Enclosure(s)

FBI FOIPA Addendum

As referenced in our letter responding to your Freedom of Information/Privacy Acts (FOIPA) request, the FBI FOIPA Addendum includes information applicable to your request. Part 1 of the Addendum includes standard responses that apply to all requests. Part 2 includes additional standard responses that apply to all requests for records on individuals. Part 3 includes general information about FBI records. For questions regarding Parts 1, 2, or 3, visit the www.fbi.gov/foia website under "Contact Us." Previously mentioned appeal and dispute resolution services are also available at the web address.

Part 1: The standard responses below apply to all requests:

(i) 5 U.S.C. § 552(c). Congress excluded three categories of law enforcement and national security records from the requirements of the FOIA [5 U.S.C. § 552(c) (2006 & Supp. IV (2010)]. FBI responses are limited to those records subject to the requirements of the FOIA. Additional information about the FBI and the FOIPA can be found on the www.fbi.gov/foia website.

(ii) National Security/Intelligence Records. The FBI can neither confirm nor deny the existence of national security and foreign intelligence records pursuant to FOIA exemptions (b)(1), (b)(3), and PA exemption (j)(2) as applicable to requests for records about individuals [5 U.S.C. §§ 552/552a (b)(1), (b)(3), and (j)(2); 50 U.S.C § 3024(i)(1)]. The mere acknowledgment of the existence or nonexistence of such records is itself a classified fact protected by FOIA exemption (b)(1) and/or would reveal intelligence sources, methods, or activities protected by exemption (b)(3) [50 USC § 3024(i)(1)]. This is a standard response and should not be read to indicate that national security or foreign intelligence records do or do not exist.

Part 2: The standard responses below apply to all requests for records on individuals:

(i) Requests for Records about any Individual—Watch Lists. The FBI can neither confirm nor deny the existence of any individual's name on a watch list pursuant to FOIA exemption (b)(7)(E) and PA exemption (j)(2) [5 U.S.C. §§ 552/552a (b)(7)(E), (j)(2)]. This is a standard response and should not be read to indicate that watch list records do or do not exist.

(ii) Requests for Records for Incarcerated Individuals. The FBI can neither confirm nor deny the existence of records which could reasonably be expected to endanger the life or physical safety of any incarcerated individual pursuant to FOIA exemptions (b)(7)(E), (b)(7)(F), and PA exemption (j)(2) [5 U.S.C. §§ 552/552a (b)(7)(E), (b)(7)(F), and (j)(2)]. This is a standard response and should not be read to indicate that such records do or do not exist.

Part 3: General Information:

(i) Record Searches. The Record/Information Dissemination Section (RIDS) searches for reasonably described records by searching those systems or locations where responsive records would reasonably be found. Most requests are satisfied by searching the Central Records System (CRS), an extensive system of records consisting of applicant, investigative, intelligence, personnel, administrative, and general files compiled and maintained by the FBI in the course of fulfilling its dual law enforcement and intelligence mission as well as the performance of agency administrative and personnel functions. The CRS spans the entire FBI organization and encompasses the records of FBI Headquarters (FBIHQ), FBI Field Offices, and FBI Legal Attaché Offices (Legats) worldwide. A CRS search includes Electronic Surveillance (ELSUR) records.

(ii) FBI Records. Founded in 1908, the FBI carries out a dual law enforcement and national security mission. As part of this dual mission, the FBI creates and maintains records on various subjects; however, the FBI does not maintain records on every person, subject, or entity.

(iii) Requests for Criminal History Records or Rap Sheets. The Criminal Justice Information Services (CJIS) Division provides Identity History Summary Checks – often referred to as a criminal history record or rap sheets. These criminal history records are not the same as material in an investigative "FBI file." An Identity History Summary Check is a listing of information taken from fingerprint cards and documents submitted to the FBI in connection with arrests, federal employment, naturalization, or military service. For a fee, individuals can request a copy of their Identity History Summary Check. Forms and directions can be accessed at www.fbi.gov/about-us/cjis/identity-history-summary-checks. Additionally, requests can be submitted electronically at www.edo.cjis.gov. For additional information, please contact CJIS directly at (304) 625-5590.

(iv) The National Name Check Program (NNCP). The mission of NNCP is to analyze and report information in response to name check requests received from federal agencies, for the purpose of protecting the United States from foreign and domestic threats to national security. Please be advised that this is a service provided to other federal agencies. Private citizens cannot request a name check.

1. INTRODUCTORY COMMENTS BY SENATOR STEVENS

a. "In this crusade, let us not forget who we are. Drug abuse is a repudiation of everything America is. The destructiveness and human wreckage mock our heritage." President Ronald Reagan -- September 14, 1986

b. The consequences of illegal drug use and alcohol abuse have reached epidemic proportions.

-- Drug and alcohol abuse are major public health problems and pose a threat at every level of American society. They are two of the leading causes of preventable disease, disability and death.

-- According to the National Association of State and Alcohol and Drug Abuse Directors, drug abuse costs American society $116 billion in lost productivity a year while alcohol results in a loss of nearly $60 billion in productivity.

c. The scourge of drug and alcohol addiction knows no age or socioeconomic barriers. According to research, children are particularly susceptible.

-- Nearly 23 million Americans of all ages, colors, and nationalities are regular users of illegal drugs.

-- A recent survey of 4th graders conducted by Weekly Reader found that 34% of those surveyed reported peer pressure to try wine coolers, 41% to smoke, and 24% to use crack or cocaine.

3. ALCOHOLISM

a. CONSUMPTION -- Alaskans consume more alcohol than almost any other group both nationally and internationally.

-- Among the world's consumers of hard liquor, Alaska's per capita consumption of 1.08 gallons for every man, woman, and child would rank 4th if we were a country. Only the communist nations of Hungary, East Germany, and Poland rank higher. The United States as a whole ranks 10th, consuming an average of .72 gallons per person.

-- Alaskans rank 3rd nationwide in the consumption of alcohol, behind only Nevada, where casinos give out free drinks to gamblers, and New Hampshire, which does a brisk business in selling its cheaper alcohol to residents of surrounding states.

-- Alaskans consume 3.78 gallons of hard liquor, wine, and beer a year compared with a national average of only 2.62 gallons per person.

b. EFFECTS ON ALASKA NATIVES -- Alaska's Native community has been devastated by the effects of alcohol.

-- The Native suicide rate is 10 times the national average. Many of the suicides can be traced to alcohol.

-- The rate of fetal alcohol syndrome among Alaska Natives is 2.5 times the national average and more than twice the rate among other Indian populations.

-- While Natives comprise only 16% of the Alaskan population, they account for 34% of prison inmates. The majority of the crimes for which they are incarcerated are committed while under the influence of alcohol and other drugs.

-- The problem is not limited to the villages. While only 5% of Anchorage's population is Native, they account for 27% of all persons being treated for alcohol and drug abuse in the community.

-- Anchorage's small Native population accounts for 40% of all fatal accidents in Anchorage. The majority of those accidents are alcohol-related.

-- Of the 12,000 Alaska Natives who live in Anchorage, about 400 are chronic alcoholics.

c. COMMENTS FROM PARTICIPANTS

4. DRUG ABUSE

a. MARIJUANA -- Marijuana continues to be the drug of choice for both young people and mainstream adults in Alaska.

-- Most of the marijuana being seized by DEA in Alaska is "home-grown" in indoor hydroponic gardens, although it is also imported from Hawaii and California.

-- In Southeastern Alaska, marijuana is cultivated in the Tongass National Forest.

-- According to the Department of Justice, Alaska's liberal marijuana law jeopardizes our ability to continue to receive federal funding for treatment and education programs.

b. COCAINE -- According to the Report on Drug Control published by the Bureau of Justice Statistics, cocaine availability has steadily been on the rise in Alaska.

-- 77% of Alaska's law enforcement leaders report that cocaine has replaced marijuana as the drug of choice in the last 5 years.

-- Cocaine related admissions to treatment in Alaska tripled between 1983 and 1986.

-- The majority of Alaska high school principals surveyed feel that marijuana is the most abused drug among students, followed by cocaine and LSD, but that cocaine is rapidly becoming the drug of choice.

c. CRACK -- Gangs from the lower 48 have begun to import crack into Alaska, but it is not generally available according to the DEA. The Report on Drug Control indicates that only small amounts of crack were sold in Alaska in mid-1987, but recent indicators show that use and sales are increasing.

d. HEROIN -- Black tar, a potent form of heroin from Mexico, has begun to find its way to Alaska.

e. HALLUCINOGENS -- Alaska reports a steady increase in the availability and use of LSD, and recently methamphetamine has turned up in quantity.

f. EFFECTS ON STUDENTS -- A survey of Alaska principals showed that 60% of the students dropping out of school and an estimated 50% of the students failing have drug abuse problems.

g. CRIME -- There is a strong link between crime and drug abuse, but the majority of drug violations in Alaska are not enforced.

-- An Anchorage Police Department study showed that 80% of their 1986 street crime was attributed directly to drug trafficking, use, and abuse.

-- Law enforcement leaders in Alaska estimate that less than 5% of the drug violations in their communities come to their attention.

h. ENFORCEMENT -- More drugs have been seized in Alaska so far in 1988 than were seized in all of 1987.

-- Marijuana seizures more than doubled during the last year (in part because TS got an additional DEA agent in Alaska). 6 kilos of marijuana were confiscated by DEA and the Alaska State Troopers in 1987. So far this year, 11 kilos have been seized along with 1,100 live plants which, if harvested, would have yielded at least 1,100 pounds of marijuana.

-- Cocaine seizures are also up. In 1987 19 kilos of cocaine were confiscated in Alaska. So far this year 20 kilos have been discovered.

-- Arrests for drug trafficking are also on the rise in Alaska. In 1987 43 persons were arrested for drug offenses. So far this year 51 persons have been taken into custody.

-- Alaska began a coordinated effort to combat drug trafficking and abuse in 1983. Improvements made since that time include the formation of drug metro teams, creation of airport interdiction units in Anchorage and Fairbanks and the institution of a computerized statewide narcotics intelligence unit. Most of this enforcement activity has been directed at the lower levels of trafficking.

-- Alaska will use federal funds provided by the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1986 to implement a Major Drug Offender Enforcement Unit to apprehend and prosecute major drug traffickers. The goals of the unit are to investigate, prosecute and convict major drug traffickers; locate, seize, and seek forfeitures of illegally gained assets and assets used in criminal enterprises; encourage multi-jurisdictional involvement in the national effort; and provide maximum coordination between all Federal, state, and local drug enforcement agencies and prosecution.

i. COMMENTS FROM PARTICIPANTS

5. WHAT WE CAN DO

a. PROGRESS -- Statistics show are we are beginning -- just beginning -- to turn the tide of illegal drug use.

-- Use of marijuana by high school seniors is at its lowest level in 10 years. In 1978, one senior in nine smoked marijuana on a daily basis. In 1987 only one senior in 30 used marijuana on a regular basis.

-- In 1987, for the first time, there was a significant drop in cocaine use.

-- Illicit use of stimulants and sedatives continues to decline among high school seniors, college students, and young adults in general.

-- Although progress has been made, we still have a long way to go.

b. DRUG ABUSE RESISTANCE EDUCATION (DARE)

-- The DARE program is a partnership between the schools and law enforcement. Trained officers are sent into 5th and 6th grade classrooms every week for 17 weeks to teach students HOW to refuse drugs and alcohol. The LA PD provides training at a cost of $50 per officer.

-- Separate components have been developed to introduce K through 4th graders to the program and to follow-up in junior and senior high school.

-- The program follows a carefully structured curriculum which focuses on personal safety, drug use and misuse, consequences of behavior, resisting peer pressure, building self-esteem, assertiveness training, managing stress without drugs, media images of drug use, role models, and support systems. The curriculum is available free of charge.

-- Studies have shown that the DARE curriculum has significantly reduced substance abuse, sharply decreased school vandalism, improved student study habits, reduced tensions between ethnic groups, and instilled respect for with police and teachers in the students.

-- We have DARE Program Briefs and DARE Implementation Manuals on display.

-- You cosponsored National DARE Day which will occur in September.

c. DRUG FREE AMERICA WEEK

-- You and Congressman Young sponsored legislation designating the last week in October as Drug Free America Week. The resolution passed the Senate and is pending in the House.

-- HHS has created a special office to run the Campaign for a Drug Free America. Gena Feind from Ketchikan and formerly of your staff helps coordinate the office and is willing to provide technical support to Alaskans who want to organize events during the week.

-- [redacted] can explain the program. We've also got materials on display explaining how to develop events to promote drug-free schools, workplaces, and communities, and how to raise funds to finance those events.

b6

d. McGRUFF, THE CRIME DOG

-- The National Crime Prevention Council has developed anti-drug materials for kids using McGruff the Crime Dog as its spokesman. 97% of all kids say they try to do what McGruff tells them.

-- We've got samples of the McGruff materials on display including posters, brochures for parents and educators, the McGruff video, the Just Say No cassette, a drug abuse computer game for kids, camera-ready educational materials for teachers, and Public Service Announcements that the Alaska media can use.

e. ANTI-DRUG ABUSE ACT OF 1988

-- The Senate is developing a drug bill which will be introduced shortly after we return from the recess and will be debated sometime in September.

-- A summary of the latest complete draft is available for each participant.

-- Actual bill language on the section on state and local law enforcement is available for the law enforcement officers and Mike Spaan.

-- We can ask each participant to review the drafts and provide us with suggestions for improvement by September 2nd. In the meantime, they can offer their ideas on how the federal government can assist them more effectively in their work.

Dear Senator Stevens:

Just a note to thank you for thinking of us and sending us copies of Public Law 100-459 regarding Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act of 1989, and related Senate and House reports.

I would also like to take this opportunity to thank you for all of the other support you have given the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) in the recent past, i.e., Anti-Drug legislation and the conversion of certain FBI employees to the Senior Executive Service (SES).

You may also be interested to know that since your meeting at Alyeska regarding the Anti-Drug movement in Alaska, we have expanded our effort, from both a deterrence and enforcement standpoint, and hope to do more. We have found a great deal of enthusiasm throughout the State for this effort.

Your meeting was an important first step in this regard, and becoming acquainted with other important members of the community involved in the campaign toward a Drug-Free America was equally important.

I remain in these and all other matters of mutual interest,

For some reason I did not directly receive your letter dated April 14, but instead received a copy via FBI Headquarters. As a result, I furnished them with information in reference to [redacted] so that they would be able to furnish you with an appropriate response. Therefore, I am not addressing your request herein in order to avoid duplication. But, I did wish to respond to your letter dated May 25, which I did receive directly, by thanking you for attempting to keep me informed with regard to potential citizen complaints in reference to the conduct of our activities, which we always wish to address promptly. Let me assure you that [redacted] and his activities are well known to this division, and unfortunately, his letter writing will probably continue. Unfortunate I say because he can be abusive, vulgar, and always without foundation.

It's always nice hearing from you, and good luck with the many problems facing our country and state today.

Dear Charles:

As we all know, drug abuse is one of the most critical problems facing our nation today. Congress enacted a comprehensive drug bill last year, and a special post to conduct the war against drugs is now operating at the cabinet level. So, once again this year I am planning a meeting with Alaskan experts in the fields of law enforcement, drug treatment and prevention to discuss these new developments. Our similar meeting in Girdwood last year was very helpful and I look forward to this opportunity to continue our exchange.

We've reserved the conference room at Alyeska Lodge from 9:00-1:00 pm Monday, August 28th, to meet with you and others in these fields. There will be a no-host lunch served during the meeting at about 12:00 noon.

If you are able to join us on August 28th, please contact my Anchorage office at 271-5915.

I look forward to seeing you there.

Dear Mr. Fanton:

One of the concerns raised during our meeting in Girdwood last August was the suspicion that large amounts of drugs going into Alaska's rural areas are shipped through the U.S. mail.

During recent consideration of a legislative package to implement the President's National Drug Control Strategy, I offered an amendment to increase the penalties for drug mail shipments and secure greater cooperation in drug mail surveillance by the Post Office. It was adopted by the Senate.

Currently, Federal law authorizes a penalty of up to 4 years and $30,000 in fines for shipping drugs through the mail. The amendment increases the possible sentence to ten years and $60,000 for first offenders. Repeat offenders can expect as much as fifteen years in jail and $90,000 in fines.

Furthermore, the amendment directs the Post Office to cooperate with Federal, State and local law enforcement officials in detecting drugs that are being shipped through the mail. Such cooperation includes increased use of narcotics or "sniffer" dogs in postal facilities.

Senate

AMENDMENT NO. 927

(Purpose: To make clear the penalties for and to facilitate the detection of the use of the mails to send controlled substances)

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I have an amendment I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending business is the Biden amendment.

Mr. BIDEN. I ask unanimous consent that the Biden amendment be set aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. I thank the distinguished manager of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

Assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Alaska [Mr. STEVENS,] proposes an amendment numbered 927.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill insert the following new section:

SEC. . USE OF THE MAILS TO SEND CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES.

(a) AMENDMENT OF TITLE 18, UNITED STATES CODE.—Section 1716 of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(A) in subsection (a) by inserting "all controlled substances (as that term is defined in section 102(6) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802(6))," immediately following "reptiles,"; and

(B) in the second undesignated paragraph of subsection (h) by striking the period at the end thereof and inserting ", or if the nonmailable matter was a controlled substance (as that term is defined in section 102(6) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802(6)), shall be fined not more than $60,000 or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both, or in the case of a second or subsequent violation in which the nonmailable matter was a controlled substance, shall be fined not more than $90,000 or imprisoned not more than 15 years, or both.".

(b) AMENDMENT OF CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES ACT.—Section 403(c) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 843(c)) is amended—

(1) by striking "$30,000, or both" and inserting "$30,000, or both, or if the communication facility used was the mail, a term of imprisonment of not more than 10 years, a fine of not more than $60,000, or both"; and

(2) by striking "$60,000, or both" and inserting "$60,000, or both, or if the communication facility used was the mail, a term of imprisonment of not more than 15 years, a fine of not more than $90,000, or both".

(c) INCREASED COOPERATION WITH FEDERAL, STATE, AND LOCAL AUTHORITIES.—The United States Postal Service shall assist to the fullest extent possible Federal, State, and local authorities in the implementation of this Act and any other Act dealing with controlled substances.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with others in these efforts to combat illegal drugs. The amendment I offer attacks one important aspect of the drug problem, that is, the use of our public mail system in the drug trade. This amendment would substantially increase the criminal penalties for distributing controlled substances through the mail. It would also direct the Post Office to cooperate to the fullest extent possible with drug interdictions, especially the Office of National Drug Control Policy to reduce the use of the mail system in this drug trade.

On a recent trip home, I spoke with over 30 officials who have responsibilities for drug interdiction, treatment, and prevention programs in Alaska. They are very worried. The drug problem in Alaska continues to fester and is spreading throughout our rural areas.

One way to get drugs into the rural areas of Alaska and throughout the country is through the use of mail. My State is one-fifth the size of the total land area of the United States. Fully 75 percent of all the community post offices in Alaska can be reached only by air or water. In these areas, the primary means of shipping goods is through the U.S. parcel post. In the absence of rural transportation, increased drug use has meant increased drug shipments through the mail.

Currently, under one statute, shipping drugs through the mail can be punished by no more than 1 year in jail and a $1,000 fine. Under another law, the punishment is no more than 4 years in jail and a $3,000 fine. My amendment would increase the penalties to no more then 10 years in jail and $60,000 in fines. For a second offense, the new penalty would be up to 15 years and $90,000 in fines.

In Alaska, private parcel carriers now permit law enforcement agencies to use narcotics or "sniffer" dogs to detect drug shipments. President Bush's national drug control strategy pledges administration efforts to "expand the use of sniffer dogs" at U.S. Ports of Entry. The techniques is an accurate, efficient way to search for drugs.

The amendment would direct the U.S. Postal Service to cooperate completely with law enforcement authorities to stop drug mail shipments. This would include the use of narcotics dogs.

Constitutionally, this use of dog sniffing detection is sound. Since dogs respond or alert to odors that are already in the public domain, no intrusion into sealed packages occurs. Thus, probable cause is not needed to permit dog sniffing.

If a dog reacts to drug odors in a package, probable cause may be established to justify a search warrant for a more complete inspection. This amendment would not negate the need for search warrants.

The amendment would also ensure additional tracking of suspicious mailings—also constitutionally permissible. Such tracking consists of looking at the origin and destination written on the outside of parcels for patterns of suspicious shipments.

It is the responsibility of the Post Office to increase the interception of illegal drug mail shipments and reduce the use of the mail for other drug trade activiites. This amendment will ensure the Post Office works with all law enforcement authorities, starting with the Office of National Drug Control Policy right down to local law enforcement agencies, to stop illegal drug mail.

Mr. President, nothing in this amendment would infringe upon the traditional privacy rights afforded Americans and their sealed mail under Federal statutes and the Constitution. The amendment would, however, ensure a more certain justice and a heavier price for those that use the national mail system to furhter the drug trade.

I urge its adoption.

My name is [redacted] I was talking to [redacted] and they gave me your name and number and said you might be able to help me. On November 16th 1995 I went to the Philippines where I was married to [redacted] her name is now [redacted] After returning from the Philippines I immediately sent the paperwork (temp / permanent immigration as a spouse of a U.S. citizen) to the Immigrations office so I could start the process of bringing my wife home.

At the present time my paperwork has all been approved and it is in Manila awaiting processing, but now we find out that we need to send finger prints to the FBI in Washington DC, which we did immediately. The finger prints were sent to the FBI on 4/22/96. We now find out that it will take 3 to 4 months for the FBI to process the paperwork. I would appreciate it if you could help us expedite the paperwork with the FBI. There number is (202) 324-3000 I-Dent, case # [redacted] I'm sure you have a busy schedule, but if you could find time to help us expedite the paperwork it would be greatly appreciated.

