwin would be "counterproductive." He said that's because it would result in the loss of Irwin and other good people.

Murkowski spokeswoman Becky Hultberg said Clark, the governor's chief of staff, told her that the legislators brought up the subject of whether Irwin should be fired.

"They expressed the concern that from a management point of view they understood it might happen but from a political point of view they thought it would be very negative," she said.

Hultberg said the governor's office didn't want to respond specifically to Harris' suggestion that the governor might have violated the intent of the stranded gas act. She said there has been a lot of discussion among members of the governor's negotiating team about the concerns Irwin raised in his memo.

"As the governor has acknowledged, there were differences of opinion and some differences of opinion still remain. But it's the governor's job to listen to those opinions and set a policy direction," she said.

Hultberg said Murkowski is aware that what happened to Irwin is likely to put his gas deal under more scrutiny when he gives it to the Legislature for approval.

"He welcomes that scrutiny ... He is focused on getting to the point where people can judge for themselves," she said.

Whatever deal Murkowski strikes with the oil companies will go out for public review, and ultimately must be approved by the legislature. Until then, with the negotiations continuing, the terms are confidential.

Irwin's memo revealed serious infighting among Murkowski's negotiators over the terms and questioned the legality of the governor's negotiations with the companies.

Marquez responded Thursday that the questions Irwin raised involve policy, not legal issues.

Irwin has said he never meant for the memo to be put out to the public and considered it to be attorney-client privilege. But Murkowski, who released the memo at a press conference last week, said it was neither marked nor sent over like a confidential document, and he felt the public had the right to know Irwin's concerns.

Lt. Gov. Leman said he doesn't understand why Murkowski blindsided Irwin by putting it out.

"I think doing so unnecessarily politicized this issue," Leman said in an interview.

Anchorage Democrat Rep. Ethan Berkowitz, who is running for governor in 2006, said the Legislature should get an "independent counsel" to look into Irwin's charges.

Anchorage Rep. Ralph Samuels said the governor has the right to pick his team. It will be up to the Legislature to decide if the team made a good gas deal, he said.

Ken Boyd, formerly director of the state Division of Oil and Gas and now an oil industry consultant, said the departures of Irwin and his staff will surely slow down progress toward a gas pipeline contract.

"The word the industry hates the most is uncertainty. Anytime you create uncertainty, it's a cause for delay," he said. "You've taken a few people out of the room there that have a lot of knowledge. If this thing ever gets to the Legislature, somebody has got to present it. And some of the people who would have done that aren't there now."

Dan Dickinson, a longtime Revenue Department official and member of the governor's gas pipeline team, said it's never good to lose experienced people. But a lot of the negotiating work is already done, he said.

"It's not going to be a fatal flaw," he said.

IRWIN: Former DNR executives called heroes for asking legal questions.

By DON HUNTER
Anchorage Daily News

Ousted Natural Resources Commissioner Tom Irwin and six top aides who resigned with him were touted as "Alaska heroes" and "the magnificent seven" Friday at a mid-day rally in the shadow of the governor's office in the Atwood Building.

The protest, sponsored in part by groups promoting an all-Alaska natural gas line, drew several dozen people including politicians from across the spectrum. Just about all of them called on Gov. Frank Murkowski to open up his negotiations with producers to a "fair and transparent comparison" of competing pipeline proposals.

Lori Backes, director of the All Alaska Alliance, described Irwin as a "deeply committed" state employee who struggled with his doubts about Murkowski's gas line strategy. Putting them in writing to the attorney general "took a lot of courage and a lot of soul searching on his part," she said.

Other speakers included former Gov. Wally Hickel and two who have announced for next year's governor's race — Republican Sara Palin and Democrat Eric Croft. There was Fairbanks North Star Borough Mayor Jim Whitaker; former Green Party gubernatorial candidate Jim Sykes; David Gottstein, co-founder of the petroleum industry watchdog group Backbone II; and Alaska Teamsters boss Mike Kenny.

Gottstein said Irwin was punished for raising legitimate questions about the legality of the negotiations — "critically important issues that must be examined in depth and not glossed over."

Palin, a former Wasilla mayor, said the mass exodus of top Natural Resources officials is "a defining moment in our state" and "a perfect example of things that are amiss in Juneau."

Croft offered a barking dog analogy: "If your guard dog wakes you up at 2 a.m.," the Democratic state representative said, "you can investigate, or you can shoot the dog. Gov. Murkowski chose to shoot the dog."

Whitaker, who chairs the Alaska Natural Gasline Port Authority, which has a competing pipeline proposal, said in an interview after the event that he believes Murkowski will have to shed more light on his negotiations.

"It's going to happen," Whitaker said. "It must be transparent. I helped write the Stranded Gas Act. It was very clear that we required a transparent comparison of options. And it is not being fulfilled."

Murkowski has said his administration is working toward a gas line contract that will benefit Alaskans. While he respects differences of opinion among his cabinet members, the governor said Thursday, differences become problems "when we're not working as a team."

■ PERMITTING: Operators say loss at executive level leaves void of experience.

By PAULA DOBBYN
Anchorage Daily News

Mass resignations of upper-level staff at the Alaska Department of Natural Resources this week have stunned the state's mining industry, with several executives saying Friday the upheaval will make it tougher to do business in the days ahead because of confusion over who's in charge.

DNR Commissioner Tom Irwin and six of his top deputies abruptly announced their departures on Thursday in a dispute with Gov. Frank Murkowski over a confidential natural gas pipeline contract the state is negotiating with oil companies. The deputies — several with decades of experience in DNR — said they could no longer work for the administration in light of Irwin losing his job. Irwin was replaced with Mike Menge, the governor's energy adviser.

"Unfortunately, there will be a very large void of experience that will be difficult to replace," said Karl Hanneman of Teck-Pogo Inc., developer of the Pogo gold mine near Delta Junction.

Mining executives and others who rely on the agency for permits, leases and other stamps of approval to conduct business say the turmoil at DNR will, at the very least, slow down bureaucratic channels.

"It's going to make it much more difficult," said Bob Stiles of PacRim Coal, a company that wants to develop the Beluga coal field west of Anchorage. "The net effect is that there is an awful lot of the heart of the organization that's gone."

Consistency at an agency is important in business, and not knowing who is going to take over key positions is cause for some angst, Stiles and Hanneman said.

"It's better the devil you know than the devil you don't know," said Stiles.

See Page E-4, DNR

"That's not meant to be pejorative to the folks who left but you end up developing a comfort level and trust in their judgment."

"You can't lose capable, intelligent leadership in that volume and not be in a leadership void for a while," said Tom Hawkins, chief operating officer of Bristol Bay Native Corp. and a former DNR division director.

"State agencies steer slowly through life but they need to be steered. If all of sudden capable hands are off the tiller, well ..." said Hawkins, his voice trailing off.

Bristol Bay worked closely with DNR on an oil and gas lease sale on the Alaska Peninsula held this week. The company's property is surrounded by state land and the firm frequently depends on DNR staff to issue permits and leases, Hawkins said.

More than just pushing papers, DNR top officials set policy and make long-range decisions, several executives said. Although they don't expect any changes in DNR's mining-friendly philosophy, it's unsettling to have a wholesale gutting of upper management.

"When there is major change in the senior management it creates challenges for those who want to work with the organization. It's not any different in this case," said Bruce Jenkins, an executive with Northern Dynasty Mines, which hopes to develop the giant Pebble gold and copper deposit near Iliamna.

Ed Fogels, head of DNR's large-mine permitting team, said most of the day-to-day tasks of overseeing mines and other projects will be unaffected by the resignations because lower-level staff members conduct many of those functions. And the new people who take over will share the goals of the Murkowski administration, unlike some transitions when new governors get elected, he said.

"It's not like a Republican-Democratic flip. The general philosophy will stay the same," Fogels said.