Thank you!!

Dear Senator Stevens:

I am in receipt of your letter and accompanying documentation of May 17, 1996, wherein [redacted] requested assistance in expediting his new wife's citizenship and naturalization fingerprint examination process through the FBI. b6 b7C

[redacted] situation is one in which the FBI has limited ability to currently expedite. The FBI fingerprinting analysis and processing will take from 60 to 90 days. The FBI Identification Division is currently being relocated to West Virginia from Washington D.C. They are making every effort to handle these requests as expeditiously as possible. The further expediting of any INS naturalization or citizenship procedures is beyond the powers and scope of the FBI to address.

If I can be of further assistance to you please don't hesitate to contact me at anytime.

I am in receipt of your letter and accompanying documentation of June 28, 1996, wherein [redacted] requested assistance in obtaining information about, and the expediting of, an ongoing investigation into [redacted] death. To/ Sen. Ted Stevens

In response to the letter from Major [redacted] about the incident at the [redacted] This response is not a good one ,in fact I think it is a bunch of SHIT!!!

Maybe this type of thing goes on so often that it is not very dramatic to the officers involved but it sure as HELL is when you happen to be on the receiving end of one of these so called lawful entries!!

b6

Maybe you should contact the [redacted] and ask them just how dramatic it was for them. I am sure you will hear a much different story!!

At this time the [redacted] have the right to know charges, case number and basically what is going on. They still have no idea or are being told what charges are being made against them.

The so called legal officials in this matter have had more then enough time to decide what,if anything they are going to do. I think it is time to "Shit or get off the Pot." It is going on ten months that is way to long!!

And would you please explain to me how this whole thing can be ordered sealed unless someone is trying to hide a major screw up on someones part???

As I said in my previous letter the [redacted] should at the very least be told what is going on, and as of this day no one will even talk to them!!!

WHAT THE HELL KIND OF SYSTEM IS THIS ??????

I am going to send a letter to all the local newspapers this week and see what the public thinks and if they would like this to happen to them!!!

b6
b7C

Sincerely

[redacted]

Where was the crime?

I am writing about an incident that happened on Dec. 28, 1995.

The Alaska State Troopers and the statewide drug enforcement unit invaded a friend's home with a search warrant. I know they can do anything with a warrant and call it legal. Whether it is or not is a good question.

They seized several items, of which they seemed to pick and choose what they wanted. As of this date there are still no charges filed or a case number assigned. Now keep in mind, this has only been about 10 months. How long does or should it take for charges to be filed or a case to be dismissed?

I've been told that no drugs were found on the premises, so what is the problem?

I have written to several officials about this problem and have received responses from two of them, but not to my satisfaction.

My friends involved in this were not arrested, but were photographed and fingerprinted. Can this be legal procedure if you're not under arrest or charged with a crime?

I think this whole thing stinks! I would be very interested in public opinion on this matter. And maybe it would be of interest to an investigative reporter or two!

Background

POLAR PEN, 194A-AN-13620, was opened on July 1, 2003, to investigate allegations involving a private prison company and a lobbyist/consultant that were corruptly influencing state legislators. The case has blossomed into a far-reaching public corruption investigation, with the most recent portion of the investigation centering around VECO Corporation and its illegal influence on state and federal public officials.

During the week of August 30, 2006, a large portion of the POLAR PEN investigation went overt with the execution of search warrants, interviews, and service of subpoenas, including service of a search warrant on [redacted] home and offices. United States Senator Ted Stevens (Sen. Stevens), who represents Alaska, [redacted] Sen. Stevens has been a member of the United States Senate for 37 years and until January 2007 held the position of Senate President Pro Tempore. The President Pro Tempore is a member of the party leadership team.

Stevens' tenure in the Senate makes him the fourth-most senior member among his colleagues, and first among Republicans. Sen. Stevens was, again until January 2007, the Chairman of the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation, which oversees the Departments of Commerce and Transportation. In addition, the Committee's broad jurisdiction covers issues including telecommunications, fisheries, oceans and maritime policy, the Coast Guard, aviation (including the Transportation Security Administration), rail, highway safety, global climate change, interstate commerce, space, science, technology, economic development, trade, tourism, consumer issues, product safety, and sports.

Sen. Stevens had previously chaired the Senate's Ethics, Rules, and Governmental Affairs Committees. From 1997 through 2004, Sen. Stevens held the position of Chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee.

Sen. Stevens has been a vocal advocate for Alaska fishing industry interests and crafted monumental legislation, including the American Fisheries Act (AFA) and the Magnuson-Stevens Fishery Conservation and Management Act. Sen. Stevens' key [redacted] have included [redacted] and [redacted] Sen. Stevens' name and legislative acts continue to appear in interviews, relevant press articles, and intelligence gathering relative to this portion of the public corruption investigation.

Alaska Fisheries Marketing Board (AFMB)

Pursuant to Title II, Department of Commerce and Related Agencies, Section 209 of the Consolidated Appropriations Resolution of 2003 (Public Law 108-7), the AFMB was established to award grants to market, develop, and promote Alaska seafood. It is believed Sen. Stevens crafted this portion of the legislation.

The AFMB is a private, nonprofit organization that was created under Federal Statute and which receives Federal funding appropriations. Its leadership is comprised of 11 board members, appointed by the Secretary of Commerce. Its mission is to serve as a catalyst to market, develop, and promote Alaska seafood and improve related technology and transportation.

The funds utilized by the AFMB were appropriated by Congress. Between fiscal years (FY) 2003 and 2005, the AFMB received $24.2 million. In FY 2006, the AFMB awarded $7.8 million in grants. The funds originated from duties imposed on the importation of foreign seafood products collected under the Saltonstall-Kennedy Act (S-K Act), which was enacted in 1954 to assist the U.S. fishing industry. Imported seafood products compete directly with U.S. fishery products and the S-K Act provides that a portion of the duties collected will be made available as direct industry grants to assist U.S. fisheries to expand domestic and foreign markets. Congress directed the AFMB to use a portion of these funds to market Alaska seafood.

There are three basic types of grants available through AFMB: 1)Formula-based grants, 2)Grants via Requests for Proposal (RFP), and 3)Grants to "Projects Meriting Special Consideration" (PMSC). The Formula-based grants are for processors of Alaska salmon and the formula is based upon the percentage of total pounds purchased and processed. RFPs grants are designed for creative proposals to develop new products and/or innovative marketing ideas. PMSC grants are for projects that do not comport with the other two available grants. An example of a PMSC grant was the $500,000 grant to Alaska Airlines to paint a giant salmon on a jet and call it a "Salmon thirty Salmon."

Each of the 11 board members are appointed for a three-year term. The board members can be reappointed to successive terms by the Secretary of Commerce. The Executive Director is a federal employee. Public Law 108-447, section 206 (2) states that, "...the Secretary may appoint, assign, or otherwise designate as Executive Director an employee of the Department of Commerce, who may serve in an official capacity in such position, with or without reimbursement, and such appointment or assignment shall be without interruption or loss of civil service status or privilege..."

Southeast Alaska Seiners Association (SEAS) & Purse Seine Vessel Owners Association (PSVOA)

SEAS was formed in 1968 by a group of concerned Ketchikan, Alaska commercial salmon purse seiners. SEAS claims to be the preeminent local, species specific, regionally based commercial fishing association in Alaska with a focus on Pacific Salmon Treaty, Board of Fisheries issues, Marketing Funding, Fleet Consolidation, Regulatory and Administrative Access to SE Salmon Resources and Conservation Principles. SEAS is a non-profit organization association funded solely through membership dues.

As a sister organization to SEAS, PSVOA is a non-profit Washington organization established in 1936 to further the interests of the commercial fishing fleet. PSVOA is the largest trade group in the State of Washington representing over 400 vessel owners operating in various fisheries throughout the West Coast of Alaska. PSVOA is ruled by 13 Directors, nine elected by membership from various Puget Sound fishing ports and four at-large positions elected by the entire membership.

Purse seiners harvest salmon, herring, squid, tuna and other pelagic species along the West Coast and Alaska. The vessels encircle the fish with net (seine) and draw (purse) the bottom closed to capture the fish.

SEAS and PSVOA formed the Southeast Revitalization Association (SRA) and received a $150,000 grant from Congress to study a fleet consolidation plan. It appears $50,000 of this grant may have been used to pay for Advance North LLC [redacted] to lobby Sen. Stevens, which would be in violation of the grant requirements. Anchorage is investigating the source and actual purpose of these payments.

Global Seas/Research Vessel (R/V) Mt. Mitchell

Global Seas, LLC is a private management company, the parent company of which, Nina Fisheries, Inc., was formed in 1994 to oversee and manage its holdings in the seafood industry. Since that time, Nina Fisheries, Inc. has grown and evolved into an internationally diverse entity with a portfolio of investments spanning the globe and representing a variety of industries, including the harvesting, processing and marketing of seafood, maritime equipment sales, real estate development, and survey and charter vessels.

The R/V Mt. Mitchell is a 231' Oceanographic Research Vessel managed and operated by Global Seas, LLC. The vessel is newly refurbished and is available for charter.

Global Seas contracted with Advance North LLC to sell or charter the R/V Mt. Mitchell. Advance North, LLC received over $167,000 from Global Seas. The R/V Mt. Mitchell is still available for charter. Anchorage is investigating the source and actual purpose of these payments.

[redacted] crab catcher/processor Patricia Lee and crab harvesting vessel Icelander. [redacted] all or part of the two vessels and the catch history, individual fishing quotas (IFQs), and individual processing quotas (IPQs) associated with the vessels. Advance North, LLC was to be paid $15,000 per month to assist with this. Anchorage is investigating the source and actual purpose of these payments.

Aleut Corporation & Adak Fisheries, LLC

Adak is an Aleutian island in the middle of one of the world's richest fishing regions and home to a seafood processing and cold storage plant. The plant processes cod, crab, halibut and other bottom fish.

In December 2001, a [redacted] partnered with Icicle Seafoods, Inc. to create Adak Fisheries, LLC, a business designed to process fish. The Aleut Corporation, an Alaska Native corporation, owned the Adak seafood plant. The Aleut Corporation agreed to lease the facilities to Adak Fisheries, LLC.

[redacted] recognized that [redacted] could be a powerful ally. [redacted] by Adak Fisheries, LLC. [redacted] crab issues before the Federal North Pacific Fishery Management Council and the State Board of Fisheries. [redacted] claims [redacted] lobbied the State Fish Board on his behalf [redacted] Between 2003 and 2005, Adak Fisheries LLC paid Stevens & Associates approximately $313,000.

Aleut Enterprise, LLC is a subsidiary of the Aleut Corporation. [redacted] Adak Fisheries, LLC at the same time [redacted] Sen. Stevens, was creating a special Aleutian Islands fishery that would supply the company with pollock worth millions of dollars a year.

The pollock allocation alone was projected to provide Adak Fisheries, LLC with $1.5 million in profits this year and $3.7 million in 2006. Under his deal, [redacted] the profits of the company. During the time [redacted] the company grew in value from about $2 million to at least $8.5 million.

The secret option was a surprise to officials of the Aleut Corporation, the intended beneficiary of the pollock fishery when they learned of it. [redacted] the pollock rights to Adak Fisheries, LLC [redacted] and argued against the Aleut Corporation claiming a larger share of the profits. [redacted] stake in Adak Fisheries, LLC for an immediate payment [redacted]

At that time Sen. Ted Stevens was Chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, from which he was able to push legislation through Congress. By attaching a "rider" (i.e. unrelated legislation) to a vital spending bill he could bypass the usual process of introduction, committee hearings and waiting for debate to be scheduled on the Senate floor -- stopping points where opponents could slow, change or kill the measure. The pollock allocation to the Aleut Corporation was such a rider.

On October 24, 2003, the rider allocating pollock rights to the Aleut Corporation was still pending in Congress but expected to pass. Aleut Enterprise, LLC agreed to transfer the rights to those fish, worth an estimated $10 million a year, to Adak Fisheries, LLC as part of the lease agreement between the companies.

During one Aleut Corporation meeting, the CEO asked [redacted]

[redacted] was uncovered, [redacted] told the press that he had no requirement to disclose the option to Aleut Enterprise, LLC.

North Pacific Crab Association (NPCA)

The NPCA, a non-profit association registered in Washington State, was formed in 2001 by Bering Sea king and snow crab processing companies to push for Federal legislation to divide the fisheries into individual shares, or quotas, for boat owners and processing plant owners.

During Fiscal Years 2003-2005, AFMB gave Ocean Beauty, Icicle Seafoods, Peter Pan, Trident, NorQuest, North Pacific Processors, Western Alaska, Snopac, and Yardarm Knot over $9 million in Federal grant funds. These nine companies constitute NPCA. NPCA paid Stevens & Associates $98,000 in an effort to research and obtain federal legislation on crab rationalization. Last year, Sen. Ted Stevens pushed through legislation that created the individual quotas, which are tradable and highly valuable. Anchorage is investigating the source and actual purpose of these payments.

Bristol Bay Economic Development Corporation (BBEDC)

BBEDC is one of six Community Development Quota (CDQ) programs in Alaska. BBEDC's home office is located in Dillingham, Alaska. BBEDC's purpose is to promote economic growth and opportunities for residents of its member communities through sustainable use of the Bering Sea resources.

Shortly after receiving an AFMB grant, BBEDC contracted with Advance North, LLC to develop amendments to the Magnuson-Stevens Fishery Conservation and Management Act. BBEDC was to pay Advance North, LLC $5,000 per month. Anchorage is investigating the source and actual purpose of these payments.

Yukon Delta Fisheries Development Association (YDFDA)

YDFDA is another of the CDQ programs in Alaska. YDFDA's major goal is to create a self-sustaining, independent fishing company that will create income and employment opportunities for Yukon Delta residents.

YDFDA and BBEDC contracted with Advance North, LLC to develop amendments to the Magnuson-Stevens Fishery

Conservation and Management Act. Each organization was to pay Advance North LLC $5,000 per month. Anchorage is investigating the source and actual purpose of these payments.

Glacier Fish Company

Glacier Fish Company produces frozen-at-sea groundfish products. Glacier Fish Company paid Stevens & Associates Inc. over $58,000 between 2003 and 2005. The purpose of the payments is still undetermined.

Yardarm Knot/Highland Light

Highland Light is part of the Yardarm Knot Group, which was established in 1988 by Washington fishermen to harvest and process Alaska crab, salmon, and groundfish. The C/P Highland Light vessel is designed to process and package headed and gutted fish, fish roe and fillets. Highland Light entered into an agreement with Coastal Villages Region Fund, a CDQ group, to harvest and process CDQ pollock beginning in the year 2000. Shortly after receiving an AFMB grant, Yardarm Knot established a contract with Stevens. Yardarm Knot paid Stevens & Associates approximately $71,000 between 2003 and 2005. Anchorage is investigating the source and actual purpose of these payments.

SEAS is a non-profit organization, whose board of directors is comprised of 13 members. SEAS also has a general membership of approximately 100 members. Dues for SEAS membership are $750 per year. Before this current year, dues were only $600. Approximately 70 percent of SEAS members are also members of PSVOA. SEAS is also one of 34 members of the United Fisherman of Alaska (hereafter "UFA"), of which [redacted] provided the following information about SEAS' sources of income, which were given in the approximate amounts:

SEAS nets about $10,000 per year from Pull-Tab Gaming; between $8,000 and $9,000 per year from UFA; $5,000 per month from the Southeast Revitalization Association (hereafter "SRA") in order to work towards the Buyback; and Certificates of Deposit (CDs) that yield approximately $2,000 to $3,000 per year. [redacted] advised that PSVOA also writes checks to SEAS for contracting costs that they share equally. Further, without specifying the amount, [redacted] stated that between 1994 and 2004, SEAS received cost recovery funds, but that SEAS did not have any cost-recovery funds coming in for 2005 through 2006. [redacted] stated that since [redacted] of SEAS [redacted] 22 cost-recovery contracts. SEAS' general members pay dues of $750 per year. SEAS is also comprised of 44 "business members," whose dues are $250 per year each and 10 "lifetime members," whose dues for the years 2004, 2005, 2006 brought SEAS over its usual income by about $50,000.

In [redacted] (hereafter [redacted] the Alaska Fisheries Building, 410 Calhoun Avenue, Juneau, AK 99801. [redacted] originally purchased the building [redacted] sold a one-fourth interest to SEAS and gave a [redacted] ownership to [redacted] in exchange for maintaining the building. [redacted] reported that the purchase price of the property was $306,000, and that there were $60,000 worth of upgrades put in to the building. [redacted] stated that rent for both SEAS and PSVOA was previously $800 per month for each.

[redacted] the Pacific Salmon Commission, for which [redacted] on the hatchery board in Juneau, Alaska.

A vessel buyback had been a priority of SEAS dating back to the 1980s. SEAS had hired [redacted] O'Connor & Hannan, a Washington D.C. lobbying firm. [redacted] had proposed a $53 million buyback to be funded by the federal government; $38 million would come as a grant and $15 million would come as a loan with a one percent interest rate. However, after going through the legislative process, they were only successful in obtaining $150,000 to work on a buyback, which was less than [redacted]. This $150,000 had originally been intended as a loan guarantee for the $53 million buyback. [redacted] said that even if this amount had gone through, either the interest rate would have been unfeasibly low or payment rate would have been too large for fishermen to afford. At that point, [redacted] believed that SEAS needed to hire someone else who would achieve something realistic, and he began looking at B. STEVENS and Associates, [redacted] would limit competition with the likely opponents of the buyback. Further, [redacted] believed that [redacted] was against the idea of buybacks and if [redacted] might possibly change his [redacted] view thereon.

Purse Seine Vessel Owners Association ("PSVOA")

[redacted] advised that PSVOA is an organization similar in nature to SEAS, only on a much larger scale. [redacted] is executive director of PSVOA. [redacted] advised that many people belong to PSVOA, due to its favorable insurance options. In [redacted] PSVOA in order to take advantage of the attractive insurance benefits. [redacted] and

Alaska Fisheries Marketing Board ("AFMB")

The AFMB is a non-profit organization that was funded by T. STEVENS. [redacted] AK, had the original idea of an Alaska fisheries marketing board and currently sits on the board of directors. In [redacted] to the AFMB. The purpose of the organization was to jump start salmon marketing in Alaska. Most of the money given out by AFMB is to Alaska seafood companies and is based upon the amount of salmon that they process. A smaller amount is given in the form of discretionary grants which are based on marketing proposals, and $6.5 million is given to the Alaska Seafood Marketing Institute (hereafter "ASMI").

[redacted] advised that the AFMB awarded grants to organizations that fulfilled the requirements and goals of the AFMB. [redacted] did not believe AFMB ever awarded a grant to an organization that did not deserve the grant and that AFMB board members acted appropriately when discussing and awarding grants. Specifically, [redacted] advised that [redacted] did not steer any AFMB grants to any organization or misuse his [redacted] the AFMB. [redacted] is not aware of any AFMB board member, [redacted] receiving any benefit in return for an AFMB grant.

b7C

Southeast Revitalization Association ("SRA")

SRA is a non-profit organization which is comprised of seven (7) Board members who are initially appointed by SEAS and PSVOA. The purpose of the SRA was to administer a Southeast seiner buyback program and it was founded to meet state statutes regarding the administration of a buyback. SRA members are either part of SEAS or PSVOA. SRA enters into contracts with the Alaska Seine Boat Owners (hereafter "ASBO"), which is part of PSVOA, and SEAS. The Boards of Directors of SEAS and SRA meet together. SEAS often holds meetings at various ports for SRA.

[redacted] initially did not believe any lobbying occurred with the use of SRA funds. However, upon further inquiry and review with [redacted] on what he and others did, [redacted] stated that [redacted] the SRA, [redacted] members and groups to discuss the buyback, answered questions from various groups and individuals, huddled the masses, and flew to Washington D.C. to meet with NMFS and Alaska congressional staff to discuss buyback issues and pursue the buyback legislation on multiple occasions. Interview – Willard Dunham – Seward Vice Mayor and SAAMS Secretary

SYNOPSIS

b6 Per Interior
b7C

On 06/12/07 federal Investigators interviewed Seward Vice-Mayor and Seward Association for the Advancement of Marine Science (SAAMS) Secretary Willard Dunham. He provided background on the relationship between SAAMS dba Alaska Sea Life Center (ASLC) lobbyist Brad Gilman and Trevor McCabe and provided new details on the last meeting between the City of Seward delegation and Senator Stevens prior to the passing of amended legislation that gave money to the ASLC. He also denied that ASLC Executive Director Tylan Schrock told the SAAMS Board that receipt of the previously referenced federal funds was contingent upon the ASLC purchase of the Arcade property.

DETAILS

On 06/12/2007 at 1430 hours Department of Commerce Office of Inspector General (DOC/OIG) Special Agent [redacted] and I met with Willard Dunham and his counsel, Attorney [redacted] of the firm Birch Horton Bittner and Cherot[1] at the Alaska Sea Life Center in Seward, AK. Dunham voluntarily provided the following information:

Willard has served on the Seward City Council for the past five years and currently holds the position of Vice-Mayor on the council.

He has served on the SAAMS Board of Directors since its inception in 1990 or 1991 and prior to that sat on the Board's precursor, the Seward Marine Science Board with the University of Alaska since the 1960's. While on the SAAMS Board, Dunham has held the position of President and has held his current position as Secretary for eight years.

[1] I was advised by Main Justice Attorney [redacted] tha [redacted] a primary partner in this law firm, is Senator Ted Steven's brother-in-law. Attorney [redacted] has advised that this firm will represent all ASLC employees and SAAMS Board Members in this investigation. [redacted] was present during my interview with ASLC Executive Director Tylan Schrock on 05/08/2007 and my interview with SAAMS Treasure [redacted] on 06/11/2007. [redacted] is another associate partner in this firm.

Several years ago Dunham traveled to Washington D.C. as part of a local Seward steering group to push the idea of a multi-agency facility and conference center. He was surprised at the unusual gathering of agencies that had the idea to band together to create this facility.

Approximately two years ago he traveled to Washington D.C. with Seward Mayor Vanta Shafer and City Manager [redacted] to meet with Senators Stevens and Murkowski and Alaska Congressman Young. The purpose of their meeting with Senator Stevens was to express concern over language he had placed in an Appropriations Bill[2] that required the City of Seward to vacate Washington Street. Dunham's understanding of this provision was that the federal money set aside for the construction of the Mary Lowell Center (MLC) could not be released until after Washington Street was vacated and he felt that it was a physical impossibility to enact this provision within the limited time frame listed in the Public Law. The fear was that failure to enact this provision in a timely manner would forfeit their ability to receive the federal construction funds.

The meeting took place in Senator Stevens' Office with Senator Ted Stevens [redacted] and a few other staff members. Shafer, Dunham [redacted] and lobbyists [redacted][3] were also present. The Seward contingent advised Senator Stevens that the vacation of Washington Street was facing some opposition and might not happen for a long period of time. They requested that the vacation language be taken out of the Bill so the rest of the project might move forward in a timely manner.[4]

Dunham believed that during further discussions (contemporaneous with the Senator's meeting) with City lobbyists [redacted] and [redacted] they never discussed the possibility that the leftover NPS land acquisition money might be moved from the City to the ASLC. [redacted] and [redacted] are two of three federal lobbyists from Brad Gilman's lobbying firm[5] that dealt with City of Seward issues. Under ordinary circumstances they would have met with Gilman but he was unavailable that week due to a death in his family. Dunham indicated that The City of Seward was under contract with Gilman's firm as their primary federal lobbyist and that they (the City) had provided this firm with a list of priority development projects for which they were seeking federal funding assistance. Dunham believed that the Mary Lowell Center was on that priority list. Dunham's understanding was that Gilman was being paid by the City to lobby specifically for Mary Lowell Center Project funding.

Dunham was aware that Gilman's firm was also being retained by the ASLC for similar purposes but did not see it as a conflict of interest for Gilman since the City of Seward and the ASLC had similar

[2] Public Law 108-447 enacted on 12/08/2004 directed the NPS to transfer to the City of Seward "any remaining balance of previously appropriated funds not necessary for property acquisition (for the MLC) and design upon the vacation by the City of Seward of Washington Street between 4th Avenue and 5th Avenue..., provided that the City of Seward uses such funds for the related waterfront planning, pavilions, boardwalks, trails, or related purposes that compliment the new federal facility."

[3] Dunham could not recall the true name of the individual he nicknamed [redacted]

[4] During the interview attorney [redacted] interjected that Dunham had told him that [redacted] fell asleep in [redacted] Office during this meeting and angered the Senator to the point where he felt the City of Seward might not be capable of managing federal funds. [redacted] inferred that this might have been the reason that Stevens amended Public Law 108-447 on 07/26/2005 which redirected left over NPS land acquisition money from the City of Seward the Alaska Sea Life Center. [redacted] lobbying firm is Robertson, Monagle and Eastaugh; Dunham was unable to remember the name of the firm during the interview.

goals and the land the ASLC sits on is actually owned by the City of Seward.

Dunham advised that Brad Gilman had grown up in Seward, AK and was childhood friends with Trevor McCabe.

Dunham believes he was alerted that the leftover NPS federal acquisition funds were being redirected from the City of Seward to the ASLC by Seward Mayor Vanta Shafer and recalls being rather "surprised" by the news. However, Dunham felt that the ASLC was much better geared toward handling federal appropriation money and the City did not have a plan in place on how they wanted to spend that money had it come to them. He believed that the money was ultimately a gift to ASLC, who was hurting for space.

[redacted] described Seward [redacted] as divisive. He indicated that [redacted] had publicly accused Senator Stevens of "malfeasance". According to Dunham [redacted] refused to participate in ASLC/SAAMS Board Meetings even after he was told three times that as City Manager his attendance was mandatory. Members of the City Council finally asked [redacted] to vacate his position with the City. Dunham was not clear on whether [redacted] was fired or resigned his position but did state tha [redacted] no longer has a job with the City of Seward. Dunham believed [redacted] still had property in Seward but was not sure if [redacted] still lived in the City.

He expressed surprise that the National Park Service did not buy the Arcade Property from the Centennial Group but was not that familiar with the negotiations between NPS and the Centennial Group.

Dunham couldn't remember how it came about that the Arcade Property was available to the ASLC for purchase. Dunham was on the SAAMS Executive Committee when ASLC Executive Director Tylan Schrock approached the Committee and gave a presentation recommending ASLC buy the Arcade Property using the leftover NPS federal land acquisition funds. Dunham did not remember if ASLC Executive Director Tylan Schrock presented specific information to the SAAMS Board about the possible purchase of the Arcade Property but stated there was "no question it was a good deal if we got the opportunity to buy it". When asked if Schrock or anyone ever indicated to the SAAMS Board that the transfer of federal funds to the ASLC was conditional upon the purchase of the Arcade Property, Dunham responded, "absolutely not!" According to Dunham, the Committee did tell Schrock that the purchase of the Arcade property would be conditional upon the demolition of the building. Dunham didn't remember discussion of the potential sales price for the Arcade Building.

b7C

Dunham intimated that 'everyone" on the Board knew that Trevor McCabe was part owner of the Arcade Property and it wasn't seen as an issue.

He advised that the Board had not yet reached a conclusion on the most appropriate use of the Arcade Property and had no concrete plans in place for potential development of the site.

Regarding the contract between ASLC and Alaska Northern Outfitters (ANO)[6], Dunham stated that at some point the SAAMS Board was "made aware" of an offer by ANO to run a day charter business from ASLC via a portable floating dock that would run interpretive science tours. ANO offered to provide the boat if ASLC would provide personnel for the tours and sign a lease with the City of

[6] A business owned by Trevor McCabe [redacted]

FBI - Stevens-10812

Seward for the portable dock. Dunham's understanding was that the dock lease with the City expired June 1, 2007 and he does not know how much the lease cost ASLC.

Dunham related that the SAAMS Board knew of Trevor McCabe's connection to this deal as part owner of ANO.

According to Dunham, ASLC had tried this venture once before with Kenai Fjords Tours but it didn't work out due to poor logistics.

Dunham related that ASLC/SAAMS purchased real property on one occasion prior to the Arcade Property acquisition. The Chugach Native Corporation approached ASLC with an offer to buy or lease the Railroad Depot, a property adjacent to the ASLC. The Corporation was allegedly in financial trouble after sinking a lot of money into the Depot to create a theater. SAAMS entered into a 5 year lease agreement with Chugach for the property and purchased the property 3 years into the lease agreement. The property was financed, although Dunham was not aware of what funds are being used to make the monthly payments.

SYNOPSIS

On 06/12/07 federal Investigators interviewed former Alaska Sea Life Center (ASLC) Accounting Manager [redacted] at [redacted] provided background on how federal funds are administered at the Sea Life Center and specifics about when/how federal money was received at ASLC from the National Park Service (NPS) pursuant to Congressional direction.

DETAILS

On 06/12/07 Department of Commerce Office of Inspector General (DOC/OIG) Special Agent [redacted] and I met with [redacted] at [redacted] residence located at [redacted] voluntarily provided the following information:

[redacted]

Prior to [redacted] current position [redacted] held a full time position with ASLC as their Accounting Manager. [redacted] held that position from [redacted] direct supervisor was Financial Director [redacted] who reported directly to Executive Director Tylan Schrock. During [redacted] time at ASLC, [redacted] supervised the accounting staff, worked closely with the Grants administrative staff and with Grants and Contracts Manager [redacted] Schrock also asked [redacted] to lead a "Management Team" which focused on Operational Staff issues. [redacted] sat on a Human Resources Committee and worked on personnel and communications issues and wrote policy. [redacted] also started [redacted] own initiative called the Performance Management Committee and wrote the current ASLC accounting manual that had a section in it on Grants management.

[redacted] didn't feel that [redacted] had ever personally observed any inappropriate uses of federal funding at ASLC.

[redacted] did not attend Seward Association for the Advancement of Marine Science (SAAMS) dba ASLC Board Meetings but indicated that ASLC General Manager [redacted] and Finance Director [redacted] would have attended these meetings. Schrock's Administrative Assistant [redacted] would also have been present to take meeting minutes.

According to [redacted] ASLC utilized the accounting software program "Solomon IV" to organize and track of all the various federal funds they received. The program also recognized revenue and receivables. Every grant had a project code assigned to it so it could be identified in the system.

The ASLC had one checking account (a sweep account) and several investment accounts. All deposits and payments went through the checking account. This system had been realigned during the time that [redacted] was employed with ASLC. When [redacted] arrived at ASLC in 2002, the account structure was more in line with the financial accounting requirements set up in the Cooperative Agreement with the City of Seward.[1] It was [redacted] understanding that after the Bond debt to the City was paid off in 03/2001[2] ASLC General Manager [redacted] gave authorization to remove/replace some of the old accounts and restructure their accounting system.

The ASLC investment accounts referenced above consisted of two money market accounts. One was established after ASLC won a construction lawsuit judgement of $10 million. The other was a reserve account established to "get them through the winter". Items such as indirect grant cost payments (32% indirect cost rate) went into the reserve account. [redacted] does not believe that much money currently goes into either account.

The accounting team submitted project reports to [redacted] on a monthly basis for each project code.

ASLC used the federal "ASAP" system to drawdown payments for most of their grant programs. They would make these drawdowns approximately once a week after receiving a weekly report from their accounts payable section indicating what checks had been written for the week.

Many grant recipients utilized space in the ASLC to carry out their federally funded projects and rent was charged to each project code based upon a square footage calculation on how much space each project used. According to [redacted] this calculation was done by [redacted] The rent calculation also differed based upon what type of space was being utilized. Lab or outdoor pool space cost more to rent than administrative or office space.

[redacted] described how grant initiations were handled. Under usual circumstances, the ASLC would receive a letter telling them they were slated to get a certain amount of federal grant money from a specific agency for a specific research purpose. Even when a grant was received as the result of a

[1] The Original "Agreement for Financing, Lease, Construction, Operation and Maintenance of the Alaska Sea Life Center", dated 04/29/1995 was a cooperative agreement between the City of Seward and the ASLC. It required the ASLC to maintain separate and distinct accounts labeled the "Revenue Fund", the "Renewal and Replacement Fund", and the "Termination Fund". The First Amendment to this agreement, signed 05/01/96, indicated that these accounts/funds would need to be maintained so long as any construction bonds purchased by the City remained outstanding.

"hard-earmark" from a member of Congress, ASLC was still required to submit a non-competitive grant proposal and were still bound by normal federal regulations affecting grant recipients.

Regarding ASLC's receipt of leftover federal land acquisition monies from NPS, [redacted] recalled that the money came in "overnight" in the Fall of 2005 and they were not prepared to receive it because they had not established any financial codes for the money. Schrock entered [redacted] office and told [redacted] "they want to send $1.6 million over here and I'm confused." [redacted] was told to treat the NPS money like a grant fund with normal OMB restrictions even though they didn't necessarily apply in this case. [redacted] was not aware of any other time when ASLC had received money under these circumstances [redacted] did not recall establishing a "grant code" to track the expenditure of this money but surmised that it must have been done after she resigned from her position in January, 2006.

[redacted] did recall cutting a check for $100,000 at Schrock's request with the NPS funds to put in an escrow account for the Arcade Property.

[redacted] had no other discussions with Schrock about the NPS money or the Arcade Property.

SYNOPSIS

On 06/13/07 federal Investigators interviewed National Park Service (NPS) Kenai Fjords National Park Superintendent Jeff Mow in Anchorage, AK. He described his role during the NPS/Centennial Group land acquisition negotiations in Seward and described his current role in Seward and his relationships with members of the Alaska Sea Life Center (ASLC) and the City of Seward [redacted]

DETAILS

On 06/13/07 Department of Commerce Office of Inspector General (DOC/OIG) Special Agent [redacted] and I met with Jeff Mow at the NPS Alaska Region Office Building, 240 West 5th Avenue, Anchorage, AK. Jeff Mow signed a consent to search for his computer and was advised of his Garrity rights prior to the beginning of the interview. He then voluntarily provided the following information:

His current position is NPS Superintendent with the Kenai Fjords National Park and he has held that position for 2 ½ years, starting in December, 2004. He has been employed by NPS for about 20 years.

Mow took over for prior Superintendent Anne Castellina and acting Superintendent Peter Armato.

He advised that there are still boxes of Castellina's files that he hasn't been through but did indicate that he hadn't seen any notebooks in the files he had reviewed.[1]

[1] During a phone interview with Anne Castellina on 05/16/2007 she indicated that she maintained detailed notebooks of her daily activities while Superintendent and she left those behind in some file cabinets within the Superintendent's Office when she left the position.

Mow approached Trevor McCabe in McCabe's Office in February or March 2004 in order to introduce himself to his "landlord". According to Mow, during this visit the land acquisition negotiations between the Centennial Group and the NPS were not discussed.

Mow "got to know" ASLC Executive Director Tylan Schrock "early on". He advised that Schrock was his neighbor and described their interactions as a day to day working relationship. Some of his communications with Schrock include matters involving the development of the Mary Lowell Center (MLC) due to Schrock's role "representing the City's interest in the MLC".

Mow denied having any communications with Senator Stevens or members of Senator Steven's staff.

Mow understood that Senator Steven's former [redacted] used to come to Seward on a regular basis and visit with former Kenai Fjords National Park Superintendent Anne Castellina, with whom [redacted] had a personal friendship/relationship. Mow had met [redacted] once before when he was participating in a two year Bevinetto Fellowship in Washington D.C. with NPS. Mow spent one year of this fellowship with the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee and one year in NPS Legislative Affairs.

Mow denied having any advance knowledge that the legislation would be changed moving leftover NPS land acquisition funds from the City of Seward to the ASLC.[2] He didn't believe NPS had even been given an opportunity to comment on the proposed legislation before it was passed.

Mow contacted Schrock and expressed surprise at the newly modified legislation. Schrock remarked that he had no idea that this was coming and indicated that the ASLC would place the newly appropriated money into a separate account he called the "waterfront account". Schrock didn't mention the Arcade property during this conversation but Mow suspected that some of the ASLC appropriation would go toward purchasing the Arcade. He knew that Schrock's vision for the waterfront plan included the Arcade Building.

Mow had several conversations with City of Seward officials about the revised legislation. When he spoke with Assistant City Manage [redacted] she expressed surprise and told him they would find out what happened to the money from their lobbyist, Brad Gilman.

could be released.

Schrock informed Mow he was going to use some of the new federal money to hire the Portico Group[3]

[2] Section 438 of Public Law 109-54 passed 07/26/2005.

[3] The Portico Group is a design firm that originally contracted with NPS to determine a suitable location for the MLC. The Group conducted and published a study entitled "the Waterfront Study".

to design some possible structures for the Arcade Property that would compliment the MLC.

Mow had several conversations with Schrock concerning the Seward Saloon Property[4] owned by the [redacted] Schrock was considering going in with the City of Seward to purchase this property using more of the newly acquired federal funding and discussing the possibility of either having the City donate the property to the NPS for the MLC project or exchanging this property with another property the NPS already owns. He figured this deal would benefit the City of Seward because then they could relocate the MLC project and they wouldn't have to vacate Washington Street. He also told Mow the City would benefit because then they would be considered true "equity partners" in the MLC project. Mow indicated that the only way NPS could build on that property was if it was donated by the City or exchanged because NPS had to be the title holder for the property.

Mow spoke with [redacted] who, according to him, is an NPS Administrative employee who works under Marcia Blaszak in Anchorage. [redacted] expressed concern about the Kenai Fjords National Park Rae Building Lease in Seward. [redacted] indicated that if NPS moved out of the Rae Building and into the new MLC, the Park could lose the base increase that had paid for the Rae Building lease. Mow was not familiar with the legislation behind the Park's base increase.

[4] This property is in the middle of several pieces of property NPS has already obtained for the MLC. It was not originally available when the NPS was seeking for prospective land for acquisition.

DETAILS

On 08/01/07 Department of Commerce Office of Inspector General (DOI/OIG) Special Agent [redacted] and I met with Brad Gilman at the law offices of Hogan and Hartson LLP, Columbia Square 555 Thirteenth St. NW Washington D.C. Gilman was represented by Attorney [redacted] Hogan and Hartson Staff Attorney [redacted] was also present. Gilman voluntarily provided the following information:

He is a Vice President in the law and lobbying firm of Robertson, Monagle and Eastaugh (RME). RME has offices in Kenai, AK, Juneau, AK and Washington D.C. The Office in Kenai has one President and five Vice President partners. The office in Juneau has two people on staff. He maintains his office in Washington D.C. with managing Director [redacted] who is a lobbyist but not a lawyer, and [redacted] who is a subcontractor working on retainer for the firm. [redacted] has worked out of the Washington D.C. Office since 2001.

He has been with RME since 1988 and has some legal clients, with whom he typically gives advice on federal procurement issues. However, the vast majority of his clients hire him for federal lobbying work and interaction on their behalf with federal agencies such as NOAA. Most of his client base consists of fisheries and fish processing facilities. He has clients nationwide but does most of the "Alaska work" for RME. Some of the specific clients Gilman mentioned included the Interstate Marine Fisheries Organization and the United Space Alliance.

He advised that he spends about 30% to 40% of his time on Capital Hill lobbying the Alaska delegation, which consists of Senator Ted Stevens, Senator Lisa Murkowski, and Congressman Don Young. He does lobby other state delegations and does not have a set visiting schedule. His schedule and who he lobbies is dictated by his clients and their needs, the time of year, and what issues or topics are "hot". When he does communicate with the Alaska delegation, he has relatively little face to face interaction with them due to scheduling difficulties and time conflicts. When his clients are in town he does try to schedule time with the various state delegations for personal meetings between the client and the delegate. He does attend these meetings when possible or has someone else from RME attend.

In 1996 Gilman took on the City of Seward as a client. He shares this lobbying contract with [redacted] a lobbyist with the Blank and Rome firm. They gained Seward as a client by submitting a joint lobbying proposal in response to a public solicitation for lobbying proposals.

He couldn't remember what year he gained the Alaska Sea Life Center (ASLC) as a lobbying client. He does recall that the City of Seward asked him to help get the ASLC established as a client due to their vested interest in obtaining federal funding for the facility. The City was financially vested in the ASLC through construction bonds that they had fronted the facility during the building process. The City also owns the land that ASLC sits on. The ASLC remained on the City's list of lobbying interests for 6 or 7 years after it was built. Gilman recalled that in 2002 or 2003 Seward [redacted] finally told ASLC that it needed to retain its own lobbying services and removed ASLC from the City's list of lobbying priorities.

Schrock actually approached Gilman and asked him to begin lobbying on ASLC's behalf. Their lobbying priority list consisted of issues such as marine mammal research, sea otters, and steller and eider birds. Although ASLC Executive Director Tylan Schrock was part of the Waterfront Committee and took an interest in the various Seward waterfront improvement projects, he never requested that Gilman lobby on behalf of ASLC on those issues. Schrock never requested Gilman to lobby for the Mary Lowell Center (MLC) project for ASLC. Gilman viewed all the waterfront improvement issues as Seward City issues and whenever Schrock brought any MLC issues to his attention he would refer Schrock back to the City for resolution.

When the original legislation came out directing the National Park Service (NPS) to purchase the Centennial Group[1] properties among a package of 7 properties Gilman was stunned. The legislation[2] contained language that directly affected his client, the City of Seward, and he had never seen the Bill before. His subcontractor [redacted] brought the Bill to his attention. He opined that it was very unusual for him not to assist with Bill language on a client's issue. However, Gilman didn't object to the Bill because it affected his client in a positive way. Gilman assumed Trevor McCabe wrote the Bill language because McCabe had commented weeks before about the possibility of Seward vacating Washington Street. McCabe told Gilman the City should be compensated somehow for vacating the Street. Gilman told him "If you've got good ideas, run them by the City." Gilman commented that at the time the legislation was passed he recalled thinking that McCabe was "pretty ballsy" for getting the Centennial Group's property parcel numbers placed in the legislation.

Gilman denied Willard Dunham's previous assertion that he and McCabe were childhood friends and grew up together in Seward.[3] Gilman indicated that they were a generation apart and that he was in high school when McCabe was still a small child. McCabe introduced himself to Gilman when Gilman was an established lobbyist and McCabe was working in Senator Steven's Office in Washington D.C.

[1] The Centennial Group LLC was a partnership consisting of Trevor McCabe, Dale Lindsey, and [redacted] In April, 2003, the Group purchased the Arcade and Old Solly's Buildings in Seward, AK for possible inclusion in the MLC.

[2] Public Law 108-447, enacted on 12/08/2004 directed the NPS to transfer to the City of Seward "any remaining balance of previously appropriated funds not necessary for property acquisition (for the MLC) and design upon the vacation by the City of Seward of Washington Street between 4th Avenue and 5th Avenue....provided that the City of Seward uses such funds for the related waterfront planning, pavilions, boardwalks, trails, or related purposes that compliment the new federal facility."

Gilman also previously worked for Senator Ted Stevens. From 1978 – 1980 he was a part-time paid intern for Stevens while in school. In 1982, Gilman worked in the Senate Post Office "pitching mail". In 1983, Gilman worked as a letter writer in Stevens Office and in 1984, he held positions on the Senate Commerce Committee. Finally, from 1984 to 1987 he worked with Stevens as the Counsel for Merchant Marine and Maritime issues.