KEEP FOCUSED ON THE GOAL AND . . .

Move forward

THE HAND-WRINGING surrounding former Department of Natural Resources Commissioner Tom Irwin's quick departure from the Murkowski administration overshadowed the conclusions about the memo that triggered the flap.

Irwin, joined in his departure from the department by six of his senior staff, had suggested Gov. Frank Murkowski is giving up too much to the oil industry in ongoing talks aimed at getting a $20 billion natural gas pipeline built.

In an Oct. 20 e-mail to the attorney general, Irwin questioned whether the negotiations were legal. He even wondered if he and his staff would face personal liability for participating in the gas line negotiations with ConocoPhillips, BP and ExxonMobil.

He sent a copy of the e-mail to the governor, who released it to the public, saying Irwin's questions should be addressed. It should be noted that the questions tilled no new ground. The various points have been discussed for months by the negotiating team, lawmakers and members of the administration.

After the e-mail was sent, it was clear that Irwin was not likely to support the Murkowski administration's gas line goals, and the governor, like any other executive faced with balky team members, was forced to act.

IN THE FUROR that followed, not much was said about Attorney General David Marquez's nine-page conclusion concerning Irwin's e-mail. Marquez said in his opinion that Irwin's questions dealt with policy issues, not questions of law, and that the governor and the Legislature have broad powers under the Stranded Gas Development Act to resolve such questions.

He said the administration "has both broad authority under the Alaska Constitution to execute the laws to the fullest extent, to negotiate contracts on the state's behalf, and to propose legislation . . . ." And while Irwin and his staff worried that the state's gas actually is not "stranded" under the law, "knowledgeable experts, including Dr. (Pedro) van Meurs, still hold the opposite view . . . ," Marquez wrote.

Marquez also pointed out that the governor and the departments of Revenue and Natural Resources have broad authority to negotiate terms that would rely on future, proposed legislation that they have the authority to offer.

It truly is a shame, in our view, that this particular chapter in the gas line negotiations ended with the resignations of valuable members of the Murkowski team, but honest and passionate differences of opinion are to be expected as the intricate negotiations move forward.

Murkowski has selected Mike Menge, his senior energy adviser, to replace Irwin. A good choice.

Let's move forward.

Oil chief criticizes proposed gas deal

■ ROADBLOCKS: Exploration by small companies would be hampered, outgoing state official says.

By SEAN COCKERHAM
Anchorage Daily News

JUNEAU — Outgoing state oil chief Mark Myers charges that the governor's proposed natural gas pipeline deal could throw up roadblocks for the smaller, independent petroleum companies that the state needs to explore and develop its oil and gas.

"I believe the deal is bad for the state and bad for independent producers," Myers said in an interview this week.

The governor's office on Tuesday declined to respond to Myers' statements.

As director of the state Division of Oil and Gas, Mark Myers delivered an overview of oil and gas production to a House committee in Juneau in January 2001. Myers resigned last week, saying he believes the Murkowski administration is negotiating a bad gas line deal for the state.

GAS PIPELINE: Making project pay off requires exploration, Myers says of Oil and Gas for five years. He is one of six top officials in the Alaska Department of Natural Resources who resigned Thursday after Murkowski announced he was getting rid of the department's commissioner, Tom Irwin. Irwin had written a memo saying the governor was giving up too much in the gas pipeline negotiations with the major oil companies.

Myers said the smaller independents are needed because they will take the risks to explore for Alaska's oil and gas. The proposed pipeline to the Lower 48 won't work without exploration.

It's widely believed there are vast amounts of North Slope natural gas yet to be found. There are 35 trillion cubic feet of proven gas reserves, mostly at the Prudhoe Bay and Point Thomson fields controlled by the major oil companies. That's enough to keep a pipeline full for the first 15 years or so, Myers said.

But more must be discovered to make the estimated $20 billion project pay off over the long term.

Murkowski has been negotiating for two years with the major companies — Conoco Phillips, BP and Exxon Mobil — over a contract setting out tax, ownership and other terms should the companies someday build the pipeline. Conoco has accepted the deal, and the others are negotiating with the state. Part of the governor's offer is for the state to invest about $4 billion to own 20 percent of the line.

The details of the governor's offer are being kept confidential until the deals are struck. At that point, the contract will go out for public review. Then the Legislature will decide whether to approve it. Pedro Van Meurs, an international oil and gas consultant working for the governor's office, has said the deal offers world-class benefits to the state. Murkowski, in a written statement, said the deal will mean jobs, state revenue and increased exploration for oil and gas.

"Critics know the only way to stop the gas pipeline is to kill the contract before I can make it public," Murkowski wrote. "I will not let this happen, despite the political theatrics of its opponents."

One of the six principles that Murkowski has said are guiding his approach to the gas pipeline is that future explorers must have access to the line. Another is that the pipeline must be expandable so new discoveries can get to market.

Myers, the governor's outgoing oil and gas director, said he would not discuss what is in the deal while it remains confidential. But, in his resignation letter, he said the negotiations have implications for all aspects of the state's oil and gas interests.

"I cannot continue as director and watch silently as the state's interests are undermined by creating barriers for the new oil and gas participants that are so vital to the economic future of our state," Myers said.

This week, Myers — emphasizing that he was speaking in general terms and not about specifics of the governor's contract — said the independents need guaranteed access to the pipeline at a reasonable cost to justify investing in exploration. They also need an idea of when the gas pipeline might be built, he said. Myers also discussed the fact, which the governor made public, that revising oil taxes are part of the gas pipeline talks.

Myers questioned whether making oil taxes part of the deal could "create an unbalanced playing field" that favors companies included in the negotiations over those that are not.

Anadarko Petroleum is worried about that, said Mark Hanley, the company's public affairs manager for Alaska. Anadarko, one of the companies known as independents, holds oil and gas leases in the Brooks Range foothills of the North Slope.

Hanley said the big three companies negotiating with the state "do not understand our interests and nor do they care." Two of them, BP and Exxon, are not even actively involved in Alaska oil exploration anymore, Hanley said.

He agreed with Myers that access to the proposed gas pipeline is a huge issue for the independents. Hanley said he is worried, but his company is not at the table with the governor's negotiating team and he does not know what is in the deal.

"The problem of all this is that the devil is in the details and we haven't seen them," Hanley said.

Irwin memo raises serious questions

By HOLLIS FRENCH

When the history of the Alaska gas line gets written, the Irwin memo will need its own chapter. From Gov. Frank Murkowski's decision to release the memo to the dismissal of its author, Department of Natural Resources Commissioner Tom Irwin, along with the resignations of no less than six of DNR's top professionals, the memo has already had a profound effect on the gas line process. Here's why: In five incisive pages, Irwin has given observers reason to believe that during the time that this administration has been negotiating with the "producers" — Conoco Phillips, BP and Exxon Mobil — over the terms of a proposed gas line contract, the governor has been very busy giving away the farm.

Keep in mind that no one outside the group of negotiators has seen the exact terms of the proposal. But Irwin's memo, which should be required reading for all Alaskans, throws an indirect light on what has been a shadowy process. Here are some of the concerns outlined by former Commissioner Irwin.

The governor's proposed gas line deal will have provisions that violate the Stranded Gas Act itself, the very piece of legislation that authorized the governor and prospective gas suitors to create a contract in the first place. That's called getting off to a very bad start. Irwin states that our North Slope gas isn't really "stranded," as it cannot be shown that it's uneconomical to get it to market. No stranded gas, no Stranded Gas Act contract.

Even if this hurdle is cleared, Irwin's memo outlines other legal conflicts. The memo states that future legislative changes to the act will be necessary to make this coming contract with the producers legal. How can that be fair to the other two entities that have been competing to build a gas pipeline? (The Canadian company TransCanada is vying with the producers to build a gas line to Alberta, and the Alaska Gasline Port Authority, of course, is the sponsor of the popular all-Alaska gas line.)