Gilman advised that there are only 7 or 8 federal lobbyists in total that work on fisheries issues. He explained that sometimes the lobbyists create alliances to help push issues through Congress and sometimes they fight with one another depending on their clients' positions on pending legislation.

Gilman indicated that the only time that Trevor McCabe and he had worked for the same client was the Mt. Mitchell. When I inquired if he and McCabe had also shared [redacted] Yardarm Knot/Highland Light as a client he responded "not to his knowledge".[4] He stated tha[redacted] and Trevor McCabe were close friends bu[redacted] never told him that he had McCabe on retainer.

Gilman described the way he retained his lobbying clients. There are no signed contracts. He works based upon a "handshake deal". His clients pay a monthly fixed fee retainer that ranges from $1500/month for some of the Native Corporations he works with up to $20,000/month for the United Space Alliance. The ASLC pays $6300/month for his services and the City of Seward pays $5800/month which is split - $2400 goes to CJ Zane and the remaining $3400 goes to Gilman. The communities he represents do create "engagement letters" for his services, as opposed to actual contracts.

A couple of weeks before the Seward delegation was slated to come to Washington D.C. in July, 2005 Gilman received a phone call from Seward Mayor Vanta Shafer. Shafer told Gilman the City was having a local problem with opposition to the Washington Street vacation and that the City felt intimidated by Stevens. Shafer was wondering if Senator Stevens would be willing to remove the vacation language from the legislation. Gilman responded that he didn't think it was Senator Steven's intent to create those kinds of problems and felt confident that if they discussed the issue with the Senator he would want to fix the problem. Gilman never discussed deleting the reference in the Bill language to the City of Seward all together. He thought it was great the City was getting the residual land acquisition money.

Gilman spoke with Seward City Manage[redacted] by phone on 07/18/05 when the Seward delegation arrived in Washington D.C. Gilman had scheduled meetings for the delegation with Department of Interior representative Drue Pearce and Senator Stevens' Office, among others. Gilman's intention was to go with the delegation to these meetings but he received news later that day that his [redacted] had passed away and left Washington D.C. to be with his family. According to Gilman, [redacted] took his place in the 07/19/05 delegation meeting with Senator Stevens.

[4] Yardarm Knot Fisheries was listed as a lobbying client for Robertson, Monagle and Eastaugh for the first time in 2006, according to the Opensecrets.org lobbying database. This is also confirmed through required lobbying disclosure reports filed with Congress by Robertson, Monagle and Eastaugh. During an FBI Interview with Trevor McCabe on 08/31/2006, McCabe acknowledged that Yardarm Knot was one of his lobbying clients.

Gilman indicated that he never did talk to the City of Seward about how they were going to spend the residual monies when they received them and didn't know if they had a plan in place for these potential expenditures.

Gilman's first day back at work after his [redacted] funeral was 07/25/05, the day before the amended legislation was passed, moving the residual NPS land acquisition money from the City of Seward to ASLC.[5] McCabe and Schrock had provided him with emails showing that McCabe had crafted the amended legislation so that ASLC could buy the Arcade Property. Gilman was angry with ASLC Executive Director Tylan Schrock and with Trevor McCabe for putting him in a bad situation. They both knew that he represented both the ASLC and the City of Seward and that this action would hurt his client, the City of Seward. Gilman resented being put in the middle.

Gilman related the substance of a telephone conversation he had the same day (07/25/05) with [redacted] one of Senator Steven's staff members on the Appropriations Committee. According to Gilman, [redacted] called him and asked him if the City of Seward had put the Arcade Building on its list of waterfront projects it intended to acquire/complete with the residual NPS land acquisition monies. Gilman responded that he didn't think it would be likely that the City could purchase the Arcade property without a lengthy public vetting process. [redacted] hen asked if the ASLC were given the residual monies would they buy the Arcade property? Gilman responded "definitely". He recounted a recent conversation with Schrock when Schrock had told him, "If I had the damn money I would buy the Arcade." Gilman concluded from this conversation that Senator Stevens and his staff were going to change the legislation and move the residual NPS land acquisition money to ASLC. According to Gilman [redacted] did not mention Senator Stevens [redacted] or Trevor McCabe during this conversation.

Gilman acknowledged that he did not contact any of the City representatives that day to let them know about his correspondence with [redacted] and Schrock because he felt that there was nothing anyone could say or do at that point to prevent the legislation changes from happening. Gilman further acknowledged "being a little dishonest" with the City the next day when he contacted them to let them know about the legislative changes. Gilman did not disclose to the City his prior knowledge of these changes nor did he disclose his communications with [redacted] McCabe and Schrock regarding the residual NPS monies. When asked if he felt his actions were appropriate given that he accepted money from the City of Seward to represent them on MLC/waterfront development issues, he shrugged his shoulders and responded "I'll let you reach your own conclusions on that".

Gilman recalled Seward Mayor Vanta Shafer's angry response to the legislative changes. Shafer told Gilman she felt she had been mistreated by Senator Steven's [redacted] during [redacted] visit to D.C. Gilman recalled hearing rumors that something had happened between Shafer and [redacted] during their meeting in Senator Steven's Office and advised that the two [redacted] still don't have good things to say about each other. Shafer expressed concern to Gilman that the reason the City lost the money to ASLC was because [redacted]

Gilman had a telephone conversation with Schrock after all this occurred and told him "its' not a smart thing to have the City and the ASLC angry with each other". He recommended that Schrock set up a process with the City to jointly work on waterfront improvements using the federal funding provided to ASLC.

[5] Section 438 of Public Law 109-54 passed on 07/26/05.

During a separate conversation with Gilman Schrock expressed reservations about purchasing the Arcade Property. He wanted to purchase the property but was fearful that McCabe wanted too much money. Schrock asked Gilman if he was required to buy the Arcade property at any cost. Gilman responded that he did not have to buy the property. Schrock advised Gilman that he would have to do this "by the books". According to Gilman, Schrock was worried about potential audits surrounding the Arcade Property purchase.

Gilman advised he has never spoken with Senator Stevens about the legislative changes and has avoided [redacted] as [redacted] has strong opinions and can be very difficult to work with.

Gilman acknowledged seeking financial contributions from people for Senator Steven's re-election campaign. Gilman does not hold a formal, paid position on Steven's campaign staff but has attended fundraiser meetings held by Ed Rahall, the D.C. fundraiser Coordinator on Steven's campaign staff.

In November or December of last year Gilman attended such a fundraiser meeting. During this meeting, all the participants were requested to go out and raise as much money as possible in a six week time frame to coincide with Senator Steven's anticipated formal candidacy announcement. As part of this push, Gilman admitted requesting money from two of his clients, [redacted] of Yardarm Knot and [redacted] for Trident Seafoods. [6] Gilman did not recall asking anyone else to contribute to Senator Steven's re-election campaign during this time period and could not recall what other clients he may have asked to give campaign contributions in the past. He did recall previously asking the Kodiak Fisherman and Processors to participate in political fundraising.

Even though the campaign request to [redacted] came while legislation was pending that had an impact on [redacted] company, Gilman inferred that the Bill "had already taken on a life of its own" and the political contributions given by [redacted] had "nothing to do with the Bill". [redacted] requested Gilman's advice on what he could do to increase his profile and recognizability with Senator Stevens. Gilman told [redacted] one way to do this was to help raise money for Stevens' campaign.

Gilman advised he handed [redacted] and [redacted] political contribution checks to someone with Steven's campaign but couldn't remember who that person was. He said it was possible that the money [redacted] contributed might have gone to the people handling Senator Steven's leadership PAC, called "Northern Lights". Gilman was confident that the money [redacted] raised went to the Stevens for Senate campaign and [redacted] might have even brought the checks directly to the Washington D.C. "event".

Gilman understood that [redacted] is currently a paid staff member for Senator Stevens' re-election campaign and that [redacted] is currently working from [redacted] home.
Gilman has not gone to any political fundraisers held by Trevor McCabe nor has he advised any of his [6] Brad Gilman asked [redacted] Yardarm Knot to contribute to Senator Steven's re-election campaign in November, 2006. [redacted] and 5 others contributed the maximum allowable amount to Senator Stevens and this information was forwarded by Gilman to individuals on Senator Steven's staff in December, 2006 with the request that the Senator be informed of [redacted] contributions. On January 16, 2007 – Section 122 of Public Law 109-479 (crab rationalization plan) passed which primarily benefited one company, Yardarm Knot. Brad Gilman similarly asked [redacted] /Trident Seafoods to contribute to the Senator's re-election campaign in November, 2006. [redacted] also contributed and Gilman passed this information to Senator Steven's staff in December, 2006. A New York Times newspaper article dated 08/01/07 describes a $3.5 million earmark tucked into fiscal year 2008 Transportation-HUD spending bill (S1789) on 07/12/2007. The earmark is for an airstrip on a remote Aleutian Island that would almost exclusively benefit Trident Seafoods.

DETAILS

On 07/31/07 Department of Interior Office of Inspector General (DOI/OIG) Special Agent [redacted] and I met with Drue Pearce at her office located at 1101 Pennsylvania Ave, NW, Seventh Floor, Washington D.C. 20004. Pearce voluntarily provided the following information:

Pearce currently holds a Presidential Appointee position as the Federal Coordinator for Alaska Natural Gas Transportation Projects in the Office of the Federal Coordinator. She is the first individual to hold this newly created position. According to Pearce, the enabling legislation for this position was published in October, 2004 and was attached to a Department of Defense appropriation Bill (Public Law 108-324 section C). The Bill language actually came from the Senate Energy Committee. Pearce was nominated for the position and confirmed by Congress in August, 2006 and sworn in on 12/12/2006.

From 06/18/2001 until 12/2006 Pearce was the Department of Interior (DOI) Senior Advisor to the Secretary for Alaska Affairs. She worked in the immediate Office of the Secretary and functionally reported directly to the Secretary. She worked closely with DOI Chief of Staff Brian Wademan, Steve Griles, and P. Lynn Scarlett. [redacted] worked for her in administrative capacities. She also worked with Cam Toohey, the Special Assistant to the Secretary for Alaska Affairs. Toohey was permanently assigned in Anchorage, AK. It is Pearce's understanding that he resigned from DOI in January, 2006 and took a position with Shell Oil.

From 1984 until 2001 Drue Pearce was an elected Alaska State Legislator. She spent 4 years in the Alaska House of Representatives and 13 years in the Alaska State Senate. She was President of the Senate twice and when she vacated her position to take her job with DOI, Ben Stevens, Senator Ted Stevens' son, was elected to take her position. While in this position, she would see Congressman Don Young about twice a year when he scheduled formal meetings with the group of State legislators. The two Senators, Ted Stevens and then Senator Frank Murkowski would appear before the State House once a year for a formal speech. Access to the federal law makers was limited beyond that to occasional "courtesy calls" to their offices while in Washington D.C. Pearce did acknowledge working a little more closely with Senator Frank Murkowski during the Alaska National Wildlife Refuge (ANWR) debates because of his position with the Senate Energy Committee.

While at DOI, Pearce pulled together weekly reports on prevalent DOI Alaska issues and distributed them to the Secretary and Senior staff members. She fielded phone calls from Alaska citizens and business owners and conducted liaison work between these citizens and the various DOI Bureaus and entities.

She did have occasion to work with Paul Hoffman, then DOI Deputy Assistant Secretary on Fish and Parks. If Alaska specific issues came in to DOI in Washington D.C., DOI Secretary Chief of Staff Brian Wademan wouldn't sign off on correspondence unless the documents had been through Pearce's Office and had been "surnamed" by her office. Therefore, most of the Assistant Secretaries would come to Pearce first for advice before attempting to respond to Alaska based issues. Pearce explained that Fran Manilla, DOI Parks Director, was difficult to contact. Hoffman became the default "go to" guy for Alaska issues with the Parks. Pearce additionally consulted with [redacted], Acting Associate Solicitor for Parks, Fish, and Wildlife on Alaska Parks' problems.

Pearce also discussed Alaska issues with people in the "Congressional Hallway" at DOI. She worked with some of the DOI liaison and career staff who did work on DOI legislation and Bills. She participated in a bi-weekly teleconference on DOI Alaska issues that included people in the Congressional hallway. She would help expedite federal registrar packages if she had notice that they were coming to D.C. and she helped DOI with the research on the ANWR debate.

Occasionally Pearce did deal directly with members of the Alaska delegation, which consisted of Senator Ted Stevens, Senator Lisa Murkowski, and Congressman Don Young. Every once and a while they, or members of their staff would call Pearce seeking additional information on an Alaska based issue with DOI. The delegation also tended to "cc" Pearce on letters they wrote to the Secretary. Pearce attended all the meetings where Alaska delegation members met with the Secretary. Pearce could only recall three times in recent memory when Senator Stevens had a personal meeting with the DOI Secretary. Pearce also saw members of the delegation while attending various political events.

Pearce recalled two specific events when Senator Stevens called her directly for advice or information. One time Stevens called her to ask for clarification on an ethics issue. Stevens wanted to know how the Department of Interior defined ownership of a lease. He wasn't sure if he could privately invest in a particular arena if he was the one doing the appropriation of funds. Pearce thought this was an oil and gas venture somewhere in 2004 or 2005. Pearce didn't have any further information on the nature of the investment. She responded to this request by obtaining the appropriate definition from the Solicitor's Office. On a separate occasion, Stevens had a constituent issue and contacted Cam Toohey, who then called Pearce. Stevens had been requested by a constituent to look into a child custody issue. The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service (USFWS) had items in their possession which were relevant to the custody dispute and Senator Stevens requested the items from USFWS through DOI. Pearce obtained the relevant items from USFWS after consulting with the DOI Solicitor's Office and released them to Senator Stevens.

Pearce had more frequent contact with some of Senator Stevens' staff members. Pearce would contact them periodically to get updates on DOI specific issues. She had occasional but not frequent contact with [redacted] because she was on the Appropriations and Commerce Committees. She typically contacted [redacted] via e-mail since she almost never answered her phone and her voice mail was usually full. Pearce has not had any contact with [redacted] since she moved to the Commerce Committee. Pearce almost never had contact with staff member [redacted] Pearce spoke with Stevens' personal staff member [redacted] and others on his personal staff on a monthly basis.

Pearce advised that she met Trevor McCabe for the first time when she was in the Alaska State legislature and McCabe was working on Senator Steven's staff and traveling with him. Pearce knows who he is and what his background is due to the small community nature of Alaska and Alaska politics. Pearce did see McCabe briefly at one or two of the North Pacific Research Board (NPRB) meetings in Alaska when she was the designated DOI representative on the Board. Pearce denied interacting socially with McCabe.

Pearce also had some past interaction with Alaska Sea Life Center (ASLC) Executive Director Tylan Schrock. While part of the Alaska State legislature, the legislature appropriated about $17.5 million in Exxon Valdez Oil Spill (EVOS) compensation money to the ASLC. Later, while serving as the EVOS DOI Trustee, Pearce had some contact with Schrock through ASLC grants monitoring, research plans, and annual ASLC presentations before the EVOS Council. She also had some contact with Schrock through the NPRB during the brief time in 2004 and 2005 when she was the Board DOI representative. Schrock did call her occasionally when the EVOS trustee council did something he didn't like with regards to ASLC.

Pearce stated that she never had any communication regarding the Park Service properties with Trevor McCabe or Tylan Schrock during the period of time when the National Park Service (NPS) was negotiating with the Centennial Group[1] to purchase the Arcade and Old Solly's properties or later when Schrock/ASLC agreed to buy the Arcade Property. She did state that Trevor McCabe contacted Cam Toohey and asked for his help during the negotiation process but stated that no preference was given McCabe by DOI. Toohey shared with Pearce that McCabe said "the money is there, the language is there – NPS should be buying the property".

Pearce had an opportunity to view the original legislation[2] in draft form in the weeks before it was published and was alarmed that seven parcel numbers had been inserted in the language for acquisition by NPS. In communications with NPS employees Chuck Gilbert, Marcia Blaszak, [redacted] and Anne Castellina she was under the impression that NPS had already determined that they only needed to purchase three properties for the Mary Lowell Center (MLC). Pearce was aware that [redacted] had written the Bill language and she (Pearce) spoke with then Kenai Fjords National Park Superintendent Anne Castellina when Castellina brought the language to DOI. Pearce told Castellina "you can't let that get put in the law – it's awful. [redacted]

After the legislation was passed and it became clear that the NPS "wasn't falling all over itself" to buy the Arcade and Old Solly's properties, Pearce recalled receiving a phone call from Senator Steven's staff member [redacted] wanted to know why NPS wasn't purchasing the two properties.

[1] Formed 2003 by Trevor McCabe, Dale Lindsey, and [redacted]
[2] Public Law 108-447, enacted 12/08/2004 mandated NPS to purchase seven specific parcels of property (listed by tax identification numbers in the Bill) in Seward, AK for the new multi-agency facility to be called the Mary Lowell Center.

Pearce explained that the owners were asking too much money, well over appraised value and NPS didn't need to acquire that much land to build the MLC. Pearce felt that the Senator's personal staff understood the dilemma, although the Senator's Appropriations staff did not.

Pearce took issue with the NPS policy of paying above appraised value to acquire properties under $500,000 when other DOI agencies such as Bureau of Land Management and USFWS could not. She did not care for the inconsistency and complained about the policy to NPS. She also called the newly created DOI Appraisal Services Directorate and spoke with Brian Holly about the pending MLC land acquisitions and asked him to take a look at the negotiations.

Lobbyist Brad Gilman did set up a meeting between Pearce and the visiting Seward delegation of Mayor Vanta Shafer, Vice-Mayor Willard Dunham and City Manager [redacted] although she doesn't recall Gilman actually attending the meeting. The City delegation wanted to discuss the NPS stance on the Washington Street vacation language that was inserted in Section 344 of Public Law 108-447.[3] Pearce told them it was her understanding that the NPS needed to have that street vacated in order to proceed with construction plans for the MLC.

Pearce recalled being shocked a week later when Public Law 108-447 was amended[4] and the leftover NPS land acquisition monies that had been slated to go to the City of Seward were transferred to the ASLC. NPS and DOI were not given an opportunity to comment on the Bill before it was published and no one knew that it was coming. Pearce didn't remember having a conversation with any of Senator Stevens' staff members after the amended legislation passed. She said she could only speculate that it looked like "they got pissed off and tried to find another way to get someone to buy the properties."

Pearce had a conversation with NPS Regional Director Marcia Blaszak after the amended legislation passed when they agreed to stay at "arms length" and not get in the middle of this issue between the ASLC, the Senator's Office and the City of Seward. It was out of the Park Service's hands.

Pearce acknowledged feeling that Anne Castellina was entirely too close to this project and she continued working behind the scenes with Lisa Sutherland to make sure that the project remained in the forefront. Castellina continued to be an advocate pushing for the MLC project. Castellina and Sutherland were personal friends and Castellina traveled to Washington D.C. frequently. Pearce never knew why she was there or who she was representing (she was on the Seward City Council). Things would just appear in Appropriations Bills and DOI would have to ask NPS what the appropriations were for. However, Pearce couched this by saying that all the NPS Alaska Park superintendents visited Congress frequently and it was common practice in Alaska to speak with committee members directly or have them contact the Parks staff directly with funding questions.

Marcia Blaszak or Chuck Gilbert told Pearce that prior to the passing of the original legislation [redacted] told NPS staff that she had in her possession the Centennial Group's appraisals on the Arcade and Old Solly's properties and she was questioning why they were so different from the Governments' appraisals.

Pearce knew that NPS Chuck Gilbert felt a lot of pressure from the Senator's Office to comply with the [3] The same law that mandated NPS to purchase the seven parcels of property in Seward for the MLC also required that the City of Seward vacate a portion of Washington Street for the construction of the MLC.

[4] Section 438 of Public Law 109-54 passed 07/26/2005.

legislation and he felt caught in the middle.

Pearce had no additional information and the interview was ended. A digital recording was made of the interview with the knowledge and consent of Drue Pearce and this recording will be placed into evidence.

financial reports including budgets and quarterly statements before they are distributed to outside sources or to other Board Members to make sure funds are being allocated appropriately. He also looks at the financial statements submitted to the audit firm KPMG for their required annual audit.[2] According to [redacted] his position differs from that of ASLC CFO [redacted] in that he is not "hands on" or a "number cruncher". He does not check the veracity of ASLC's accounting but is merely a point of contact between the ASLC Administration and the SAAMS Board on financial issues. [redacted] does not spend a lot of time on SAAMS Treasury issues in comparison with his other businesses.

[redacted] was not aware of any non-compliance issues with the audit firm KPMG since he had been the SAAMS Treasurer.

He advised that SAAMS/ASLC was evaluating their long term space needs and were currently in the 2nd or 3rd round of drafting a Master Plan for the facility. During the current draft, they had retained an outside evaluation agency using federal waterfront development funds.

When ASLC Executive Director Tylan Schrock presented the SAAMS Board with the proposal to purchase the Railroad Depot from the Chugach Native Corporation several years ago, the Board was aware that the ASLC had space needs. The Board did not seek out this property but recognized the need to expand. [redacted] opined that requests of that nature would generally originate with the ASLC Executive Director as opposed to origination with the SAAMS Board [redacted] advised that the Depot purchase was a lease with an option to buy and they did take the option but could not recall what funds were used to lease/purchase the Railroad Depot.

Regarding the Arcade property [redacted] recalled that Schrock approached the SAAMS Board on an unknown date and advised that there may be an opportunity for additional federal funding. Schrock advised that although the purchase of the Arcade property was not a requirement for the funding, SAAMS/ASLC might want to take a look at the property because it would fold into the Master Plan for the facility. "The question was how do we pay for it? Part of it was that there was this other funding and there could be a residual available for it." According to [redacted] the Board looked at this as two separate issues/decisions. The first issue was actually receiving the federal funds, the second issue was what to do with the money.

[redacted] explained that at the time that the ASLC received the leftover NPS federal land acquisition money the City of Seward "didn't have its act together and was challenged by their City Manager".

[redacted] opined that the SAAMS Board was not initially made aware that the Arcade Property was partially owned by Trevor McCabe and Dale Lindsey [redacted] indicated that he had very limited exposure to McCabe since McCabe was only on the SAAMS Board for a brief period of time. [redacted] knew Lindsey better and respected him from his years on the SAAMS Board. [redacted] was also not immediately cognizant of the connection between McCabe and Senator Ted Stevens.

According to [redacted], the Board was concerned about potential conflicts of interest and potential liabilities with regard to the purchase of the Arcade Property. Specifically, the Board didn't want any liability concerning the needed environmental remediation of the Arcade. There was also concern due to Dale Lindsey's previous relationship with the SAAMS Board and McCabe's links to Senator Stevens. "We knew because of the players that this would be open to scrutiny." The Board consensus was that full disclosure would be important and the Board needed to create an "arms length transaction". [redacted] believed that the Board wanted to take a look at the fair market value of the property through some kind of independent assessment but recalled that this was a challenge due to the lack of comparable properties around Seward. He thought that Schrock had a 3rd party look at the comparable properties but couldn't recall who the 3rd party was.[3] He indicated that the Board did not pay for a separate appraisal of the Arcade Property. After this assessment was complete, Schrock brought some type of written assessment to the Board's Executive Committee that led the Committee to agree on an appropriate asking price [redacted] said the Board was very "circumspect" about paying a fair price and that subsequent property negotiations between Schrock and the Centennial Group[4] were "tough". The Board required that any offer for the Arcade property force the sellers to complete environmental cleanup as part of the sale.

[redacted] advised that currently there are no plans in place for building on the Arcade property because the Board doesn't want to rush the creation of the ASLC Master Plan. Although formal plans for the property haven't been introduced to the Board, an architect is in the process of creating draft proposals for the site.

When asked about Senator Steven's interest and support of the Sea Life Center [redacted] indicated that the support was material and significant. [redacted] guessed that 80% - 90% of all federal earmark money coming to the ASLC was allocated by Senator Stevens through grants and "grant-like" distributions. He stated that the vast majority of federal funding was non-discretionary in nature and was tied to specific research at the ASLC facilities. He didn't believe that Stevens or any of his staff had ever appeared before the SAAMS Board.

[redacted] was not aware of any money directed to the ASLC from the Alaska Fisheries Marketing Board (AFMB)[5] but did state that the ASLC had received funding from the North Pacific Research Board (NPRB)[6].

He opined that very little funding went toward lobbying efforts for the ASLC. He was aware of one issue several years ago that required federal lobbying efforts. ASLC had a debt issue and lobbying efforts garnered Senator Steven's help in alleviating the debt through some kind of federal appropriation. The appropriation was used to pay off the construction debt on the building the ASLC is housed in. [redacted] indicated that they did maintain a federal lobbyist to keep good communication between Senator Steven's Office and the ASLC. He could not recall who the ASLC federal lobbyist was but did list the State lobbyist as Kent Dawson.

According to [redacted] although the SAAMS Board would have made the decisions on how the [3] During the interview with Tylan Schrock on 05/14/2007, he advised that he had used copies of the NPS appraisal and the Centennial Group appraisal in order to determine fair market value for the Arcade property. He did not hire a 3rd party assessor.

[4] A Limited Liability Company consisting of members Trevor McCabe, Dale Lindsey, and [redacted]

[5] The Alaska Fisheries Marketing Board (AFMB) was created by Senator Stevens in 2002 through an appropriation in Public Law 108-7 to market, develop and promote Alaska seafood. Trevor McCabe and Ben Stevens (Senator Steven's son) sat on the AFMB Board of Directors for a time.

[6] The NPRB was established and funded through Appropriations by Senator Stevens in September, 2001 under section 5008 of Public Law 106-291. The Board is administered at the ASLC and Executive Director Tylan Schrock sits on the NPRB Board.

lobbyist(s) should be used and how much money should be spent on lobbying efforts, Tylan Schrock would have directed the lobbyists' efforts and would have been the point of contact for the lobbyists.

[redacted] discussed the Board's role in approving the venture between ASLC and Alaska Northern Outfitters (ANO) to provide educational boat tours from a portable dock at the Center. According to [redacted] Schrock brought the concept to the Board as part of an ongoing discussion about the ASLC waterfront and what could be done with a dock. [redacted] believed that ASLC only provided a limited amount of funding for the project, estimated between $15,000 - $30,000, to be used to develop education programs specific to a boat. [redacted] expressed the view that ASLC had very little exposure or liability on this venture. Schrock explained to the Board that ANO had approached him with the proposal that they would buy and operate a boat and build the temporary dock at the ASLC if the Sea Life Center would provide scientific staff on the vessel to teach the passengers during the tour. [redacted] believed that the revenues from this project would be divided through some kind of revenue share. He was not aware that McCabe owned part of ANO until "later" and it was a concern for the Board.

Cook Inlet Region, Inc. complained that the agreement between ASLC and ANO had been reached without any kind of competitive bidding process.

[redacted] indicated that the contract between ANO and ASLC was cancelled earlier this year because ANO had asked ASLC to absorb more of the overhead costs surrounding the operation and the Board was not prepared to do this.

[redacted] demurred that ASLC had signed the new Tidelands lease agreement with the City of Seward and that permitted ANO to install the portable dock at the Center. He believed that the agreement was in place primarily to keep up the relationship between the City of Seward and the ASLC and the lease agreement was minimal, perhaps $1 per year.

SYNOPSIS

On 06/12/07 federal Investigators interviewed Centennial Group LLC partner Dale Lindsey and he provided information concerning his relationship(s) with Trevor McCab[redacted] Tylan Schrock[redacted] and Senator Ted Stevens. He also provided background on his association with the Alaska Sea Life Center (ASLC), the Northrim Bank and his role in the Centennial Group. He further provided background on the formation, purpose, and dynamics of the Group and their dealings with the National Park Service (NPS).

DETAILS

On 06/12/2007 at 1030 hours Department of Commerce Office of Inspector General (DOC/OIG) Special Agent[redacted] and I met with Centennial Group partner Dale Lindsey at his residence located a[redacted] Lindsey voluntarily provided the following information:

Lindsey is the Chairman of Harbor Enterprises Inc., a petroleum marketing and distribution company that he and his wif[redacted] own. The company has affiliate companies including Petro Marine Services and they own 11 fuel bulk plants in Alaska and Canada.

Lindsey was a founding member of Northrim Bank and sat on their Board of Directors for 13 years. Lindsey acknowledged close ties to the Bank and even admitted to an economic venture[redacted] of the current Northrim Bank Board President. Lindsey created Eagle Enterprises Inc. to "hel[redacted] get his feet on the ground".[1]

Lindsey indicated that even though he was the one with the strong relationship to the Bank, it was [redacted] that hired Northrim Bank to conduct an appraisal of the Old Solly's and Arcade Properties through the Centennial Group.[2] According to Lindsey, McCabe was aware of his connection to the Bank. Agents note – It is unclear why the Centennial Group chose to go through any bank for this appraisal since no financing was needed or used to obtain the properties.

DAL CAR LLC is the personal investment arm of Lindsey's companies utilized for his and his wife's personal financial investments. They set it up as a Limited Liability Company and a Revocable Trust in order to maximize profit while adhering to federal estate tax laws.

Lindsey acknowledged partnership in an additional Limited Liability Company entitled Resurrection Bodyworks, LLC.[3] He stated that this was a healthclub and although he owned the building he was never part of the day to day operations of the facility. He sold the building to [redacted] at a $30,000.00 loss around 12/31/2006. He reasoned that it was worth it to take the loss in order to help his good friends attempt to "make a go of it". The [redacted] do some of his yardwork and janitorial services for some of his other businesses.[4]

Lindsey described his relationship with Trevor McCabe. He knew [redacted] Trevor's parents, reasonably well and socialized with them in Seward years ago. He never thought about Trevor until after he became a part of Senator Steven's staff and went through Georgetown Law School. After McCabe returned to Alaska Lindsey started to bump into him more often on fisheries related issues. Lindsey owned several crab boats in the Bering Sea for a time and McCabe was heavily involved in fisheries regulation and lobbying. According to Lindsey, people "knew McCabe had influence".

Lindsey's fishing vessels were independent but did sell to larger processing plants including Trident and Icicle.[5] Lindsey indicated that he would run into McCabe and Brad Gilman[6], childhood friends, on issues such as fish quotas and problems with the North Pacific Fisheries Council. He advised that he never got heavily involved with fishing because his core business was petroleum and the two did not necessarily mix well. Lindsey sold his boats and left the fishing industry around 5 years ago. He sold his last boat to the boat's skipper, [redacted] Lindsey never had any dealings with the Alaska Fisheries Marketing Board (AFMB).[7]

Lindsey also described his relationship with Senator Ted Stevens. He recalled knowing Stevens from the time before he became a Senator when he was a state Prosecutor. Lindsey's relationship with Stevens was such that he could pick up the phone and the Senator would return his call. That being said, Lindsey expressed the opinion that he had never attempted to exercise any undue influence on the Senator.

properties. On 03/17/2004 Northrim Bank contracted with [redacted] of the Howard and Wing Appraisal Firm to complete the appraisals.

[3] The Alaska Department of Commerce website lists Lindsey as a 20% partner of Resurrection Bodyworks, LLC along with fellow members [redacted] (51%), TMT Corporation (20% - also own Kenai Fjords Tours, LTd.) [redacted] (6%), and [redacted] (3%).

[4] Personal observations show that the Resurrection Bodyworks healthclub is less than a block up the street from the buildings the NPS purchased to build the Mary Lowell Center.

[5] Icicle Seafoods is a Partner Company in the Bristol Bay Economic Development Corporation, for which Trevor McCabe is the registered lobbyist. Trident Seafoods is a member of the At-Sea Processors Association, which Trevor McCabe directed.

[6] Brad Gilman is a lobbyist specializing in fisheries issues and is the lobbyist of record for both the City of Seward and the Alaska Sea Life Center.

[7] The Alaska Fisheries Marketing Board was created by Senator Stevens under Public Law 108-7 and Trevor McCabe is a former member of the Board of Directors.

Lindsey did not recall any time when he would have made a personal request of Stevens to influence Congress on an issue that would have affected him financially. Lindsey made three trips to Washington D.C. to lobby against the BP acquisition of Arco Oil seven or eight years ago because he thought the deal would be bad for Alaska. During that trip, he testified before the Senate Energy Committee that Alaska Senator Frank Murkowski chaired and met with "key players" including John Katz, Alaska Director of State and Federal Relations and Special Counsel to the Governor in WDC. Although he met with Senator Stevens twice during these trips, he didn't believe that the Senator ever took a stand on the issue.

Lindsey did accompany McCabe once when McCabe met with Senator Stevens in Steven's Anchorage Office. The conversation lasted about 15 minutes and Lindsey couldn't recall if Centennial Group issues were discussed. He did indicate that it seemed very natural for McCabe to ask the Senator for favors.

Lindsey didn't know but didn't believe that Senator Stevens would have transferred federal money purely to benefit McCabe. His understanding was that someone had angered Sutherland and she was the one who had the leftover NPS land acquisition money moved through amended legislation from the City of Seward to the ASLC.

Lindsey admitted he and [redacted] have supported Stevens financially for as long as he has been in office by making the maximum allowable annual political contributions to Steven's campaign.

Lindsey named Mark Hickey as his Alaska/Juneau based lobbyist on oil and gas issues. He tried to hire Brad Gilman's firm to represent his lobbying interests on Capital Hill but Gilman declared some sort of conflict and referred him to another firm.

Lindsey acknowledged sitting on the SAAMS Board at the Sea Life Center for a time right after the facility opened. He described the facilities'prospects as "bleak" during this time due to lack of revenue sources and even donated $450,000 of his personal money to the ASLC around seven or eight years ago. He indicated that current ASLC Executive Director Tylan Schrock was aware of this donation.

Lindsey described his relationship with Schrock as "good" although they don't see much of each other. Lindsey expressed pride in Schrock and stated that the ASLC was fortunate to have him. Lindsey further described Schrock as a sharp and ethical person. Lindsey was on the Executive Search Committee at the ASLC during the time when Schrock was hired to fill the vacant position as Executive Director but stated that he was not instrumental in selecting Schrock for the job.

Lindsey surmised that it would have made sense for the Centennial Group to approach Schrock with the idea of purchasing the Arcade property for the ASLC prior to the transfer of federal funds to the ASLC but Lindsey could not confirm that this actually happened.

Lindsey described McCabe's relationship with Schrock as "cordial" and stated that they sat on the ASLC/SAAMS Board together.

A couple of years before the Centennial Group purchased Old Solly's and the Arcade, Lindsey made an offer to purchase Old Solly's from Blazy Construction Company because he had previously leased office space in that building and wanted to update the building himself and lease office space to others. This original offer was rejected by [redacted] and Lindsey didn't pursue it further. Lindsey believed that [redacted] told McCabe about his former interest in the building and that is why McCabe sought him out to form the Centennial Group.

When McCabe approached Lindsey with the idea of creating the Centennial Group, McCabe had already placed options to purchase on both the Old Solly's and Arcade buildings and hired an architect to create plans for a multi-agency facility on the site. McCabe's plan was to purchase the buildings, tear down the current structures, build the new facility, and lease it back to NPS. Lindsey showed me the architectural drawings commissioned by McCabe. The drawing was signed "Thor Erickson – 03" and Lindsey believed that the architectural firm hired by McCabe was Livingston Sloan.

Lindsey described former NPS Kenai Fjords National Park Superintendent Anne Castellina as a personal friend of his and indicated that she was not fond of the idea of a lease-back situation.

Lindsey believed that each member of the Centennial Group put $50,000 front money into the venture when the LLC was created. He did believe, however, that McCabe could have completed the property purchases without his financial assistance.

Lindsey advised that McCabe was the person that opened the checking account for the Centennial Group and was the only person with access to the account.

Lindsey purchased both the Old Solly's and Arcade Buildings using cash from his DAL CAR LLC account and nothing was financed. Lindsey believed they purchased the Arcade Building for $220,000. No appraisals were done on the properties prior to purchase. When the Arcade was purchased, the building was run down and largely vacant of tenants except for a pawn shop. Lindsey described his interest in the venture as a desire to clean up downtown Seward. He characterized the Centennial Group formation as one of the worst business deals he ever got involved in. He was unaccustomed to dealing with the Federal Government over real property sales and expressed frustration with the slowness of the process. He did not anticipate having his money tied up in this venture for years and blamed NPS for not coming to terms in the negotiation process with the Centennial Group. However, Lindsey described his role in the negotiation process as minimal. According to Lindsey, he fronted the money while [redacted] and Trevor McCabe took more active roles in the land negotiations.

Lindsey confirmed that during the negotiation process with NPS the Centennial Group did place an option on the Legends Property in order to provide more leverage in dealing with NPS. The option was for right of refusal and when it was clear that the "package offer" to sell all three properties to NPS was not received well Lindsey advised the Group to rescind their offer on Legends.[8]

According to Lindsey, Senator Steven' [redacted] visited Seward several times during the development of the Mary Lowell Center concept and seemed very interested in doing something with the waterfront area. [redacted] even had sketches of [redacted] own showing [redacted] vision for Seward waterfront development.

[8] Legends was one of the seven property parcels that NPS was required to purchase under Public Law 108-447. According to Title Company documents, The Centennial Group purchased an option on the Legends Property on 02/10/04 for an option period of 02/10/04 – 04/30/04. It appears that they cancelled the option on this property around 02/18/04. However, in a letter to NPS [redacted] on 03/19/04, the Group offered all three properties to NPS at the package price of $2,050,000.

At one point in the process [redacted] joined representatives from the City of Seward, NPS, the U.S. Forest Service and the University of Alaska on a waterfront cruise aboard Lindsey's yacht.[9] After the boating excursion, part of the group, to include [redacted] and Trevor McCabe, met in Lindsey's conference room to discuss waterfront development as a whole. Lindsey did not recall discussing the Centennial Group properties during this meeting but was not with [redacted] and Trevor McCabe for the entire meeting.

Each time [redacted] visited Seward Lindsey met with [redacted] Topics of conversation included a dock concept presented by [redacted] on the Seward waterfront beside the Sea Life Center where a new NOAA research vessel could dock. The research vessel would replace the boat the University of Alaska was currently using for research. He advised that they might have discussed the Centennial Group properties during these visits but he couldn't recall the precise nature of the conversations.

Lindsey described [redacted] relationship with McCabe as "pretty close" but didn't elaborate further other than to say that they had worked closely together in Steven's Office.

Lindsey conceded that McCabe told him he had discussed the Arcade property deal with [redacted] on multiple occasions and Lindsey knew that McCabe traveled to Washington D.C. several times during the course of the property negotiations with NPS. Lindsey did not accompany McCabe on these trips and didn't know how often Centennial Group issues were on his agenda.

Lindsey was not entirely trusting of his partners in the Centennial Group and expressed concerns that McCabe and [redacted] "talked in circles" with him. He advised that McCabe "walked the line" and "pushed the envelope" ethically and stated he would not conduct business with him again.

During one meeting, Lindsey described a heated exchange between the Centennial Group members. McCabe wanted to add some additional environmental costs to the contract between the Centennial Group and the ASLC for the Arcade property. Lindsey told him "no – we took on this responsibility and you will honor whatever we originally agreed to – there will be no splitting of hairs." He further told his partners that chances were good that anything they did would eventually be audited by the Government and they better make sure everything on this transaction was "above board" and "kosher". He made it clear that he didn't want anything done that would embarrass him, the Senator, or the Sea Life Center.

Lindsey briefly discussed the demolition of the Arcade building. He felt comfortable hiring [redacted] [redacted][10] as the foreman for the demolition to represent the Centennial Group on a daily basis at the site.

The following documents were found with potential relevance to this investigation:

1. An e-mail dated 05/28/2003 from Drue Pearce t[redacted] with carbon copies to various individuals including Trevor McCabe regarding the North Pacific Research Board (NPRB) Investment Policy. Pearce admonished [redacted] for prematurely approaching Senator Stevens for a "legislative fix" concerning the way MMS was investing/managing NPRB funds in the "EIRF" fund.
2. An e-mail dated 03/03/2004 from Drue Pearce t[redacted] regarding the upcoming ACIA (Arctic Climate Impact Assessment) workshop slated for 03/08/2004 at the Alaska Sea Life Center (ASLC) in Seward, AK. Attached to the e-mail was a draft invitation list. Some of the "invitees" included Drue Pearce, Tylan Schrock, and Trevor McCabe.
3. An e-mail dated 04/08/2004 from the Resource Development Council to Drue Pearce, subject "RDC Event and Issue Update". Listed among three upcoming RDC events was a 04/15/2004 meeting at the Petroleum Club in Anchorage, AK during which Trevor McCabe, Project Coordinator, was supposed to speak on the topic, "Renewing Alaska's Economy: A New Forest Products Venture for the Railbelt."
4. An e-mail dated 04/08/2004 from USGS [redacted] to Drue Pearce listing the 61 projects funded by the North Pacific Research Board (NPRB) through the Environmental Improvement and Restoration Fund (EIRF) between 2002 and 2004. One of the recipients for funding was the Alaska Sea Life Center. The funding list was sent to multiple people including Tylan Schrock, Trevor McCabe, and Senator Steven's staff members [redacted] and [redacted]
5. E-mail communications dated 07/21/2004 between Drue Pearce, her assistan[redacted] and DOI Employee [redacted] regarding ethics reporting requirements surrounding Pearce's participation in Senator Steven's fishing tournament in Alaska on July 4.
6. An e-mail dated 08/19/2004 from [redacted] to [redacted] confirming her intent to attend the September 29 – 30 NPRB Board Meeting in Anchorage on behalf of DOI.
7. E-mail correspondence dated 09/08/2004 and 09/09/2004 between various DOI employees including Drue Pearce about the DOI seat on the NPRB. They discuss Senator Steven's role in the creation and the funding of the NPRB and who should take Pearce's place as the DOI representative on the Board.
8. E-mail correspondence dated 09/23/2004 between Drue Pearce, and NPS employees Anne Castellina and Chuck Gilbert regarding NPS authority to pay in excess of appraised value on land acquisitions. Gilbert advised that Congress reprogrammed the guidelines regarding over-appraisal acquisitions in 2001 in House Conference Report 107-234 and Revised Section 301(3) of Public Law 91-646. This change allowed NPS to acquire properties appraised at less than $500,000 for more than appraised value without submitting a prior request for approval to the Congressional Appropriations Committees. According to Gilbert, NPS policy requires that any over-appraisal recommendations be submitted to the WASO Land Resources Division Chief for approval. Pearce responded that "it doesn't matter if Congress says okay if you cannot get it out of this building." Pearce referred Castellina and Gilbert to Brian Holly to review the appraisals. She warned Castellina, "We are better off to stay away from Seward – let the Forest Service deal with the purchase and keep DOI out of it. I don't think you'll get a purchase much above appraisal through at this point."