Irwin's memo, which should be required reading for all Alaskans, throws an indirect light on what has been a shadowy process.

If TransCanada and AGPA have been operating under the quaint belief that the rules as they stand now are really the rules, while the Murkowski-producer deal envisions the benefit of future statutory changes, then there hasn't been a free and fair competition among the bidders. It's elementary that all the players should be working off the same rule book. Result: Expect numerous lawsuits.

Another major issue with the Murkowski-producer proposal is that it apparently cuts a deal on oil taxes. Putting that promise in the gas line contract is indefensible. The state's take from North Slope oil production is already a bargain for the oil industry. Without a complete overhaul of our oil tax code, Alaska roads and schools will continue to be second-rate for the next generation.

Worst of all, the governor's deal looks like it simply gives too much away to the producers. Irwin's memo says, "DNR is concerned that no modeling can show the need for the proposed fiscal support from the state to the producers." This jibes with the analysis done by Econ One, an independent consulting company whose senior economist recently testified that the proposed gas line is "a profitable venture, certainly very economically viable. It would not appear concessions would be necessary."

The producers' record profits also show that they don't need any financial help. In the third quarter — a 90-day period — the three producers made more than $20 billion in profit, enough for them to build the entire project out of pocket.

The importance of the gas line contract cannot be overstated. This generation of Alaskans will be judged 30 years from now based on our stewardship of the resources we all were given in common at statehood. Like every Alaskan, I badly want to see a new pipeline built and our gas shipped to market. But whether we in the future are a rich state or a poor one hangs in the balance. No legislator should vote to support a contract that doesn't get us every penny that we deserve.

Deception and secrecy are not the way Alaska should be governed

I believe that wherever there is secrecy, there is always deception. I applaud the "magnificent seven" and also governor candidate Sarah Palin, who led by refusing to accept secrecy and deception as a way to govern our great state of Alaska. What Alaska needs now is to trade in those who would apply secrecy as a tool to govern. We must restore faith and trust within our government.

I would like to see ex-commissioners Sarah Palin and Tom Irwin, and those of the "magnificent seven," replace those who are now governing. We must demand that honest, ethical public servants negotiate the future of Alaska, for the people of Alaska and for our children. I'll bet the terms would be different and our future brighter than the terms presently being considered. The people of Alaska need to be heard and informed on these important issues. Otherwise, we may as well be governed by a dictator. That's not what America is about. I've served my country, state and community. I strongly believe in, "Of the people, by the people, for the people." I do not believe in deception. Alaskans must do better than that.

Weigh gas line deal on its merits

By REP. RALPH SAMUELS

When it comes to all of the hoopla surrounding the gas pipeline, everything but the merits seems to be in the public discussion. But when the rubber hits the road, and a contract is actually delivered to the Legislature, the only thing that should matter is the merits.

In recent weeks, there has been a flurry of activity, with people on all sides of this very complex issue pontificating about one thing or another: "This deal is great for the state," or "the governor is giving away the farm." One thing is certain, and that is this: Not enough information is out for anyone in the public to decide whether or not they like the deal.

During the extensive public comment period, as well as during Legislative hearings, the policy choices that are being made will be discussed exhaustively. At the end of the day, the Legislature will make this decision based on the merits of the deal. Advertisements advocating one side or another will appear, political pressure will be brought to bear and Alaskans, as they are want to do, will very loudly make their opinions known, hopefully based not on preconceived notions or personalities, but on the merits of the proposal.

Alaskans should not make up their minds on this based on the current political arena, or one part of a proposal that is in the public, without looking at the context that it came out of.

The choices that will be made involve tens of billions of dollars and decades of gas flow. Neither the state nor any other entity involved can afford mistakes.

If the Legislature doesn't feel the governor made the best deal possible, the Legislature should vote no, and if the Legislature feels the governor got a good deal, it should vote yes, but it is far too early for anyone to know how they will vote.

Should Alaska be a part owner in the pipe? How about the gas? What happens if the price of gas is too low to pay the pipeline tariff? What are the odds of that happening? Where will we get the money to make up the shortfall? How will we sell our gas in the open market? What happens in the Canadian regulatory environment? What happens in the U.S. Congress? There will be hundreds of policy choices for Alaskans to consider, and there will be practical as well as political implications no matter which road we as a state choose to take.

There will be constitutional questions to answer in any event. We have a constitutional duty to develop our resources. We also have a constitutional prohibition against tying the hands of future Legislatures on tax issues. The very heart of developing our gas points out the conflict between these two constitutional provisions. If we do not provide some assurance that we will not change the tax rules once the project is built, will it get built? As a private citizen, would you invest your money if the government told you "Trust me?" Trust between the state and industry can pretty much be capsulated with the statement, "Both sides do what is best for their shareholders, in every instance."

There is good reason for both sides to be a bit wary of each other, particularly with the amount of money we are talking about.

I am deeply concerned that the rhetoric is already beginning to muddy the waters on this most important issue, before any of the facts have been released. If the Legislature doesn't feel the governor made the best deal possible, the Legislature should vote no, and if the Legislature feels the governor got a good deal, it should vote yes, but it is far too early for anyone to know how they will vote. Now is the time for all Alaskans to keep their powder dry and learn what the issues are. If politics and not merits win out, we all lose.

■ MENGE: Public opinions about how he got his job don't bother him.

The Associated Press

FAIRBANKS — The new director of the Department of Natural Resources says his focus is on getting the best gas line deal possible for Alaskans, and he isn't worried about any perception that he's a yes man for the Murkowski administration.

"I don't take it seriously because I'm very secure with what I know and my job," Mike Menge, 58, told the Fairbanks Daily News-Miner. "As time goes on, people will look at my actions and judge for themselves."

Menge

Republican Gov. Frank Murkowski promoted Menge to the job Oct. 27 after publicly removing Tom Irwin from the post after Irwin wrote a memo criticizing the governor for giving up too much in the gas line negotiations.

Six of Irwin's top deputies resigned in protest over his removal.

Menge assumes responsibility for overseeing negotiations for a proposed contract with BP and Exxon Mobil (Conoco Phillips has reached a preliminary understanding with the state) and the rewriting of oil taxes on the North Slope — projects worth billions of dollars to the state treasury.

"It was bad timing, bad politics and a bad decision to let Commissioner Irwin go," said Speaker of the House John Harris, R-Valdez.

Harris and other lawmakers said the dismissal of Irwin will draw greater scrutiny to decisions made by Menge and his department, and could make it more difficult for the governor to get a gas line contract through the Legislature.

"The administration has their work cut out for them," he said.

Fairbanks Republican Rep. Jay Ramras said some will wonder if Menge will simply rubber stamp the governor.

"He's going to have a difficult time because of the manner in which he came to the job," said Ramras, who as co-chairman of the House Committee on Natural Resources would sit on the review panel for Menge's confirmation hearings.

Menge has had a long association with Murkowski, serving seven years on the U.S. Senate Energy Committee, which Murkowski chaired when he was in the Senate. He helped draft federal legislation to provide incentives and loan guarantees to build a gas pipeline.

Menge joined Murkowski's administration as energy adviser in August 2003, quickly becoming a member of the governor's gas line negotiating team.

"He's a bright individual who has worked hard on the governor's vision of what the gas line should be," said Anchorage Democrat and gubernatorial candidate Rep. Ethan Berkowitz. "But there's definitely going to be a heightened level of scrutiny on him now."

> "He's a bright individual ... But there's definitely going to be a heightened level of scrutiny on him now."
> — Rep. Ethan Berkowitz

Menge said he has "a pretty good understanding of what it's going to take" to get a pipeline built.

"I'm extremely comfortable with the position the governor has taken and I look forward to defending it when it's finally released," he said.

Murkowski failed to understand Irwin's role as an adviser to him

Arrogant, aloof, obtuse, shameless, unrefined, untruthful, apathetic, brazen, haughty, incompetent, self-serving — all of these descriptors come to mind when I think of Gov. Frank Murkowski. In his recent fiasco concerning Commissioner Tom Irwin, et al., the Daily News published on Oct. 28 ("Irwin's memo cost him his job") a quote of the governor which, with the change of one word, describes the real expectations of this petty politician who has lived off the public dole his entire adult life. The quote is: "I personally value highly differing points of view.... yet I expect every member of my Cabinet to [agree] with me on major policy issues." Murkowski seemingly expects a "Yes, sir!" response as if he were a drill instructor at a Marine boot camp, while never trying to understand the benefits to him of honest disagreement and debate, and his need for integrity in his staff. He would never understand that part of Commissioner Irwin's job was to advise his boss on pertinent, sticky issues and discreetly try to keep his boss out of trouble. It appears that was exactly what Irwin was attempting to do in soliciting confidential legal advice from the attorney general.

How the Alaska voters could have elected this uncharismatic, unpersonable, egotistic pretender is arcane. Murkowski is truly a mystery in his time, which is very sad for all Alaskans and for our great state.

A realistic look at gas line timing

By DENNIS NOTTINGHAM

As the gas line contract hopefully draws near, there is talk of construction with an economic lift and many jobs immediately following the Legislature's ratification of the contract. Perhaps it is time to reflect on the realities of mega-projects as related to timelines.

Nottingham

For example, the current Knik Arm Crossing is small by gas line standards yet this last effort starting in 2004 will not result in a constructed project before 2010. The trans-Alaska oil pipeline started formulation about 1969, yet oil did not flow until 1975 under far fewer project restrictions and less oversight than in modern day.

The current gas line negotiations will only be a first step resulting in owner/operation agreements and legislative approval. This will be followed by effectively a three-pronged effort including technical, economics/finance and regulation/environmental permitting, each of which could delay or halt the project subject to findings. Scattered among these three basic fronts are a myriad of agreements, rights-of-way, government involvement, possibly land claims, taxes and on and on.

Large projects usually start by establishing project feasibility and ability to earn a profit. Project costs are determined by extensive engineering studies initially involving some field work such as geotechnical, hydrology, environmental and surveys.

Preliminary designs are then done and costed. Usually several alternatives are reviewed to produce the best and most economical result. Optimization work is then done to determine the lowest cost/best result alternative.

Parallel economic studies use technical cost input to compare revenue, operational costs, capital costs, financial costs, taxes, environmental costs, etc., for inclusion in a final feasibility report, which defines the pros and cons of the project with a firm recommendation.

Following feasibility approval, final engineering and design will commence. The point is, all this preconstruction work takes time, involves only a few hundred people in preparation for a big construction expenditure and employment initially for thousands of workers followed by operations employment for fewer than on construction.

"When can construction start?" is an oft-asked question that has no definite answer.

With no problems or lawsuits, construction might start in six to eight years, with construction taking three to four years.

Dennis Nottingham, P.E., is president of PND Engineers Inc., Anchorage.

■ REPUBLICANS: Trip is to learn taxation systems for production sharing contracts.

The Associated Press

FAIRBANKS — Four Republican state lawmakers traveled to London to attend a seminar on the fiscal details of international petroleum deals.

The sessions were designed to provide insight into complicated taxation systems and production-sharing contracts between governments and oil companies.

Aides to the traveling lawmakers said the seminar could help them evaluate details of a natural gas pipeline contract being negotiated by the Murkowski administration and major North Slope petroleum producers.

The four-day seminar began last Wednesday.

"The reason they're going is to become more educated on the methodology that we think the administration is looking at for taxing gas production," said House Speaker John Harris, R-Valdez.

The delegation included North Pole Sen. Gene Therriault, chairman of the Legislative Budget and Audit Committee; Anchorage Rep. Ralph Samuels, co-chairman of the House Resource Committee; Fairbanks Rep. Mike Kelly, a Finance Committee member; and Sitka Sen. Bert Stedman, who is on the Finance and Resource committees.

The $20,000 trip was paid for with public funds. Sara Gill, an aide to Samuels, said legislators are trying to arm themselves with knowledge to better evaluate the governor's proposal when it's finally delivered.

"The purpose of the trip is to gain a better understanding of how the contract compares to other contracts around the world," she said.

Pedro van Meurs, an international natural gas and oil consultant hired by the Murkowski administration, has characterized the fiscal details of the contract being pursued by the governor as the best deal the state can expect. Republican lawmakers, however, are not willing to accept that opinion without conducting their own evaluation, aides said.

"This is a trust-but-verify mission," said Joe Balash, Therriault's chief of staff.

"Pedro says this contract is great compared with everywhere else in the world," Gill said. "We're just trying to confirm if, in fact, the terms being negotiated are as good as Pedro has indicated."

Legislators are expecting Murkowski in the next five months to deliver a contract for a $20 billion natural gas pipeline project with the major oil producers, BP, Exxon Mobil and Conoco Phillips. Lawmakers will be tied up with other state business when the legislative session starts in January, making the London seminar the best opportunity to update lawmakers on the trend in production contracts between governments and the oil companies.

"We wanted to get these guys there and through the course sooner rather than later," Balash said.

Democrats said Friday that they were unaware of the trip, which was organized by Therriault's office in October.

Aides for the four Republicans said their bosses would share the information from the seminar with fellow legislators.

"If and when we get a contract to look at, it will be part of the information available to us to make a well-educated decision," Harris said.

The seminar was put on by Conference Connection Inc., a Singapore-based company.

Ben Stevens' fish tales need to stop

Article published on Friday, Nov 18th, 2005
By Stephen Taufen

[print] [close]
text size: [-] [+]

Republican Moderate Party leader, former legislator Ray Metcalfe has filed a new complaint with the Alaska Public Offices Commission to remove Senate president Ben Stevens from office and investigate wrongdoings.

Filed Nov. 17, the complaint is largely based upon media revelations after Stevens recently became the subject of lawsuits on Adak Fisheries. It repeats that Ben is staunchly unwilling to tell APOC and voters what he does to earn "consulting fees," and to produce work products: a likely cover-up, to end soon.

It alleges willful filings of knowingly improper public disclosures, and the presence of shell games to hide lobbying as consulting fees, as federal funds emerge recirculated through former fishery clients and their associations back to Stevens. It characterizes that 80 percent of $1.68 million received was calculatingly dispersed via Stevens and Assoc., owned by Ben and his wife — an apparent vehicle that hides funds from public scrutiny.

APOC is asked again to request the Office of Special Investigations to investigate buying of political influence and probable bribery. Metcalfe strongly makes the case about selling political influence by using testimony recently made in superior court by his Adak Fisheries partner, Kjetil Solberg, who testified Stevens was explicitly paid for a "political mission" — influence over the Alaska Board of Fish.

RMP's original APOC complaint centered on Stevens' consulting for the oil supply company VECO, and legislation it sought to use Permanent Funds for state expenses instead of paying larger dividends to Alaskans. The complaint re-alleges corrupt practices while in office, based on those known conflicts of interest.

But the second complaint appreciably centers on the growing story of Ben's amazingly deep conflicts involving the seafood industry.

No wonder. Given years of media reports on his role in fisheries to the contrary, it's unbelievable that Ben was "not talking" with his father.

U.S. Sen. Ted Stevens awarded the Aleut Corp. about $10 million annually in pollock, which was coincidently tied to Adak Fisheries — where Ben held the secret option to buy 25 percent of the firm and its real properties and share in that wealth.