9. An e-mail dated 11/18/2004 from NPS Marcia Blaszak to Drue Pearce and [redacted] cc: Anne Castellina, Subject: Fw: [redacted] version of KEFJ language. Attached was a draft version of future Section 344 of Public Law 108-447, written b[redacted] Senate Appropriations Committee Staff. This version states that NPS "should buy as many of the seven parcels of real property in Seward, AK identified by tax identification numbers.....that are required for the Mary Lowell Center (MLC), provided the owners of such parcels are willing sellers." [redacted] indicated that she preferred this version to the version that [redacted] Senator Steven's personal staff, wrote. Attached was previous correspondence from [redacted] to [redacted] and Anne Castellina asking Castellina and [redacted] to get together and make any necessary changes to the Bill draft language.
10. An e-mail response to item #9 dated 11/19/2004 from Drue Pearce to Marcia Blaszak, CC: Anne Castellina. Pearce states, "I just want to make sure we get those tax ID numbers out of there – you don't want or need to buy all that property. Anne, will you please double check with [redacted] today and make sure the language conforms?"
11. A string of e-mail correspondence dated 01/21/2005 through 01/24/2005 between Drue Pearce, DOI employee [redacted] and NPS employees [redacted] Jeff Mow, and Vic Knox. Attached was an MLC Briefing/Project status statement written by Jeff Mow, dated 01/20/2005. Under the Current Status section of the briefing statement, it said that due to the provision in the Interior and Relates Agencies Appropriations Act of 2005, the NPS is now required to utilize combined funds to purchase the seven parcels within 60 days. Pearce sent an e-mail to various NPS employees seeking clarification on the briefing statement. She expressed her understanding that NPS wasn't going to buy land it didn't need. Vic Knox responded that "We're proceeding with the direction Congress gave us, which is to buy all seven parcels within 60 days." Pearce replies, "I thought there was a verbal understanding with the Senator's office that we weren't going to purchase all seven..."
12. A forwarded e-mail dated 02/25/2005 from DOI [redacted] to Drue Pearce, subject: Some thoughts on Seward Multi-Agency Facility (from Trevor McCabe). The original e-mail was sent from Trevor McCabe to NPS Chuck Gilbert and DOI employee Cam Toohey. McCabe presented an argument to DOI/NPS for why his Centennial Group properties were key to the MLC project and the requested price was appropriate. He stated, "You have a great plan for the NPS, visitors, and for Seward. It just seems like it's time to get it done."
13. An e-mail dated 03/01/2005 from Drue Pearce to Marcia Blaszak and Vic Knox with CC's to Cam Toohey and Brian Holly, subject: Seward land Purchase for Mary Lowell Center. Pearce cautioned Blaszak and Knox to fully brief DOI/MAI Chief Appraiser Brian Holly on the Seward land purchases as soon as possible. She again expressed concern that NPS would be forced to purchase land they didn't need for the MLC. She advised that one of the land owners had been in contact with DOI Cam Toohey and expressed displeasure with the NPS offering price for his property even though the offer was above appraised value. She stated that "I do not intend for the decisions regarding these sales to be made at a political level and I do not want the Park Service or the Secretary to be embarrassed."
14. An e-mail dated 03/18/2005 from Drue Pearce to DOI Office of Solicitor [redacted] subject: RE: Centennial Group proposals and letters to committees. [redacted] forwarded a draft letter(s) addressed to the Chairmen of the Senate Subcommittee on Interior and Related Agencies, the Committee on Appropriations, and the House Subcommittee on Interior and Related Agencies and requested comments. The drafts indicated that NPS had multiple concerns surrounding the MLC land acquisition negotiations between NPS and the Centennial Group, one of those concerns being the inflated asking price(s) by the Group. The letter also indicated that NPS had already acquired enough property without the Arcade and Old Sollys parcels to proceed with MLC construction and design. Pearce replied that [redacted] should stress the percent above appraised value being asked by the Centennial Group and the fact that NPS had already acquired sufficient property for the project.

15. On 04/01/2005 Pearce sent a follow-up e-mail to [redacted] to inquire if the Committee letters referenced in Item 14 went out.
16. E-mail correspondence dated 04/11/2005 from [redacted] to Drue Pearce shows that Pearce received and declined an invitation to attend a reception to welcome [redacted] into [redacted] new position on the Commerce Committee.
17. E-mail correspondence dated 05/02/2005 from Drue Pearce to [redacted] and [redacted] Subject: Trip to Juneau. Pearce referenced a recent telephone conversation with [redacted] Alaska Senate President about her potential testimony before a State Joint Committee hearing.
18. An e-mail dated 05/09/2005 from DOI Cam Toohey to [redacted] cc: Drue Pearce requesting an update on the status of the NPS Seward letter to Congress.
19. On 05/10/2005 Pearce sent an e-mail to Senator Stevens staffer [redacted] in response to [redacted] inquiry on the status of the purchase of the remaining property for the MLC. [redacted] expressed the importance of getting this done in order to obtain construction funds for the project. Pearce was not aware of the status but said she would inquire.
20. An e-mail dated 05/10/2005 from [redacted] to Drue Pearce. Pearce was attempting to make an ethics determination on whether she could attend a luncheon on 05/18/05 benefiting the NPS Morris Thompson Cultural and Visitors Center. The event was hosted by Senator Ted Stevens, Senator Lisa Murkowski, Congressman Don Young, and Alaska Governor Frank Murkowski and the invitation was extended by BP.
21. An e-mail dated 06/03/2005 from Paul Hoffman to Drue Pearce, subject: Re: Seward Land Deal. Pearce and Hoffman discussed the final editing efforts by [redacted] on the Seward Congressional Committee letters. Pearce asked Hoffman if NPS should go back and make one final offer to the Centennial Group. Hoffman voiced [redacted] uncertainty about whether the transfer of surplus funds to the City of Seward was contingent upon the City vacating Washington Street.
22. E-mail correspondence dated 07/12/2005 and 07/13/2005 between City of Seward lobbyist Brad Gilman, [redacted] and Drue Pearce regarding the upcoming Washington D.C. visit by Seward Mayor Vanta Shafer. The attached schedule showed that Shafer was slated to meet with Senator Stevens at 2 pm on 07/20/2005. Gilman scheduled time for Shafer to meet with Pearce (in lieu of Anne Castellina who recently retired) to discuss the status of the proposed NPS facility in Seward. Gilman indicated hearing rumors that Pearce and DOI Cam Toohey were "very unhappy with the lobbying efforts of one of the owner groups on Capital Hill." Pearce responded that she didn't have a problem with "Dale and Trevor, the two she knew – trying to get the best deal possible for their property." She did comment that she felt they speculated a bit further than was wise when they purchased the properties. She expressed frustration with the inconsistency between DOI agencies on their ability or inability to make above appraisal offers on properties. Pearce also made the claim that "We also were unhappy with legislation that tried to force DOI to buy all seven properties when we only needed three. It appeared that the Park Service had perhaps actually supported that language."
23. E-mail correspondence dated 06/17/2005 from Chuck Gilbert to Drue Pearce and others regarding the 06/08/2005 final offer to the Centennial Group. Gilbert referenced a telephone call he received from Centennial Group member [redacted] that day indicating that the Group would deal with their properties separately, keeping the Arcade and possibly selling Old Solly's to NPS. [redacted] submitted a counter-offer on Old Solly's of $495,000.

24. E-mail correspondence dated 06/28/2005 from Marcia Blaszak to Chuck Gilbert, CC: Drue Pearce and others, subject: Re: Old Solly's offer. Gilbert advised [redacted] on behalf of the Centennial Group, agreed to sell the Old Sollys property for $455,000. Blaszak offered to help edit/update the still pending letter to the Congressional Appropriations Committees to reflect this deal.

25. An e-mail dated 07/20/2005 from Drue Pearce to Marcia Blaszak, subject: Seward. Pearce described a recent meeting she had with Seward Mayor Vanta Shafer, the City Manager and an ASLC Board Member in the absence of their lobbyist, Brad Gilman [redacted] Shafer gave Pearce the impression that they would ask Senator Stevens to repeal the Bill language requiring the City of Seward to vacate Washington Street. Pearce told Shafer that under current law, the remaining land acquisition funds could not be transferred to the City until the street was vacated. Pearce advised Shafer that the letter from DOI to the Congressional Appropriations Committees regarding the status of the NPS Seward land acquisitions was still at DOI and hadn't gone to the Committees yet.

26. An e-mail dated 07/22/2005 from Marcia Blaszak to Senator Stevens' Appropriations Committee staffer [redacted] with cc's to Pearce, Hoffman [redacted] and others, subject: Seward Property update. Blaszak attached a copy of the draft letter she anticipated would be sent out next week by DOI to Chairman Burns advising him of the status of the NPS efforts to purchase MLC properties in compliance with Public Law 108-477. Blaszak also attached for reference a worksheet showing property valuations, owner's asking price, and offer amounts made by NPS on all potential MLC properties.

27. An e-mail dated 07/25/2005 from Marcia Blaszak in which she recounts separate conversations she had with Ted Stevens' staffers [redacted] and [redacted] advised Blaszak "they" had a meeting scheduled with Senator Stevens to go over the information she (Blaszak) provided them regarding the Seward land purchases. [redacted] sked Blaszak if NPS had acquired adequate land for the MLC project and indicated an awareness of the need to change the Bill language to remove the Washington Street vacation language. [redacted] turned down Blaszak's offer to assist in correcting the Bill language.

28. An e-mail dated 07/27/2005 from Drue Pearce to [redacted] subject: Re: McCain, et al. [redacted] in the NPS Congressional Office was trying to line up a trip to Kenai Fjords on August 17 for an unidentified group of individuals. [redacted] replied, "I hear Trevor McCabe is taking them fishing."

29. E-mail correspondence dated 07/28/2005 and 07/29/2005 between Drue Pearce, Chuck Gilbert, [redacted] and Senator Stevens' staffer [redacted] Schrooten and Gilbert were trying to determine Senator Stevens' final position on the Arcade Property before presenting the MLC preferred concept design alternatives in a public forum on 08/10/05. [redacted] confirmed they could move forward but wanted to discuss the related new language in the Interior Appropriations Bill with Pearce.

30. E-mail correspondence dated 07/29/05 between [redacted] and Pearce and forwarded to Gilbert and Knox, subject: proposed language with an attachment titled: 7-26-05 interior amendment nps.doc. [redacted] states that the Interior Bill "merely modifies existing law to say that NPS does not have to purchase all of the properties listed in the FYO5 Omnibus and allows the remaining funds to go to the Sealife Center for their projects related to waterfront development." Pearce responded, "the City is expecting the excess funds – that was the deal all along. Why the change to the SeaLife Center? I don't want in the middle but this will make some folks really angry, I think. City still wants to complete the rest of the redevelopment plan – which includes a library, etc." Pearce then forwards the message to Gilbert and Knox with the comment, "Expect some fireworks. I don't think the City knows about this. Maybe SeaLife Center is going to buy Old Solly's – now that would be a sweetheart deal of ever there was one!"

31. An e-mail dated 10/28/2005 from NPS Jeff Mow to Drue Pearce advising her of a lengthy conversation he had with ADN Investigative Reporter Tom Kizzia regarding MLC.

The following documents were found with potential relevance to this investigation:

1. An e-mail dated 06/03/2005 from Paul Hoffman to NPS employee Marcia Blaszak, subject: Re: Seward Properties. Hoffman attached a draft letter addressed to the Senate Chairman of the Subcommittee on Interior and Related Agencies and the Committee on Appropriations concerning the NPS Mary Lowell Center (MLC) land acquisition status. Hoffman incorporated technical changes provided by NPS employees Chuck Gilbert and [redacted] and inserted some of his own language in the closing paragraphs. Among the additions included the sentences, "Until such time as we can negotiate purchases at prices that are much closer to fair market value as determined by an appraisal prepared in accordance with UASFLA, we feel strongly that the NPS should not purchase the Arcade and Old Solly parcels. However, any of the remaining funds appropriated for this project could be transferred to the City of Seward for its use as provided by law."

SYNOPSIS

During a telephonic interview with retired Kenai Fjords National Park Superintendent Anne Castellina on 05/16/2007 she revealed the existence of personal notebooks and journals she left at the Park when she transferred to Washington D.C.

On 09/17/2007 current Kenai Fjords National Park Superintendent Jeff Mow contacted me and advised he had located a binder of Anne Castellina's titled "Seward Waterfront Committee and Multi-Agency Visitor Center Project". He offered to forward the original binder to me after making copies for himself.

On 09/25/2007 the binder arrived at the Department of Interior Office of Inspector General (DOI/OIG) Portland Resident Office via Fed Ex tracking number 8613 6663 4695.

DETAILS

The binder was a three ring binder with the following tabbed sections: Membership, Meetings, Portico, Maps, In Water Projects, VC Sites, University, Resolutions, NPS Stuff, Seward Exercise, Funding, Compliance, Acquisition, and Public Comment. In addition, there were various papers and free floating business cards contained in the front and back binder folders. The contents of the binder were examined and the following documents were found with potential relevance to this investigation:

1. An e-mail dated 09/02/2003 from NPS landscape architect and Multi-Agency facility project manager [redacted] to Anne Castellina filed under the "Meetings" tab. [redacted] advised he had not returned a phone message he received the previous week from Centennial Group member Dale Lindsey. [redacted] inquired if Castellina had spoken with Lindsey in the interim.
2. Handwritten notes written on two 6" by 9" torn pieces of steno book paper with a date of 05/30/2003 and filed under the "Meetings" tab. One of the notations states "Approach triangle owners re: passing property through to us for what they paid go with Mayor and Chuck. Will need appraisals before we can get an option to buy. Can get agreement to have them sell at appraised value though."[1] A third page of notes appears to contain meeting minutes from a 05/20/2003 teleconference with "Ted and staff [redacted][2] The notes continue, "Not all in one year – over 3 years – [redacted] pushed for $12M - $4M - $4M - $4M Didn't get too specific w/what would be bought other than mentioning conference center and multi-agency center. Was deliberately vague. Jim W. Morhard is new Chief of Staff for App. Committee. Will be visiting Seward in 1-2 weeks."

3. A document entitled "Seward Waterfront Committee Organizational Meeting, Thursday February 20, 2003, City Council Chambers" located under the "Meetings" tab. The Committee was officially organized on this date and tasked by Seward Mayor Stu Clark with finding a site for the multi-agency facility. Malcolm Brown, City Planner, was charged with arranging for all committee meetings to be tape recorded. The boundaries of the site selection study were also determined.
4. A document entitled "Seward Waterfront Study, A National Park Service Planning Strategy" filed under the "Meetings" tab. Under the paragraph titled "A New Direction", the document expounds on the existence of a proposed commercial dock as part of the downtown Seward waterfront redevelopment plan. Further in the paper under the heading "Tentative Schedule" the firm Peratovich, Nottingham and Drage, Inc. is identified as the company the City of Seward has contracted with to build this commercial dock.
5. A document titled "Seward Waterfront Study, Pre-Design Requirements" dated March 1, 2003, written by NPS Alaska Support Office for the Portico Group. This document was filed under the tab "Portico". On page 13, NPS tasks the Portico Group with submitting a preliminary analysis of eventual facility ownership alternatives including Government construct to own or long term lease options.
6. A 10 page written proposal titled "Downtown Seward Arcade/Solly Multi-Agency Facility Proposal Lindsey/McCabe [redacted] March 24, 2003".[3] Proposal offered a "Build to Suit" concept which included the architectural firm Livingston Slone[4] and listed design highlights to include 33,000 square feet for Office/Visitor and 11,000 square feet for Indoor parking. This document was filed under the tab "VC Sites".
7. A proposal and cover letter dated November 11, 2002 from MacSwain Associates to Anne Castellina/Kenai Fjords National Park, also filed under the tab "VC Sites". [redacted] requested that Castellina consider his parcels of property for the proposed Multi-agency facility and listed the various attributes of the property.[5]

[1] On other documents in this binder the Centennial Group properties (Old Solly's and Arcade) are referred to as "the triangle properties".

[2] Likely refers to Senator Ted Stevens and his staff, [redacted]

[3] Future Centennial Group members [redacted] Trevor McCabe and [redacted] Proposal written BEFORE the Centennial Group was officially formed/incorporated on 04/14/2003 and before McCabe exercised his option(s) to buy the Arcade and Old Solly's buildings on 04/30/2003.

[4] Reference is made to my interview with Seward appraiser and property owne [redacted] on 08/07/2007. [redacted] advised Livingston Slone denied his request to create a Multi-agency facility for his property in 2002 and sited conflict of interest because Trevor McCabe had already hired the firm for the same purpose. Further reference is made to my interview with Centennial Group partner Dale Lindsey on 06/21/2007. During the interview Lindsey showed me some architectural renderings of a building he said was commissioned by Trevor McCabe through the architectural firm Livingston Slone. Per Lindsey, the architectural drawings were of a multi-agency facility that McCabe wanted to build and lease back to NPS.

[5] During an interview with [redacted] on 08/07/2007 [redacted] expressed doubt that his property was adequately considered by Castellina for the Multi-agency facility.

8. A letter dated October 15, 2002 from [redacted] of the University of Alaska to Robert Arnberger, NPS Alaska Regional Director and Dave Gibbons, US Forest Service (USFS) Forest Supervisor, Chugach National Forest. The letter was filed under the tab "University". In the letter [redacted] references a letter he received from NPS and USFS dated 09/19/2002 wherein unlisted concerns were expressed. Near the conclusion of the letter [redacted] makes the statement, "It appears unlikely that the university will decide to simply sell the property. This does not imply that the Park Service and Forest Service interests cannot be met in conjunction with those of the University and others in Seward. The university is still open to sharing possibilities and looking at various options that may be possible, but simply too much time has passed to invoke the earlier intentions of the university for a simple sale."
9. A copy of a newspaper article titled "UA reconsiders plan to sell Rae Building". There is no date on the article, but the attached fax transmission sheet from Anne Castellina to Marcia Blaszak dated 10/11/02 indicated that it was an article published the same week in the Seward Phoenix Log. The article was filed under the tab "University". The first few lines of the article state "The University of Alaska seems to be getting cold feet about the idea of selling the K.M. Rae Building at Third and Railway to the federal government for use as a multi-agency facility." The article implied that any new searches for building sites for a new multi-agency facility would be outside the Seward city limits. According to the article, Craig Dorman, Vice President of Research, University of Alaska, statewide university system, made the decision not to sell the K.M. Rae Building to NPS and USFS in early August, 2002 and discussed his decision with various people including Alaska Sea Life Center Executive Director Tylan Schrock, Seward Mayor Edgar Blatchford, Seward City Manager Scott Janke, and unnamed "federal officials" in Washington D.C.[6]
10. An e-mail dated 10/01/2002 from [redacted] to Anne Castellina filed under the tab "University". [redacted] advised Castellina that the University was reconsidering selling the Rae Building.
11. A letter dated September 19, 2002 from NPS Alaska Regional Director Robert Arnberger and USFS Chugach National Forest Supervisor Dave Gibbons to [redacted] University of Alaska. The letter was filed under the tab "University". The letter stated NPS and USFS's understanding that the University was reconsidering its decision to sell the K.M. Rae Building in Seward, AK for the construction of a multi-agency visitor and administrative facility. The letter outlined government expenses paid to date in furtherance of the expected acquisition of the Rae Building.
12. City of Seward, Alaska Resolution 2003-16, dated 01/27/2003 and titled "A Resolution of the City Council of the City of Seward, Alaska, Approving the City of Seward's Calendar Year 2003 Revised Federal Legislative Priorities." This document was filed under the tab "Resolutions". Among the list of projects that were considered top legislative priorities for the 2003 legislative session was "$8 million for construction of the Interagency (multi-agency) Facility". The resolution passed and was approved by Seward City Council on 01/27/2003.
13. E-mail correspondence dated 06/16/2003 through 06/18/2003 between [redacted] Anne Castellina, and Portico Group member [redacted] filed under the tab "NPS Stuff". [redacted] makes the statement that placing the administrative offices on the second floor of the proposed facility may preclude them from using a simple build-lease option. [redacted] seems to mirror this concern. [redacted] queried [redacted] on whether the Depot Building, owned by the Chugach Alaska Corporation and leased by ASLC, should be listed as an available project property parcel in the Waterfront Study report. She states, "We can go either way, or we can give it its own special category, but as it may have political implications we should have direction from you or Anne."