Metcalfe clarifies that it's a legal requirement for candidates and office holders to specifically report interests in real property, and notes the 30-year lease at Adak. News reports also tied that "secret option" to Ted's federal pollock allocation, and indicated these interlocked deals make Ben's option worth upwards of $25 million in the long run.

That's an amazing coincidence for a son who was "not talking Adak" to his father — the only U.S. senator arranging for the pollock to flow to Adak — who in turn alleged he knew nothing about his son's deal of a lifetime. Especially when Ted's staff publicly said in the past that the two do talk about fisheries issues.

Ted's former aide, Trevor McCabe, now Ben's partner, has long schemed to rationalize Alaska's fisheries, by giving public resources away to select companies, including current clients.

In 2001, McCabe was already spearheading rationalization and processor quota shares in the Gulf of Alaska by e-mail. He's the former executive director of At-Sea Processors Association, who paid Ben as well.

Key to this complaint is Grimm v. Wagoner (2002 election) where the standard of required filings is "substantial compliance" to ensure that candidates and office holders reveal all material facts and give an "accurate representation" of their financial position to Alaskan voters.

Obviously, other legal issues apply, which the RMP is separately addressing in its appeal of the Division of Election's slapdash rejection of the petition to recall Stevens. The RMP already gathered signatures from 20 percent of voters in Ben's Anchorage district — twice the required level.

The Department of Law selectively applied state statutes and ignored legal precedents, and the RMP expects that rejection will be overturned in court. Grimm v. Wagoner guarantees it, along with a Supreme Court ruling last year regarding Sen. Scott Ogan, who rationally resigned under lesser circumstances.

A radical fishery bill sponsored by Ben Stevens, Senate Bill 113 awaits next session to institute "coordinated GOA rationalization," harmonizing with proposed federal guidelines being maneuvered by Ted Stevens. But it's clear to Alaskans watching from the decks of their fishing vessels that the Legislature should toss back any Stevens' fishery bill. SB 113 should not be moved from the House Fisheries subcommittee in the upcoming session.

FBI - Stevens-293

APOC now has a much-enriched complaint on its desk. And Alaska's voters will be watching alongside fleets to see if the facts finally trump Ben's fish tales.

The Diviner's Appendage

PETA ENDORSEMENT? . . . The cats were terrified, their owner in tears, the airport security guy noticeably unsympathetic. It all happened in Fairbanks as a bunch of legislators there for a House Majority caucus snaked through the metal detector to board a flight home.

The lady with two cats was ahead of the lawmakers, explaining to the TSA agent who wanted to check the carrier that her pets were skittish. Let me take them out, she pleaded, but he refused. An interim earwig reports the guy pulled out the first cat, then stuffed it back ungently. He grabbed the second cat, partially by the tail, the witness said. It screeched and leaped from his hands, racing around the barrier with another TSA agent in hot pursuit.

TSA told the owner she couldn't go past the barrier to get the cat, which ran from the pursuing agent until it slammed into a glass wall freaking out itself and its owner.

Rep. Lesil McGuire decided she'd seen enough. About half a baby pregnant, she pushed through the crowd, crossed the forbidden barrier, ran across the lobby to the cat, got down on her hands and knees, coaxed the terrified kitty into her arms and returned it to its owner as the crowd cheered.

OH DANNY BOY . . . It was announced at last week's Northeast Anchorage Community Council meeting that the venerable old Billik Inn bar has sold its liquor licenses to someone who plans to open an Irish pub downtown.

Is it true the someone is Dan Sullivan?

Dan, put in a piano bar. Pretty please.

ON THE MOVE . . . Again? The buffet crowd is abuzz with word that former Assembly woman Melinda Taylor has left that cushy new job at ACS and returned to her old job at IBEW. No word on why except speculation she wasn't comfortable with corporate life.

BUMPER SNICKER . . . Spotted around town: "Never thought I'd miss Nixon."

HO HO . . . Former Rep. Cheryll Heinze, who has opened an antique store downtown called Anna Kristine on 5th, is marketing her block as the No-No District. Meaning North of Nordstrom.

Cheryl told an earwig she saw the ads that run in movie houses pushing the block south of Nordie's as So-No. She's written to the Chamber of Commerce to make No-No official.

No-No is clearly better than So-No, she said. "So the war is on."

FLYING FACTOID . . . Dan Coffey hosted a fundraiser for Mark Begich. If City Hall politics get any weirder, Ear's lobe will explode.

STILL HAVING FUN . . . The Fun Guy is on the move again. The U.S. Department of Justice has announced the appointment of Eddie McNally as U.S. Attorney for the Southern District of Illinois. It's a four-month appointment, unless Bush nominates him for the permanent job.

When last heard from, our former district attorney, who is from Chicago, was a lawyer for the Homeland Security chief, then moved in May to a job in the criminal division of DOJ in D.C.

QUOTABLE QUIP . . . Governor Murkowski, commenting at a press conference on daughter Lisa: "She's too skinny. I'm trying to fatten her up with tapioca pudding."

Speaking of Lisa, she's definitely arrived. She was a clue in the NY Times crossword puzzle last week. First time. And they got her name right. A couple of weeks ago, a puzzle clue was "Yupik speakers." The answer was "Aleuts." Yikes! Will Shortz still hasn't answered Ear's complaining screed.

AND MANY MORE . . . Happy birthday to Uncle Ted, who turned 82 on Friday and surely it was the worst birthday week of his professional career. Ear got lots of items but most of them have already shown up in snarky stories from Seattle to Staten Island. Beside, the Luscious Lobe hates to pile on.

Also, the Omniscient Orifice notes it was Governor Frank who was officially declared the "worst person in the world" by Keith Olbermann on his MSNBC show Monday for telling the network he needed a plane with a toilet and, "Alaska can afford it."

SHHHH . . . It was a secret. Janice Shamberg's husband, Brock, surprised her yesterday with a "showing" of her art works at the prestigious Artique gallery downtown. Byron Birdsall agreed to lend Brock a wall during the opening of his fall show.

What a great idea. It's so hard to find a gift for someone who has everything except a majority on the Assembly.

BUMPER SNICKER 2 . . . Stuck to a back fender on a frontage road near Wasilla: "I Ain't No Senator's Son."

CLOSE ENCOUNTER . . . William Treadwell, 10, and his sister Natalie, 9, got to stand on the rope line after President Bush's speech here Monday. What did the prez say to them? "Hey, why aren't you kids in school?"

IT'S A BIRD, IT'S A PLANE, IT'S A CONVICT! ... Alaska State Troopers launched into fly-boy frenzy mode last week, posting a dozen pics on their Web site of the slick new luxury jet for transporting prisoners. And the governor.

The light beige interior isn't exactly spacious, but seats appear cushy and certainly nicer than us regular folk get in coach. Never mind there aren't neat little air-conditioning spouts mounted above them. Would be a moot point, darlings — handcuffs and all. And if it's Gov. Frank, well, Ear thinks he could find someone to fan him.

The thorough troopers posted photos of the jet's windshield, landing gear, interior — but Earwigs were most amused by the picture of the toilet, perhaps the craft's most appreciated and whispered-about amenity. It gave Ear a bit of a grimace though. Really, dears, it's just too much of a visual aid.

DID YOU SEND THE FONDUE? ... Ear announced a few weeks ago that Rep. Mary Kapsner, D-Bethel, was engaged to sweetie Joe Nelson of Yakutat. Now Ear's learned they've gone and tied the knot.

Blushing bride Mary reports they got hitched Oct. 29 on the back deck of a boat just out of Juneau. She dubbed it "a really private quiet ceremony" and said even Juneau skies cooperated, leaking not a drop of rain.

The ceremony was officiated by Tlingit elder Walter Sobeloff, who also performed the ceremony for the groom's parents. Joe works for the University of Alaska Southeast in Juneau, helping Alaska Natives become teachers.

EVERYONE BUT ELIJAH ... Earwigs say the big dinner-auction last Saturday at the Hilton to raise money for a Jewish center here was way more fun than that type of event usually is. Bill Sheffield, Mead Treadwell, Arliss Sturgulewski, John Cowdery, John Harris, Bill Tobin and Rick Mystrom were among those who joined the frozen chosen for a night of good food and auction items like new trucks, poker lessons from Perry Green, and trips hither and yon. Mystrom was the auctioneer. However, the image that's burned into Ear's lobe forever is Sarah Palin dancing the hora. Oy vey.

KUDOS ... Anchorage satellite engineer Mel Sather was inducted into the Alaska Broadcasters Association Hall of Fame last week, the first Alaska Native ever. Over the years, Sather has designed and plan ted radio and television satellites throughout the state, including KUHB in St. Paul, KBRW in Barrow, KRBD in Ketchikan and Channel 4/Fox in Anchorage. He also designed those wild satellites dishes seen on the intro to KTUU Channel 2 news every night.

CALL OF DUTY ... From the Petersberg Pilot police log: "October 29, 2005: A complainant called into the department and reported the library was closed and that this was very unusual for a Saturday. An officer responded and checked the building to make sure everything was OK. The sign said closed and nobody was inside the building."

Things were apparently just as hoppin' in Bethel where duty called firefighters to "a residence in Blueberry Subdivision to assist a woman close a window that had been blown open in high winds."

Next time the lid on the pickles sticks, Ear will dial Bethel firefighters.

AH, THE GREAT OUTDOORS ... Entries from Forest Service cabin logbooks recently published in a Kenai Peninsula newspaper:

"A McDonald's would be nice at the trailhead."

"The places where trails do not exist are not well marked."

"Need more signs to keep area pristine."

"Too many rocks in the mountains."

Really, darlings, did these campers expect a groomed highway-side rest stop? Ear saved the best for last:

"Instead of a permit system or regulations, the Forest Service needs to reduce worldwide population growth to limit the number of visitors to the wilderness."

Another predator control project, perhaps?

BEGICH PAYS UP ... Mayor Mark made good on a bet while at a Fairbanks chamber luncheon when he wrote a check to pay for Fairbanks Mayor Steve Thompson's lunch. Seems Begich bet Thompson last college hockey season that the Seawolves would bring home the Governor's Cup.

Well, darlings, he is an optimist.

Thompson wasn't at the luncheon to take the check. Too bad, since he might have cried foul at part two of Begich's gift: a Seawolves jersey with "UAF" printed on the back. Seems the men had agreed that the losing mayor would pay for lunch while wearing the rival's jersey. And, seems Begich got out of that part of the bet, eh?

No word on whether the wager's resurrected this season. So far the series is tied 1-1, with Games 3 and 4 set for December.

ALEUT SUCCESS STORY ... Local filmmakers at SprocketHeads debuted the much-lauded "Aleut Story" at the Bear Tooth this month. Staff say both shows sold out and they had to turn away some 200 would-be film-goers.

The movie tells the story of the Aleuts' forced internment during World War II, where an estimated 10 percent perished, and their subsequent fight for civil rights and better treatment. It was nominated for Best Documentary Feature at the American Indian Film Festival, so three Ear cheers for our local filmmakers behind the project and the Aleuts who spoke out for the flick.

It's out of Bear Tooth now, but might come back for the winter film festival. And it airs locally at 9 p.m. Tuesday on PBS. Listen for narrative bits by Emmy-winner Martin Sheen, Grammy-winner Mary Youngblood, B-list celeb and GCI guy John O' Hurley, and the late Gov. Jay Hammond.

Attacks hurt state, Stevens says

MONEY: Criticism from Congress, media reduce federal funds, senator says.

By LIZ RUSKIN
Anchorage Daily News

WASHINGTON — Sen. Ted Stevens said he and Alaska have been under constant assault these days, and the bombardment is hurting the state's flow of federal money.

Sen. Ted Stevens

"If I'm corrupt, which I don't think I am, then I'm not going to be listened to, all right? And that sort of thing reflects back on us."

"You were here. You see the attacks that are being made on us daily," he told Alaska reporters this week. "Look at the (Alaska) things that are being reduced in the appropriations bill. Every single appropriations bill has been reduced."

John Katz, the Alaska governor's representative in Washington, doesn't think the picture is so bleak for the state.

As he reviewed the annual spending bills being passed by Congress, he said, "there have been pleasant surprises and also some disappointments."

For the first time since 1997, Stevens was not chairman of the powerful Appropriations Committee this year. As chairman, he sent billions of dollars home for everything from Arctic research to zoo improvements. He remains a member of the committee, but term limits forced him to step down as chairman in January, so he hasn't had the tremendous control over the annual spending bills he used to enjoy.

Congress hasn't passed all of this year's bills yet, but so far it looks like Alaska will have to do without the dramatic funding increases Stevens has been sending home year after year. Some Alaska programs are being slashed, others trimmed, and some have been left alone.

Take rural water and sewer projects. Last year Alaska got $71 million for rural sanitation. This year it got $60 million for the same program.

The Denali Commission got $67 million last year to build teacher housing, electrical interties and village washeterias. This year, it got $50 million for that program, slightly more than three years ago.

A $10 million appropriation to the Alaska Fisheries Marketing Board, which Stevens created, has been reduced to $7 million.

On the other hand, Congress gave Alaska $15 million to combat alcoholism, the same as last year.

STEVENS: Media criticism, ridicule from bridges take a toll, senator says

ON THE Web

■ ALASKA PROJECTS: Go online for a list of projects in the spending bill.
www.adn.com

Numerous smaller Alaska appropriations were also continued at last year's level: $5 million to prepare additional timber sales, $2 million to the Child Advocacy Center, $1.5 million for wind energy, $1 million for a public safety data network.

Stevens' press office is still churning out long lists of Alaska spending — harbor projects, plant studies, marine research, park visitor centers, crime prevention — that he managed to add to the spending bills.

But speaking to Alaska reporters this week, Stevens didn't sound happy.

"I'm no longer (appropriations) chairman, and I'm not in that final meeting to protect those (programs) the way I used to be able to," Stevens said.

On top of that, he said, Alaska is getting hit because of the uproar over Alaska's bridges. Congress, facing ridicule from all quarters for funding the alleged "bridges to nowhere," has removed the controversial Knik and Gravina Island bridges from the national highway bill it passed four months ago, although Alaska gets to keep the $452 million allocated for that purpose. Stevens said the bridge episode, and several other events, have created a hostility for Alaska that hurts the state in the wallet.

He complained that he is getting "beaten up" in the Anchorage Daily News, in the national press and in Congress.

Stevens opposed an amendment banning the mistreatment of military detainees because, he said, it didn't make exceptions for covert agents. Now, he said, people are calling him the senator for torture. Democrats challenged him on his decision last week not to swear in a panel of oil company executives when they testified at a hearing he chaired. Daily News stories about him, he said, have hurt his credibility.

"If I'm corrupt, which I don't think I am, then I'm not going to be listened to, all right? And that sort of thing reflects back on us," he said.

He didn't specify which stories he was referring to, but the Daily News wrote in 2003 about his personal investments in Anchorage real estate. More recently, the paper has reported about a federal fish allocation he awarded to the Aleut Corp. that has potentially enriched his son, state Sen. Ben Stevens, R-Anchorage, a fisheries lobbyist and president of the Alaska Senate.

"It's the state that gets hurt in the long run as long as they continue to attack us," he said.

Shortly after speaking to Alaska reporters Wednesday afternoon, he took to the Senate floor and angrily complained that another senator, Dick Durbin, D-Ill., had insulted him and impugned his character. Durbin suggested in a speech that morning that Stevens didn't swear in the oil executives because he didn't want them held accountable if they lied. (Stevens maintains the swearing-in was unnecessary because, oath or no oath, it's a crime to lie to Congress.)