14. A letter dated April 4, 2003 from Senator Ted Stevens to Fran Mainella, NPS Director, filed under the tab "NPS Stuff". The letter stated, "It has come to my attention that the Seward City Council has asked the Park Service to participate in a plan to redevelop the city's waterfront area. This partnership provides the Park Service with a unique opportunity to integrate its plan for the development of the Center with Seward's waterfront redevelopment project. ...In order to ensure the success of this partnership, I request that of the funds appropriated to the Park Service for the planning and design of the Center, $1 million be directed for its efforts to coordinate the waterfront redevelopment process....In addition, the Park Service should retain the $1.63 million appropriated for land acquisition in order to facilitate the timely acquisition of land within the waterfront redevelopment zone. I also urge the Park Service to revise its plan, design and construction budget for the Center in order to conform with the overall waterfront redevelopment project."
15. A response letter dated June 11, 2003 from NPS Director Fran Mainella to Senator Ted Stevens in reply to his letter dated April 4, 2003[7], filed under the tab "NPS Stuff". The letter informed Stevens that the superintendent of Kenai Fjords National Park was serving on the Seward Waterfront Committee. The letter further described funding limitations to include the fact that only $850,000 in un-obligated funds remained from previously appropriated planning monies for the proposed multi-agency facility. Site acquisition money was appropriated to USFS, not NPS and construction funding remained under consideration within the NPS overall budget formulation for FY 2005. The letter was signed by Donald Murphy for Fran Mainella.
16. Copy of newspaper article dated May 15, 2003 from Seward Phoenix Log titled "Waterfront development committee to look at sites". The article was filed under the tab "NPS Stuff". It described the pending Portico Group arrival, schedule and public accessibility during the week of 05/19/2003 in regard to the narrowing of potential multi-agency facility sites.
17. A briefing statement dated January 29, 2003, prepared by Anne Castellina. This document was filed under the tab "NPS Stuff". The Subject line was "Kenai Fjords National Park multi-agency center project" and the Purpose line was "Change in Project Status and proposed land acquisition." The document read, in part, "NPS has been asked to participate in a community effort to redevelop waterfront facilities by the City Council...if authorized by congressional mandate and funding, NPS could provide the coordination for the entire array of waterfront development stakeholders and administer the management of the planning and design services through the A/E contractor.[8] ...In order to facilitate the planning process and provide coordination services for the community waterfront redevelopment, NPS will need the following direction or guidance:

    - Utilize the remaining $1,000,000 from the planning and design funds that have been appropriated thus far to facilitate the waterfront redevelopment planning and coordination; unused portions of these funds would be applied to the planning and design of the Seward Multi-agency center
    - Revise the scope and preliminary program of the Seward Multi-agency Center in order to establish a new budget for planning, design and construction
    - Enter into a memorandum of understanding with the City of Seward, USFS, and other partnering entities to properly expend the appropriated funds on the behalf of all parties

- Retain (within USFS or NPS) the $1,630,000 appropriated for land acquisition so that as a site within the waterfront redevelopment zone is selected, timely appraisal and negotiation can be concluded as quickly as possible[9]

18. Fax transmittal cover sheets dated 09/30/02 to DOI Cam Toohey and Senator Steven's staff person [redacted] from Anne Castellina. Under the comments section Castellina identified the attached document as the "Background Briefing statement and letter to UAF re: NPS and USFS concerns re acquisition of land and building for new facilities in Seward."[10]
19. E-mail correspondence on 10/28/2002 and 10/29/2002 between Anne Castellina, NPS Desk Officer [redacted] and Senator Steven's staff member [redacted] This document was filed under the tab "NPS Stuff". [redacted], through [redacted] was requesting to meet with Senator Steven's staff member [redacted] while she was in Washington D.C. on November 14 or 15th, 2002 to discuss the Seward multi-agency center. Castellina informed [redacted] that she had already cleared the visit with NPS Rob Arnberger. Castellina further advised [redacted] that "Last time she [redacted] was here she floated this grand plan that had us smack in the middle of a major waterfront development instead of on the University land we've been negotiating to buy. Well, the University site is probably dead in the water at this point so we are looking for a new "home" for the building. The waterfront site she is proposing would be a perfect second choice for us."
20. E-mail correspondence from Anne Castellina to [redacted] dated 11/04/2002 and filed under the tab "NPS Stuff". It states, "Here's the latest. I just got back from meeting with Trevor McCabe. He is NOT going to be back to DC as he thought so let's stick with the [redacted] scenario you have going and hopefully I'll get in to see [redacted] that way."
21. E-mail correspondence between [redacted] and [redacted] dated 01/30/2003 and filed under the tab "NPS Stuff". [redacted] relayed a meeting she had with NPS Marcia Blaszak and Senator Steven's staff member [redacted] on 01/28/2003. During the meeting Blaszak and [redacted] provided [redacted] with the Seward briefing statement[11] and advised they would need a letter from the Senator authorizing NPS to use "P&D" monies for the expanded waterfront development project.
22. Handwritten notes on two pieces of 6" x 9" lined steno paper that appear to be notes from a teleconference between Anne Castellina, Chuck Gilbert, [redacted] and [redacted] in 2003 Agents note: date obscured by hole punch.* A portion of the notes reads as follows, "If we get $ in next month we will be ready to move immediately. Need to make sure he is not perceived as our "agent". Will begin talking with land owners as soon as Resolution passes. ..Tell Dale if $ doesn't get transferred – we might do lease."[12] This document was filed under the tab "funding".
23. Handwritten notes on a piece of 6" x 9" lined steno paper dated 9/9/03 and titled "Phone Messages". This document was filed under the tab "funding". The first message listed was from Dale Lindsey. The following is an exerpt of the notes that followed his name, "wants to support concept but be open to private sector proposal – interested in a build/buy with a very short lease option – will use Portico Group – no problem with that – Do not want to cause problems". The following documents were found with potential relevance to this investigation:

1. An e-mail dated 04/28/2003 from Cam Toohey to DOI employee [redacted] in which Toohey forwarded original correspondence between Drue Pearce and Mining and Minerals Management Service (MMS) employee Walter Cruickshank, subject: A Dinkum Sands goat rope. In the original correspondence Pearce was seeking additional information concerning how MMS manages monies designated for the North Pacific Research Board (NPRB). Pearce provided historical background on how the NPRB and its funding mechanisms were established by Senator Ted Stevens. Pearce described the NPRB as a "pet project" of Stevens. Pearce indicated that she hadn't contacted Stevens about the funding issue because she wasn't sure what investment rules MMS was required to follow.
2. E-mail correspondence dated 05/27/2003 through 05/30/2003 between Drue Pearce [redacted] Executive Director US Arctic Research Commission, [redacted] North Pacific Research Advisory Board, and [redacted] with CC's to Cam Toohey, Trevor McCabe and others. Discussed was the NPRB investment policy. NPRB Exective Director [redacted] suggested going directly to Senator Stevens to request a legislative fix for their problem. Pearce admonished [redacted] that solutions without legislation are always the best way to go. Pearce also advised Stevens may not be able to help because the NPRB cash flow was from a wholly federal account, verses the "EVOS" money which was a joint state/federal court settlement.
3. An e-mail dated 07/24/2003 from then Kenai Fjords National Park Superintendent Anne Castellina to Drue Pearce with CC's to Cam Toohey [redacted] and Marcia Blaszak, subject: Re: Meeting wit [redacted] next week. Castellina was clarifying issues for the proposed Multi-Agency facility in Seward. Castellina confirmed that NPS had already purchased six lots near the former University proposed site which they could use for parking for the new project site. Castellina stated, "When I told [redacted] last year that the University had not only pulled their spaces out of the project but that they had also decided not to sell the land and building to us, [redacted] wasn't too concerned, [redacted] never liked the University site anyway." Castellina continued, "Senator Stevens sent NPS a letter saying that we were OK to use some of our planning and design money to bring our A&E firm (The Portico Group from Seattle) into this new expanded venture." Castellina expounded on [redacted] role in this venture while describing the site plan, which included a conference center because [redacted] told us [redacted] wanted us to include one in our planning for our facility". Castellina finally described the City of Seward's position on the proposed facilities when she stated "Seward has made construction of our facility their number one legislative priority. They have been lobbying hard for it in DC and I expect them to continue to do so."
4. An e-mail dated 09/24/2003 from Drue Pearce to Cam Toohey, subject: Re: Senate Passage of 2004 Interior Appropriations Bill. Pearce responded to an unidentified statement, "no! And according to [redacted] Senator Stevens will try to jettison the House language."
5. An e-mail dated 02/20/2004 from DOI [redacted] to Cam Toohey, subject: [redacted]

Borough Manager, Matanuska-Susitna (Mat-Su) Borough. [redacted] recounted a meeting between him, Toohey, and Mat-Su Borough Manager [redacted] briefed them on the Borough's partnership with NPS and the State of Alaska on "Southside Development planning activities" and projects which included a road upgrade/improvement project @ $16 million and a Visitor's Center @ $18 million. [redacted] discussed a planned meeting in DC with Senator Stevens, Congressman Young and [redacted] to discuss projects on 02/25/2004 and 02/26/2004.

6. An e-mail dated 10/31/2003 from Senator Stevens' staffer [redacted] to Cam Toohey, subject: FW: Committee Approves FY04 Interior Appropriations Bill [redacted] attached and old Interior Appropriations press release from Stevens' Press Office that was published on 07/10/2003 with the caveat that a more recent version may be forthcoming. The press release subject was "Committee Approves FY 04 Interior Appropriations Bill" and listed items requested by Senator Stevens and approved by the Senate Appropriations Committee for FY 04. Stevens appropriated $900,000 to the Fish and Wildlife Service for the Alaska Sea Life Center (ASLC) Eider duck recovery and another $900,000 for sea otter research through the ASLC. There was no mention of any appropriated monies for the Multi-Agency Center project in Seward, AK.[1]
7. E-mail correspondence dated 06/08/2005 and 06/09/2005 between Chuck Gilbert, Drue Pearce, [redacted] subject: Fw: Final Offer to Centennial Group. Gilbert advised that NPS "may well need to use some of the funds remaining after land acquisition for design, as provided for in the legislation." In other strands of this e-mail chain NPS solicitor [redacted] voiced concern that NPS may not be able to reject the Centennial Groups' Old Sollys property simply because the Centennial Group wouldn't accept NPS' maximum price on the Arcade property.
8. An e-mail dated 05/25/2005 from [redacted] to Cam Toohey, subject: Seward multi-agency facility. [redacted] forwarded e-mail correspondence between Drue Pearce and Senator Stevens' staffer [redacted] written the same day. Pearce described the dilemma faced by NPS if they were to purchase land in Seward in excess of what was needed for the Mary Lowell Center (MLC). Pearce further commented, "Anne Castellina says she begged [redacted] to change the prescriptive language that required NPS to buy all the lots last year, to no avail." [redacted] advised that Senator Stevens would be traveling to Seward the next week. [redacted] wanted to know the status of the MLC facility and whether DOI had cleared the purchase of the remaining buildings. [redacted] advised, "We would like to have this done before the boss gets there. He is not very pleased with NPS at the moment."
9. E-mail correspondence dated 06/02/2005 through 06/06/2005 between [redacted] Marcia Blaszak, Drue Pearce, Anne Castellina, and Paul Hoffman. Pearce had a discussion with Senator Stevens' staffer [redacted] about the status of the Centennial Group properties in Seward. According to Pearce, [redacted] was comfortable with NPS making a final offer to purchase the properties and, if the offer was rejected, transferring any remaining acquisition monies to the City of Seward so that the City could decide what to do with the Centennial Group properties. NPS was to determine a reasonable final asking price and get Paul Hoffman's approval before contacting the Centennial Group. Hoffman admonished Jeff Mow not to get "too far in front before we have our policy ducks in a row." Castellina indicated that

[1] $2.3 million was appropriated in FY 04 Omnibus/Transportation Appropriations Bill for Kenai Fjords National Park Resurrection Bay Trail and Parking Improvements in Seward, AK (Public Law 108-199, Section 115). The statute provided that funds made available under Section 115 may be transferred by the Transportation Secretary to another Federal agency to carry out a project funded under this section, such funds to then be administered by the procedures of the Federal agency to which such funds may be transferred. Senator Stevens then made a floor statement (Congressional Record Senate – January 22, 2004) that made Section 115 funds available to NPS for the acquisition of a specific parcel of property for the Seward multi-agency visitor center in Seward, AK.

the Centennial Group properties were still the preferred location for the project due to the view, proximity to the Sea Life Center and waterfront, and potential low "O & M" costs for the new facility.

10. An e-mail dated 06/17/2005 from Chuck Gilbert to Drue Pearce and other DOI and NPS employees, subject: Fw: Final Offer to Centennial Group. Doc. Gilbert recounted a conversation earlier the same day with Centennial Group membe[redacted] advised there was a possibility that they would split the properties and sell just Old Solly's, keeping the Arcade and remediating or rehabilitating it for some other use. He characterized NPS's final offer on the Arcade property as "too low" and advised the Group would "take a bath" if they sold for that amount.
11. An e-mail dated 06/29/2005 from [redacted] to Marcia Blaszak and Chuck Gilbert, subject: RE: Old Solly's offer. Senator Steven's staffe[redacted] acknowledged notification that NPS had a signed offer with the Centennial Group on the Old Solly's property. Her response was "It will be nice to get the land acquisitions out of the way so we can move on to construction."
12. An e-mail dated 07/22/2005 from Marcia Blaszak to Senator Steven's staffe[redacted] subject: Seward Property Update. Blaszak forwarded a copy of the draft letter to Chairman Burns of the Appropriations Committee which detailed the final status of the NPS MLC land acquisitions which she anticipated would be sent to the Committee the next week. She also forwarded a worksheet that detailed all the MLC property appraisals, both Government and private entity, the owner's asking price, and the offer amounts made by NPS. The attached draft letter did state that NPS intended to take no further action to acquire the Arcade property parcel.
13. An e-mail dated 07/22/2005 from Marcia Blaszak to Cam Toohey, Drue Pearce, and Victor Knox, subject: Fw: Seward Property Update. Blaszak related the details of a conversation she had wi[redacted] that day concerning the materials she forwarded to fellow Senator Steven's staffe[redacted] earlier that day.[2] Blaszak told [redacted] forwarded the materials a[redacted] request. When Braniff made the request of Blaszak, [redacted] told Blaszak "Senator Stevens was unhappy with NPS and their failure to follow the instructions in the law to acquire the identified properties within 60 days and that Senator Stevens might need to take action during the conference on the Appropriations bill to fix the problem." [redacted] expressed confusion as she thought that NPS was through with the MLC acquisitions following the most recent notification that NPS had purchased the Old Solly's property. [redacted] indicated [redacted] would check with Senator Stevens and [redacted] for clarification.
14. An e-mail dated 07/29/2005 from Drue Pearce to Marcia Blaszak with an earlier conversation thread dated 07/28/2005 from Marcia Blaszak to Drue Pearce. In the 07/28/2005 e-mail, Blaszak indicates that [redacted] hasn't heard from Senator Steven's staffer [redacted] egarding the MLC land acquisition clarification issues posed to Senator Stevens.[3] Blaszak indicated that when she last spoke to [redacted] she "knew language was needed to allow the remaining funds to be transferred to the City and the only question she shared from the Senator was whether they (NPS) had adequate properties for the project." Blaszak opined that she thought NPS might have heard back from [redacted] if something was going to show up in the conference bill.

common interests including the real estate market.

In September or October [redacted] McCabe approached [redacted] and asked him to invest in some waterfront property in Seward that he (McCabe) had an interest in developing. McCabe sought [redacted] participation because of his real estate and remodeling experience. McCabe had already identified two specific properties in Seward[1] and placed options on them when he approached [redacted] Together they discussed some of the development possibilities for the properties including building condominiums or remodeling for use as office/business/retail space as part of a waterfront redevelopment plan. Given the facts, [redacted] felt the purchase of the subject properties in Seward was a good investment. Real estate prices in Anchorage had gone "through the roof" and [redacted] felt that other Alaska communities were following suit.

McCabe told [redacted] that the DOI was looking for a site in Seward to build a visitor's center and they discussed the idea of building the visitor's center on their properties and leasing it back to DOI. [redacted] opined that the fact that the visitor center site selection process had started over was "no secret" following the collapse of negotiations with the University of Alaska for a different site.

Shortly after this McCabe formed the Centennial Group LLC[2] and opened a bank account for the company. [redacted] initially invested $50,000 and understood that each additional partner, McCabe and Dale Lindsey did the same. McCabe was the only member that had access to the bank account. Dale Lindsey agreed to lend the money to the Centennial Group to purchase the subject properties.

[redacted] had not met Dale Lindsey and had no knowledge of him prior to the Centennial Group. He knew that McCabe brought Lindsey into the partnership for financial reasons but had limited information about McCabe's prior associations with Lindsey. During the first stages of the partnership all three would meet at least once a month to discuss strategy. [redacted] became the point of contact for all Centennial Group issues that arose in Anchorage because it was most convenient for him. McCabe was in Seward a lot and Lindsey lived in Seward.

The Group felt that of all their property options, the option to sell their property to the federal Government was considered the most lucrative and financially beneficial. McCabe asked someone from the National Park Service (NPS) in Seward to provide him with information about the type of building they were looking for, how many offices they would need and how many people they planned to house in the building. According to McCabe, NPS actually gave him the build/lease back concept. It had recently been done in Anchorage by NPS for their new Regional Office building. Additionally, McCabe had already successfully entered into a separate lease agreement with NPS in Seward for the Ray Building.

McCabe and Lindsey came up with the idea to hire the architectural firm Livingston Slone (LS) to do some conceptual drawings for a visitor's center on the Centennial Group properties. Lindsey had used the firm before as part of a separate real estate deal. [redacted] estimated that the Group paid LS between $5,000 and $10,000 for the preliminary drawings. The Group did not have LS do conceptual drawings for their other proposed property options due to the expense. [redacted] believed that LS was paid from the Centennial Group bank account. He did not recall the dates when LS was hired and when they produced their final rendering. However, he believed that LS traveled with the Group to Seward in

[1] In November, 2002 McCabe placed options on the Arcade and Old Sollys properties in Seward, AK.
[2] The Centennial Group LLC was officially formed in April, 2003.

January, 2003 to present their concept to NPS. He recalled that DOI representative Cam Toohey was at the presentation along with Kenai Fjords National Park Superintendent Anne Castellina and 3 or 4 other potential developers. He also recalled that the meeting had been announced publicly by NPS along with the NPS intent to hear new ideas for the proposed Multi-agency facility in Seward. There was a sign in sheet at the meeting and someone was taking notes. [redacted] could not recall who the other developers were.

[redacted] didn't give much thought to obtaining appraisals for the subject properties before the Group purchased them. He felt the properties were definitely worth their sales prices.

There was frustration among the Centennial Group members about the protracted process that NPS engaged in to identify, select and purchase the parcels of land for the proposed multi-agency facility in Seward. NPS hired the Portico Group to conduct the waterfront study and determine the most suitable area for the new facility. The Portico Group recommended against a build/lease-back option and caused NPS to oppose concepts that followed the lease-back model [redacted] elieved that the Portico Group, as a competing developer, had ulterior motives for their recommendation. The Centennial Group evicted all remaining tenants in the subject buildings at the end of the summer after the waterfront study was completed in anticipation of development or sale to NPS. However, no one realized the delay of doing business with the Government; the Government repeatedly got 30 day extensions. This resulted in loss of rental income for the Centennial Group.

Once the Centennial Group realized that NPS would not engage with them on a build to suit/lease-back option, they negotiated with NPS on a simple sale of the properties.

The Group was concerned by unidentified "issues" and delays that kept coming up with the Government during the acquisition negotiations and decided that they should seek independent appraisals on their properties in case they didn't like the Government appraisal. Lindsey was frustrated with the process and kept threatening to cash out and call in his property loans to the Group. [redacted] decided to go through a bank to get the appraisal in case they needed to refinance the properties. [redacted] decided to go with Northrim Bank for the appraisals becaus [redacted] had previously obtained loans from Northrim and Lindsey had prior "dealings" with the Bank.[3]

[redacted] was shown a letter he sent to NPS Realty Specialist [redacted] on 03/19/2004.[4] This letter advised that the Centennial Group had recently obtained an option to purchase the Legends property and also contained a proposal to sell all three properties to NPS for $2,050,000 "on an expedited basis" with a purchase deadline of 05/31/2004. Attached was an earnest money agreement. [redacted] explained that after speaking to the Portico Group, the Centennial Group was concerned that the Arcade and Old Solly's properties by themselves would not be sufficient to accommodate the new federal facility and address parking concerns. Therefore, they approached the adjacent property owners at Legends and obtained the option. The amount of the offer was determined by adding up the cost of all three properties and adding in a profit margin. The time limit was placed on the offer because of concerns about Lindsey's continued financial backing and additional costs associated with project time delays.

[3] Reference is made to the 06/21/2007 Dale Lindsey interview IAR. Lindsey acknowledged that he was a founding member of Northrim Bank, sat on its Board of Directors for 13 years, and had continued close ties with the Bank and its current Board President. Lindsey stated that McCabe went to the bank for the appraisals.

[4] This offer was submitted after the Government initiated its property appraisal but before the appraisals were completed.

[redacted] was shown meeting notes written by NPS [redacted] on 03/22/2004 following a meeting between [redacted] NPS Chuck Gilbert, Trevor McCabe and [redacted] stated, "They [redacted] are persuaded that the USDOT money: $2.3 million (?) was intended by Senator Stevens for the purchase of Old Solly's and the Arcade. Trevor committed to sending me the language from both the bill and the Senator's floor statement so we can better understand where they are coming from." [redacted] was also shown the fax copies of the legislation and the floor statement McCabe sent to Wohlwend as follow-up to this meeting. The page containing the floor statement reference was titled pg. S154, Congressional Record – Senate dated January 22, 2004 and the specific language reference was circled in the first column. It stated: "The Transportation bill included $2.3 million for "trail and parking improvements" for the Seward multi-agency visitor center in Seward, AK. Those funds are also available, if necessary, for the acquisition and completion of the plaza between Washington Street and the beginning of the historic Iditarod Trail in the Park Service/Portico Group plan." The original bill language, from Public Law 108-199, dated November 25, 2003 simply listed $2,300,000 available to Kenai Fjords National Park Resurrection Bay Trail and Parking Improvements, Seward, AK. [redacted] initially expressed doubt that the Senator's floor statement contained a specific reference to the Arcade and Old Solly's properties. When shown a picture depicting the Old Solly's and Arcade properties as the only two properties in the Portico Group plan that were between Washington Street and the beginning of the Iditarod Trail [redacted] conceded that McCabe had more knowledge about the legislation than he did. He opined that he never suspected that McCabe's information was "not public or not legal". He stated that it seemed in the meetings that everyone knew that the transportation money was coming and what it was for.[5]

[redacted] and the other Group members objected to the low Government appraisals of their properties and claimed bias on the part of the Government's appraiser, [redacted] felt [redacted] was not objective and had been unduly influenced by [redacted] an area appraiser and competing land owner. [redacted] wrote letters to NPS and expressed his concerns about the appraisals. He couldn't believe that the appraisals could come in lower than the price the Centennial Group paid for the Arcade property two years earlier.

[redacted] was asked how much knowledge he had about the passing of Section 344, Public Law 108-447; the Interior Appropriations Bill that required the NPS to purchase the Centennial Group properties among a group of 7 properties identified by tax identification numbers. [redacted] expressed little knowledge of the Appropriations process in general and deferred to McCabe's expertise as a lobbyist. [redacted] advised that "Trevor informed me of what appropriations were and how they work. Trevor told me that money was appropriated for the acquisition of lands for NPS."