Keith Ashdown, spokesman for Taxpayers for Common Sense, said it's hard to say how Stevens and Alaska are doing in the spending bills this year because lawmakers aren't done with the defense bill. Stevens has the most say over that bill because he is chairman of the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee.

"I think we're seeing the writing on the wall where he doesn't have the influence that he once had," Ashdown said.

Alaska items have been reduced from the other bills "but his kingdom is now the defense bill."

Katz, the governor's lobbyist, said he didn't think Alaska is being singled out for spending cuts.

"Clearly, there is a post-Katrina congressional change in attitude," he said. "In general, Congress is scrutinizing earmarks much more carefully than previously."

After a moment's reflection, Stevens said that when it comes to the spending bills, Alaska is "still doing well, but we're not doing as well as we could've done."

Ted Stevens has forgotten basics of public service; Ben never learned

The mean-spirited, corrupt, special-interest politics being played out by the Ted and Ben Stevens Circus and Sideshow has gone too far. Statesmanship begins with a humble heart, strong character, empathy for people and an absolute commitment to public service, something Sen. Ted Stevens has forgotten and his son never knew. A servant's heart is what the people of Alaska need in its leadership so that the people can be lifted up and not pressed down by oppressive, arrogant men in high office. Honest politicians open their lives to complete transparency, volunteering whatever information is needed to maintain public confidence. Open the books and tell the truth gentlemen, and quit hiding behind the government you created. This is what Alaskans deserve.

My family has been in government in Alaska since the 1950s, with Dad serving in Congress with Ted Stevens in Washington, D.C., in the early 1970s. In recent years I have met hundreds of Alaskans who actually fear Ted and Ben Stevens as their senators and will not speak against them. Reminds me of how people feel about living in communist China. Power corrupts absolutely and in my opinion the Stevens boys are absolutely corrupted. I hope people remember the things that these two have done and not let money corrupt them as it has these purveyors of pork. It's time to stand for something bigger than self-interest. Secret government is always bad government.

I promise I'll spell Leman's name right

By LARRY EDFELT

JUNEAU – A couple weeks ago, I was on the phone with one of the editors of the Anchorage Daily News, a large metropolitan newspaper that has achieved considerable prominence among people who want to know what's playing at the movies. I explained to him how his paper could be vastly improved by making a few changes, such as turning over complete editorial control to me.

His jaws locked up tighter than a cold cockle at low tide, but I took his grunting as a response of interest.

I told him how much I appreciated his tireless efforts to make sure that all of the pages in this newspaper are numbered sequentially, and I promised to uphold the highest standards of integrity.

For example, if I were to report that Lt. Gov. Loren Leman and his staff declare they have developed new ballot initiative language that is unbiased and fair to all Alaskans, you could be sure that I spelled his name right.

To prove my proficiency at political punditry, I figured I should offer a few predictions, just to show the editors I have as much sense as anyone else who would trade the Brooklyn Bridge for the Ketchikan Airport Bridge, and a minor-league road to be named later.

For those of you about to head south to open up your townhouse in Palm Springs, here are my insights to save you the trouble of worrying about what you might miss while gone:

The state's new jet has been a luxurious change for the governor and convicts who no longer have to suffer turboprop lag. The jet has the flush toilet, which prompted its purchase and its prize-winning name: Incontinental Airline.

I predict the governor will have his jet painted with the image of a sheep. This will signify his pulling the wool over the Legislature and fleecing the citizens of Alaska.

Although the governor has been making enemies over the jet as fast as rabbits make rabbits, he still considers his new ride as money well thrown away.

Not to be outdone by Alaska Airlines, which painted one of its planes to resemble a king salmon to publicize the allure of throwing away public money, I predict the governor will have his jet painted with the image of a sheep. This will signify his pulling the wool over the Legislature and fleecing the citizens of Alaska.

Sen. Ralph Seekins, R-Fairbanks, actually suggested this past session that it should be a crime to file an ethics complaint against a legislator and then tell someone. But since Seekins is a politician who wants to be governor, you have to take everything he says with at least 10 pounds of salt. This guy is so conservative, his cell phone has a rotary dial.

Because Seekins believes the problem is not unethical legislators but publicity about unethical legislators, I predict he will file a bill to outlaw all reporting during legislative sessions, including committee meetings, caucuses, hallway huddles and lobbyist-sponsored getaways.

In an unusual show of bipartisanship, House Speaker John Harris, R-Valdez, will delegate more responsibility to the minority party this coming legislative session. The Democrats will now be responsible for everything that goes wrong.

Sen. Ben Stevens, R-Anchorage, will finally disclose what he does to earn thousands upon thousands of consulting dollars every year from Veco. In response, 400,000 Alaskans will file an ethics complaint, but Seekins will make sure no one knows.

Rep. Vic Kohring, R-Oregon, will file a bill amending state law so that spouses of legislators who choose to live out of state can qualify for a Permanent Fund dividend.

Sen. Fred Dyson, R-Eagle River, will go several tokes over the line by submitting a bill that allows school districts to issue free condoms, but only with the Ten Commandments printed on them.

And my last prediction is that Murkowski will discover that the bathroom in his jet is too small, and he'll put it up for sale. Buyers, however, do not flock to purchase it, because it's got that damn sheep painted on it.

Yea, the truth shall set ewe free.

Alaska line bid denied in opinion

■ FINANCES: Port Authority proposal lacks proof of funding, state says.

The Associated Press

FAIRBANKS — The all-Alaska natural gas pipeline proposal does not meet requirements of the Alaska Stranded Gas Development Act, according to the Department of Revenue.

The Alaska Gasline Port Authority has not provided proof that it possesses the finances to build the project and the ability to market the gas, Revenue officials said this week.

Whitaker

Chuck Logsdon, administration spokesman on gas line negotiations, said the port authority could correct those deficiencies or pursue a "pre-existing protocol" for developing a pipeline proposal.

The port authority is a consortium of the Fairbanks North Star Borough, the North Slope Borough and the City of Valdez. Its application is one of three competing to move the state's 35 trillion cubic feet of known natural gas reserves to market.

The authority wants to build a pipeline from the North Slope to Valdez, where natural gas would be liquefied and shipped south by tanker to West Coast or overseas markets.

Revenue officials accepted the port authority application in May with the stipulation that it provide proof that it possessed the finances to build the multibillion-dollar project and the ability to market the gas. The port authority had 90 days to meet the requirements.

When the group failed to meet the conditions, its application was disqualified, said Steve Porter, deputy revenue commissioner.

The disqualification was revealed in a paper released by the Institute of Social and Economic Research at the University of Alaska Anchorage.

"This in no way means the Department of Revenue isn't ready to work with the port authority to correct the deficiencies in their application," Logsdon said.

Fairbanks borough Mayor Jim Whitaker, the port authority chairman, has criticized the Murkowski administration for pursuing a contract with the major oil producers, BP, Exxon Mobil and Conoco Phillips, at the expense of other proposals.

The authority responded to the Revenue Department conditions in June, maintaining that it had met the intent of the act.

"We answered the questions and received no response back, and now to get this from a third party is unacceptable," Whitaker said.

Porter acknowledged the port authority had not been notified of its disqualification. He said the state would continue to hold discussions with the port authority with the aim of developing a project after the state first reached an agreement with the producers.

The governor has said the producers have an advantage over other proposals because they hold leases to the gas and have the resources to complete the $20 billion pipeline.

"We have been told that our negotiations with the state are on hold until they reach an agreement with the producers," Whitaker said. "We think that's the wrong approach, and we're going to continue to pursue a project that's in the best interest of the state."

"From our assessment of the Stranded Gas Act, we are a legal applicant," the port authority's Jomo Stewart said.

NOW IS NOT THE TIME FOR . . .

Public scrutiny

THOSE WHO INCESSANTLY search for things to carp about concerning the administration of Gov. Frank Murkowski now assert that more details of gas line negotiations under way with oil producers should be made public immediately.

The confidentiality surrounding the talks, they gravely claim, deprives Alaskans of information they need to know, information vital to the state's public policy interests. We do not recall them climbing on a soapbox and demanding such transparency in other government negotiations, for instance, talks with city or state labor unions at contract time. You would think they would at least be consistent.

The very nature of negotiations demands that all sides be able to speak candidly, posture, press their cases and be able to retreat without losing face. It would be difficult and time consuming if each petty detail, each public policy nuance, after being argued vigorously at the table, had to be defended in the newspaper and subject to critical debate on the sidelines.

Surely the detractors know all that. They also must know it is not as if a signed deal with ConocoPhillips, BP and ExxonMobil immediately locks the state into its provisions. There is a long, complicated process that will play out before the agreement will be worth the reams of paper it is written on.

ALASKA MUST go through a lengthy public hearing process, and then 60 lawmakers will examine the pact in excruciating detail and discuss its merits, perhaps in a special session sometime next year. There will be an inevitable trial by the news media and editorialists and writers of letters to the editor. Alaskans will have ample opportunity to weigh in, to understand the public policy ramifications and to accept or reject, through their representatives, the final agreement. Then there is the federal certification process. There will be few, if any, secrets when all that is completed.

In the end, the public will have a coherent, understandable product, not details released piecemeal that could mean something today, but nothing tomorrow, given the nature of the negotiation process. At some point, virtually every public policy question will be asked and answered, likely several times over during the process, and confidentiality will be a thing of the past.

If there were no open public process, no public input, it would be easy to understand a demand for details during the negotiations. In that circumstance, we might join those calling for more transparency, but given the ample opportunity for input before the Legislature acts, we are at a loss to understand why parceling out niggling details along the way would serve any worthwhile purpose.

Of course, it could just be a convenient smoke screen, a new way to carp, but all of this is too important for that kind of self-indulgence.

Much too important.

The Alaska Public Offices Commission fined Senate President Ben Stevens $150 Thursday for failing to disclose his chairmanship of a marketing board that has doled out millions of federal dollars to fishing interests.

But the commission rejected a citizen complaint that sought an investigation into the work Stevens performed for more than $1 million in fees from Alaska and Seattle businesses over the last five years. The commission said Stevens' description of the work as "consulting" was adequate, setting aside the complaint by Ray Metcalfe, a former legislator, who claimed at least some of the fees appeared to be thinly disguised graft.

And in a policy ruling, the commission said that politicians should generally report stock options as income or assets in their annual financial disclosures.

But it declined to fault Stevens, an Anchorage Republican, for his failure to report his 2002 option to purchase 25 percent of Adak Fisheries at a large discount. Acting commission chairwoman Sheila Gallagher said the rules weren't clear enough to hold Stevens accountable for past filings, but expected new guidelines or regulations will strip away doubt in the future.

Stevens claimed victory, though he walked out of the meeting without speaking to reporters. He is still facing one APOC complaint brought by Metcalfe too recently to make it onto the agenda of the commission, which meets quarterly. And

STEVENS: Senator downplays Adak Fisheries option

Metcalfe said he has delivered evidence of Stevens' conduct to state and federal law enforcement officials.

The Adak Fisheries option, consulting income and undisclosed membership on the Alaska Fisheries Marketing Board have been the subject of persistent news coverage in Alaska and, to a lesser extent, in national newspapers, partly because they closely track issues before his father, Ted Stevens, the senior Republican in the U.S. Senate.

The elder Stevens, for instance, created an exclusive, $10 million pollock allocation for the Aleut Corp. which Ben, as a director of an Aleut Corp. subsidiary, voted to assign to Adak Fisheries. Aleut Corp. officials said they had no idea Stevens had an option to buy into Adak Fisheries at the time. One Adak Fisheries owner estimated the net worth of the option was at least $1.5 million plus future fish-processing profits.

Ted Stevens also was responsible for federal legislation that created the marketing board in 2003 and for the millions of dollars that have since flowed through it. Metcalfe said some of the beneficiaries of Ben Stevens' allocations of that money were also paying him for consulting work. In a complaint to the commission, he described those consulting fees as "kickbacks."

After listening to the commission's assistant director, Christina Ellingson, acknowledge that the term "consulting" was vague but adequate, Metcalfe took the microphone and challenged the commission's reason for being.

"I just heard staff describe a loophole that makes APOC pointless," said Metcalfe, who served in the Legislature that created the agency in the 1970s and is now chairman of the independent Republican Moderate Party. "I don't think there's a person in this room that doesn't have a pretty good idea why Ben Stevens doesn't want to shed a little more light on what he did for those payments."

Metcalfe said that if an elected official is allowed to mask any payment as a consulting fee, "there's no limit to the amount of money they could pay them. The corruption that will happen — it's already happening."

Ellingson said allegations of criminal wrongdoing are outside the scope of the agency, which is primarily to collect reports on lobbying, campaign finance and financial disclosure.

Stevens, required to be sworn in like Metcalfe, only briefly addressed the issue.

"The information I provided on all my APOC filings from 2001 have all been correct," he said. "The allegations that Mr. Metcalfe and the Republican Moderate Party insinuate that I've been influence peddling are baseless and unsubstantiated. That's about the extent of my comments."

The option first surfaced this summer during a court battle between the owners of Adak Fisheries. Joined in the case over the option, Stevens asserted in pretrial motions that he had a legal right to 25 percent of the company.

But at the APOC meeting, Stevens downplayed the value of the option. Under the law, income or assets in excess of $5,000 must be reported. The document granting the option in 2002 said it was partially given as payment for services that Stevens had provided and was expected to provide the company in the future.

During a break at the meeting, Stevens told a reporter that the option was worth less than $5,000. Asked how much he was paying his attorneys to defend his right to that option, Stevens said, "That's none of your damn business."

Commissioner John Dapcevich, a Democratic appointee from Juneau, said Stevens should have disclosed the option.

"The public has the right to know that this, being one of our legislators, has an interest in a particular business," Dapcevich said. "They have a right to know so they can see that they're not going to be voting to benefit this business."

Stevens faced a maximum fine of $2,120 for failing to disclose his membership on the Alaska Fisheries Marketing Board to the APOC. Following its usual guidelines, the staff reduced the fine to $150, an amount affirmed by the commission.

Alaska GOP expects leaders' missteps won't hurt

FINES: Voters unlikely to punish the party at the polls, Republicans say.

JUNEAU -- The Reagan legacy of the Teflon Republican is alive and well in Alaska.

Both the House speaker and Senate president were fined this week by the state commission that oversees financial activities of elected officials. It's the latest in a string of Alaska GOP scandals, misdeeds and missteps that stretches back to 2003, when party chairman Randy Ruedrich broke ethics laws by using his state Oil & Gas Conservation Commission office to conduct party business.

But while next year is an election year, Republican leaders and political watchers alike say not to expect a backlash at the polls.

"I think if we ask folks a couple of weeks from now, 90 percent of them aren't even going to remember it happened," Ruedrich said Friday in an interview with The Associated Press.

Ruedrich was speaking of the penalties levied against House Speaker John Harris, R-Valdez, and Senate President Ben Stevens, R-Anchorage, by the Alaska Public Offices Commission for breaking state laws regulating campaign contributions and financial disclosures.

Democratic pollster Ivan Moore said Ruedrich's point was well taken.

"I hate to say I agree with Randy Ruedrich, but would I say this APOC decision has caused a cumulative effect on top of the damage done by the Randy Ruedrich affair and the Gregg Renkes affair and the jet affair? No. It's probably small potatoes in comparison," he said.