When asked if he had knowledge of McCabe's involvement in the passing of the above referenced legislation, Zelener responded that it was his understanding that McCabe used work as an aide to Senator Stevens and had maintained good relationships with Senator Stevens and most of his assistants. McCabe traveled to Washington DC frequently on lobbying business and [redacted] was sure that McCabe stopped in at the Senator's office while he was in town although McCabe had never discussed this with him. [redacted] continued that he had been told that the entire Alaska Congressional delegation had expressed a desire to develop the Seward visitor's center over the past 10 years. He believed that unidentified people in Ted Steven's Office had been pushing for completion of the multi-agency center. He obtained this understanding through public meetings, newspaper articles, and discussions with McCabe, who told him that Senator Stevens had worked on this issue for a long time.

[redacted] was shown an e-mail dated 02/11/2005 from NPS Chuck Gilbert to NPS Victor Knox which memorialized a conversation Gilbert had with [redacted] the previous day. In the e-mail Gilbert states that [redacted] and his partners interpret Section 344 to mean that NPS must buy the properties and there is sufficient funding to do so. He [redacted] said apparently the NPS reads Sec 344 differently." Zelener responded that he got his information on Section 344 from McCabe and his understanding was that McCabe received his information from public sources, the internet, or Ted Stevens' office.

Regarding the deal between the Alaska Sea Life Center (ASLC) and the Centennial Group to purchase the Arcade property lot [redacted] claimed little direct knowledge. McCabe negotiated the deal with ASLC within two months of the Old Solly's sale to NPS and [redacted] was not involved in this process. [redacted] understanding was that ASLC had the money for the purchase but wanted the building demolished before the purchase. [redacted] also had no direct involvement with the Arcade property demolition process. He believed that McCabe contacted a number of local contractors and received competitive bids from a number of sources for the project.

[redacted] did not know who made the initial approach to sell/purchase the Arcade property, ASLC or McCabe. However [redacted] did vaguely recall that someone from ASLC did approach the Centennial Group shortly after the Group started the negotiation process with NPS and expressed an interest in using the Arcade property for ASLC personnel housing. The Group did not pursue this inquiry at the time because of assurances by NPS that a sale was forthcoming.

[redacted] acknowledged that their seemed to be substantial involvement by Senator Steven's Office in the multi-agency facility project in Seward but countered that although Senator Stevens was "pushing this along" it "didn't make a difference" and the facility legislation passed by Stevens hadn't had any significant impact. In his estimation, at three years, this was the longest real estate transaction he had ever been involved in and the Centennial Group lost money every day that the transaction dragged on. In the end, [redacted] thinks he was paid about $50,000 profit from this venture which didn't even compensate him for the estimated 600 hours of time he put into the project.

[redacted] had nothing further to contribute and the interview was terminated.

Interview [redacted] - Former Seward City Manager

DETAILS

On 12/04/2007 Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) Special Agent [redacted] and I met with [redacted] at the [redacted] [redacted] [redacted] He voluntarily provided the following information:

[redacted] 2,3

[redacted] confirmed that while he held the position as Seward City Manager he traveled to Washington DC with then Seward Mayor Vanta Shafer and City Council Member Willard Dunham the week of July 19, 2005. According to [redacted] the intent of the trip was to visit with all the members of the Alaska delegation (Senators Murkowski and Stevens and Congressman Young) and discuss on-going and proposed capital improvements projects in Seward.

[redacted] stated that he, Shafer and Dunham met with Senator Stevens in Steven's Office for about 15 or 20 minutes at the end of one of the days that week. Also present were staff member [redacted] [redacted] [redacted], and a few other staff/personnel that [redacted] was unfamiliar with. [redacted] made about 75% of the inquiries on current projects and gave [redacted] the impression that she was more "up to speed" on Seward issues than Senator Stevens although Senator Stevens interjected occasional comments.

[redacted] believed that [redacted] actually brought up the issue of the Washington Street vacation[1] by asking for a progression timeline projection. Both Shafer and Dunham provided positive responses to the inquiry. Shafer did raise a concern about the legislative language surrounding the Washington Street vacation but didn't dwell on the issue. She asked about getting the legislative language changed and [redacted] responded that they would have to look into that and that they might be able to make something happen. There were no heated exchanges bu[redacted] believed he detected a certain antipathy on [redacted] part toward Shafer which he assumed was the result of a possible prior meeting between the two. However, [redacted] had no knowledge of any actual prior meetings between [redacted] and Shafer.

[redacted] was asked if he fell asleep during the meeting with Stevens.[2] [redacted] responded that he had not fallen asleep during the meeting but had more than likely engaged in a long term behavioral "quirk" of his where he closes his eyes and steeples his fingers when listening intently, deliberating a response, or attempting to recall a memory. He did not recall anything in Senator Stevens' words or actions that would have indicated that Steven's was annoyed or displeased with his [redacted] behavior. He did recall, however, that Shafer "beat him up" after the trip for his perceived inattentiveness during the meeting.

Lobbyist [redacted] provided the introductions between the two parties prior to the meeting but did not actively participate in the verbal exchanges between Senator Stevens and his staff and the Seward delegation. He stayed throughout the meeting and was the last to leave the Office, perhaps a minute or two behind the rest of the delegation.

The meeting broke up when Senator Stevens left the office to go to another meeting. [redacted] stayed behind for about 5 minutes and engaged in small talk with the group before ushering them out.

[redacted] opined that the Senator's participation in the meeting was limited and seemed consistant with someone who is unwell or exhausted. Stevens made neutral statements and did not make any commitments to the group. He refrained from any comments about the Washington Street vacation legislation concerns.

[redacted] had met Senator Stevens on one or two previous occasions while he was the [redacted] but doubted that Stevens remembered him.

He and [redacted] had also met on several prior occasions and both knew each other as acquaintances.

[redacted] never met Trevor McCabe until after the trip to Washington DC in 2005. He was introduced to McCabe in a Seward restaurant following a public meeting on the Washington Street vacation issue. During the Arcade property demolitio[redacted] ran into McCabe again in Christo's Restaurant in Seward. [redacted] asked [redacted] how the asbestos abatement was going on the Arcade property [redacted] did not recall McCabe making any substantial comments on the demolition progress.

[redacted] heard second or third hand that someone in Senator Steven's Office had a great desire for the City to use the federal monies made available to the City through Public Law 108-447 to purchase the Arcade Property. [redacted] could not recall the source of this information. He acknowledged hearing from Assistant City Manager [redacted] of an "11th hour" conversation between City lobbyist Brad Gilman and someone in Senator Stevens' Office. The individual in Senator Steven's Office asked Gilman if the City would guarantee to purchase the Arcade property with the federal funds. Gilman subsequently relayed this conversation to Vessel. When [redacted] spoke to Gilman less than 10 days after a legislative change[3] moved the above referenced federal funds from the City of Seward to ASLC [redacted] asked Gilman why the sudden change? Gilman responded that he didn't know.

[redacted] was asked about his relationships with employees of the Alaska Sea Life Center (ASLC) to include Executive Director Tylan Schrock.

[redacted] stated he was the first Seward City Official to see the entire Tidelands lease proposal submitted by ASLC in 2005.[4] He felt that the lease was very incomplete and failed to address necessary issues. He was concerned that Schrock was holding very closely the identity of his partner in a proposed boat venture from the City owned Tidelands.

[redacted] acknowledged drafting a letter to Schrock specifically to address his concerns about the terrific push on the part of ASLC to get the Tidelands lease signed very quickly. He was concerned that the rush would result in circumventing necessary safeguards in the process such as the Seward Planning Department. [redacted] wanted to prevent "improprieties" he felt were about to be committed. He claimed careful crafting of the letter so as not to provoke or antagonize Schrock.

[redacted] admitted that although the City Manager had a seat on the Seward Association for Marine Science (SAAMS) Board, he attended perhaps six of these meetings during his tenure and deferred the duty the remainder of the time to Assistant City Manager [redacted]

[redacted] wanted to take a closer look at the Cooperative Agreements in place between ASLC, the City, and the Alaska Department of Fish and Game (ADFG) which govern how ASLC is supposed to operate. He wanted to understand these relationships better so as to be able to determine what was appropriate and inappropriate for ASLC. One of his primary concerns was with property ownership. [redacted] questioned whether ASLC or their governing Board, the Seward Association for the Advancement of Marine Science (SAAMS) could own property under the terms of the Cooperative Agreements in place with the City and ADFG.[5] According to [redacted] Schrock has played that issue "both ways" depending on what was most convenient.

[redacted] stated that Seward Mayor Shafer gave him orders to expedite and short cut the ASLC Tidelands lease process and ordered him to eliminate several City employees to include City Planner [redacted] for their rigorous adherence of known procedures [redacted]

[3] Section 438 of Public Law 109-54 passed on 07/26/2005. This amended Section 344 of Public Law 108-447 and moved left over NPS land acquisition monies slated for the City to ASLC.

[4] The Tidelands lease request submitted to the City of Seward by ASLC in 10/2005 did not contain a reference to the proposed agreement between Alaska Northern Outfitters (Trevor McCabe, [redacted]) and ASLC to conduct boat tours from a dock within the requested leased lands.

[5] ASLC/SAAMS currently owns two pieces of property, the Arcade property and the Depot property.

and decided which requests merited recommendation to the Senator. [redacted] said [redacted] was aware that [redacted] was currently a lobbyist, but that [redacted] assisted Senator Stevens on his campaign for reelection.

[redacted] said that [redacted] was a Legislative Assistant who was hired after [redacted] was. Stevens hired [redacted] because he wanted a staffer to oversee Alaska appropriations. [redacted] worked with [redacted] and [redacted]

[redacted] said [redacted] never worked with Trevor McCabe, but [redacted] knew that he worked primarily on "fish issues" and had also done work with the Alaska Sea Life Center. [redacted] said that McCabe was not a personal friend and said they do not socialize; however, McCabe still had friends on the Senator's staff. [redacted] recalled attending "one or two" staff dinners that McCabe attended. [redacted] said they last spoke about eighteen months prior. [redacted] only official dealings with McCabe pertained to conversations about the NPS/National Forest Service (NFS) multi-agency visitor center.

[redacted] said that [redacted] had a close relationship with [redacted] was the legislative director when [redacted] was hired and [redacted] viewed [redacted] as a mentor.

[redacted] described [redacted] as the Senator's scheduler and "right hand woman". [redacted] said [redacted] was friendly with [redacted] in the office and liked her personally; but said they did not have a close relationship outside the office.

[redacted] said each of Senator Stevens' offices had an optional guestbook; but the books were not monitored and guests were not required to sign in. [redacted] added there would not necessarily be any record of visitors.

When asked who on the Senator's staff was responsible for drafting legislation, [redacted] replied that it depended on the subject of the legislation. In general terms, staffers worked on drafting the legislation and presented it to the Senator for review. The Senator typically reviewed the draft and made editorial comments before presenting it to committee. [redacted] said that at times, there were a great deal of changes and at times the legislation was presented as written.

[redacted] was asked to describe the appropriations process. [redacted] said that when the Senator's office received a request from a constituent, the staff mailed an appropriations request form to the requesting Alaskan. The requestor then submitted the request back to the staff, who then divided all of the requests amongst themselves for review. Once they had compiled a list of reasonable requests, they went over the list with [redacted] and decided which requests passed "the smell test". After refining the list with [redacted] they submitted the list to the Senator for his concurrence. Senator Stevens then gave [redacted] his approved list of appropriations requests. [redacted] then submitted the Senator's list to the appropriations committee. [redacted] said there was typically some negotiation between [redacted] and the appropriations committee staff as to which requests should actually go to the committee.

[redacted] added that the process changed somewhat when [redacted] was hired. According to [redacted] did not ask for as much input from the Senator's personal staff.

When describing [redacted] work on the Sea Life Center, [redacted] said it had already been built when [redacted] was hired.

[redacted] said the National Park Service/US Forest Service multi-agency visitor center had been in the works for several years when [redacted] became a permanent member of the Senator's staff. [redacted] said that a primary hold up for the project had been property acquisition. [redacted] believed the idea for the project had come from former NPS Regional Director Anne Castellina. [redacted] described the project as a "win/win" because she felt it was beneficial to both the Federal services involved and the city of Seward.

[redacted] said the multi-agency visitor center, later named the Mary Lowell Center, had gone through multiple land options. Originally, they had planned to put the facility on University property in Seward, but ultimately the University backed out of the deal and decided not to sell the property. They had then gone through several other proposed sites, but complications with earthquake zoning prevented them from selecting those sites. At that point, [redacted] believed the project was about eight years old and Castellina decided to put the facility in downtown Seward. Ultimately, NPS settled on seven properties in downtown Seward for the center.

[redacted] said that in 2003 and 2004, [redacted] met with Castellina, both alone and with [redacted] regarding the visitor center. [redacted] said the funding for the property acquisition was approved in the Fiscal Year 2004 billing cycle/budget.

[redacted] could not recall ever discussing the Mary Lowell Center with Senator Stevens. [redacted] worked with [redacted] on the project, but [redacted] said that the project was more [redacted] than [redacted] thought that [redacted] was so heavily involved because [redacted] liked the project and because it fit all of the criteria of what the Senator wanted to accomplish; it would spur economic growth in Seward and it would be good for the Federal Government.

When asked when [redacted] became aware that McCabe was actually with the Centennial group, [redacted] said it was generally well known among the staff that Trevor McCabe owned two of the properties in Seward to be purchased by NPS. [redacted] initially didn't feel there was any conflict of interest with the Senator just because McCabe was a former staffer; however, after the other properties had been purchased and the only remaining properties were McCabe's, she thought the staff should pull back from intervening with NPS.

[redacted] acknowledged there had been some discussion amongst the staff about McCabe's involvement with the properties, particularly since the onset of the investigation. [redacted] still felt that the project was a good one and makes sense for all involved. [redacted] said that if the excess money had gone to the city of Seward as initially written, everything would have been fine.

[redacted] said that NPS identified the seven properties themselves and when the money became available, they relied on appraisals to determine the value of the properties. It was then NPS's responsibility to negotiate the actual purchase price with the landowners. [redacted] felt that the appraisals on the property were "lowball appraisals", which was likely the reason that McCabe would not sell his property at the Government's price.

[redacted] believed the NPS had been able to negotiate the purchase of all of the properties except McCabe's. When the Senator's office asked the Department of Interior (DOI) about the properties, DOI officials said they were "at a standstill" with McCabe. [redacted] believed NPS was limited in their ability to negotiate the purchase of property above the appraised value.

According to [redacted] McCabe offered several proposals to NPS for different options for the demolition of the buildings on the property to make the purchase price fit the appraisal, but there were problems with the construction of the buildings that made those proposals unacceptable to NPS. McCabe complained to the Senator's office that the NPS was not complying with the legislation that required them to purchase all seven of the named properties; however, the Senator's office informed McCabe they could not get involved with the negotiation.

[redacted] said there was no pressure from the Senator's office on DOI to purchase the property. Their attitude was wait and "see if they can get a deal done." [redacted] said the staff maintained a "hands off" approach.

[redacted] said that Anne Castellina retired at some point during this process and moved to [redacted]

When asked whether anyone on Senator Stevens' staff expressed concern over McCabe's ownership of the properties, [redacted] responded, "They might have." [redacted] added there was no concern initially, when they were discussing the properties as a group, but towards the end (when only McCabe's properties were involved), there was some discussion about the need to avoid impropriety.

When asked about McCabe's access to Senator Stevens, [redacted] said [redacted] believed McCabe saw the senator "a couple times" per year, but was not sure.

[redacted] said [redacted] worked with Tylan Shrock on lands issues. [redacted] said that because Schrock had continuing earmarks for the ASLC, he made a point of staying in touch with the Senator's office.

When asked about McCabe's connection to the ASLC, [redacted] said [redacted] wasn't sure, but believed that he and Tylan Schrock were friends.

[redacted] said [redacted] could not recall McCabe ever being involved with drafting legislation; though it was not uncommon for lobbyists to send draft legislation to the Senator's office. In [redacted] opinion, this was normally simply an example of lobbyists trying to be helpful.

[redacted] said [redacted] did not recall [redacted] drafting any letters for the Senator related to the Seward properties. Though lobbyists frequently drafted position letters for the Senator, Senator Stevens always reviewed the letter to determine if it were appropriate, then drafted (or had his staff draft) a letter in his own words. In fact, according to [redacted] the Senator hated to have lobbyists draft any correspondence for his office. [redacted] said that the Senator was no more accepting of anything that had come from [redacted] than that of anyone else.

[redacted] also said it was common for Senator Stevens to receive requests from former staffers. [redacted] said that most of them were now lobbyists and this was a common phenomenon throughout congress. [redacted] added that no lobbyist had direct access to the Senator, including former staffers. All requests from lobbyists were first vetted by the staff. According to [redacted] although lobbyists normally requested a meeting directly with the Senator, Senator Stevens did not normally meet with lobbyists unless they were accompanied by an Alaskan. Lobbyists who did not meet with the Senator normally met with staff.

[redacted] said [redacted] didn't really know much about the relationship between McCabe and [redacted] said they "seemed friendly", but could not comment on their business relationship.

was not aware of whether or not McCabe contacted DOI employee Cam Toohey for assistance in getting his property sold; though she could see how he might wish to contact Toohey. was not aware of any inappropriate contact between the two.

was asked when became aware that some funds to purchase the Seward properties were to be transferred to the ASLC. said wasn't aware of the transfer until at least after the legislation had been drafted and possibly not until it had been passed. was not involved in those discussions and did not believe Senator Stevens was involved in those discussions either.

was not involved in the July 2005 meeting between Seward officials and Senator Stevens, but heard about it afterwards. was aware that the mayor of Seward was upset by the shift in language. did not know if that meeting was when the mayor learned the funds had been shifted.

was not aware of how the NPS selected the seven properties for the multi-agency visitor center. did recall a discussion about the 60 day procurement deadline to buy the properties. said the time constraint had been put in place because there were concerns about NPS' procurement. They had already taken so long, that the Senator and his staff wanted them get the procurement out of the way so they could begin construction.

did not remember Senator Stevens as ever being upset with NPS for not purchasing all seven parcels of land, as stipulated in the bill. said the Senator was primarily focused on moving the project forward. did not recall the Senator's involvement with any personal conversations on the subject. did not believe the Senator or anyone on his staff would pressure anyone to buy those properties.

said did not recall any meetings with Senator Stevens about moving the money in the appropriations bill from NPS to the ASLC.

When asked about Senator Stevens' involvement in legislation said the Senator is engaged in all legislation. said that only on extremely rare occasions does the staff make "last second decisions" without the senator's input. added that ultimately, it was the Senator on the line for these decisions.

did not know the timeline of the change to the legislation (to move the funds from NPS to ASLC) but said that changes to legislation normally happen right up until the bill is passed. said had no involvement with the redraft.

said did not know why the money was shifted.

According to [redacted] he learned of this through a newspaper article.

SA [redacted] went on to discuss a December 2004 draft of 108-447 Public Law provided through the Appropriations Committee. In that draft it was stated that the City of Seward was supposed to vacate Washington Street and that the left-over acquisition money from the purchase of properties by NPS would then go to the City of Seward. SA [redacted] if the City of Seward had any opportunity to propose provisions regarding the vacation of Washington Street. [redacted] went on to say the City of Seward receiving funding would have been the priority listing for them. [redacted] was not aware of any review of the draft for the city of if anyone else was aware of it. [redacted] did not think the City of Seward had any issues with it.

The City of Seward delegation did most of the talking which revolved around their priority list for the city. That list included the boat harbor, the multi-agency facility, and issues surrounding the vacation of Washington Street in Seward. According to [redacted] SENATOR STEVENS listened to the group and said they would review the issues. SENATOR STEVENS' office could see the city was concerned about the fact that NPS did not want to purchase all of the properties listed in the bill and that they were concerned about having to vacate Washington Street in order to receive the left over money. The city wanted a way to get around the vacation of Washington Street and [redacted] recalled SENATOR STEVENS saying that they should not make the city do things but his staff kept reminding him it was already on paper. [redacted] did not sense any irritation between City of Seward Mayor VANTA SCHAEFER and [redacted] The discomfort which may have occurred during the meeting was most likely due to the fact that everyone was not on the same page. [redacted] to discuss these issues with SENATOR STEVENS' office.

[redacted] bill HR 2361, Section 438 which was released one (1) week after the meeting between SENATOR STEVENS' office and the City of Seward delegation. That bill directed the left over NPS money to be directed to the ASLC instead of the City of Seward. [redacted] the ASLC and the City of Seward. [redacted] because the ASLC was listed as one of the city's priorities. [redacted] advised that he did not have any telephone calls with [redacted] regarding the ASLC receiving the funds until after the provision became public. Afterwards, [redacted] that SENATOR STEVENS' office thought this route was the best. [redacted] never discussed [redacted] property which was purchased by the ASLC with the left over NPS funds. [redacted] learned of this transaction after reading newspaper articles.

[redacted] told [redacted] he was in agreement about the two buildings and "in good conscience" he could not place [redacted] employees in either of the buildings.

The Depot was purchased with a "lease-purchase" agreement. [redacted] was proud of the acquisition. The money used to purchase the Depot most likely went through some government agency but there was not any oversight. [redacted] exactly where the funds came from. They may have used some of the $6 million received from the Stellar-Sea Lion research money or the North Pacific Marine Research Institute (NPMRI).

b7C

The NPMRI funds were originally placed at the University of Alaska, Fairbanks but SENATOR TED STEVENS moved the legislation to the ASLC because UAF did not move on the money and make any progress with the funding. In early 2001 SENATOR STEVENS told UAF [redacted] that the overhead that UAF charged (56%) was high. [redacted] that SENATOR STEVENS was upset with that number and decided to move the funds to the ASLC.

[redacted] explained that the Stellar-Sea Lion research money could have been used to purchase the Depot because a research library was set up on the west side of the building and the east side of the building was used for graphics and art.

The NPMRI formed a voting board of about five (5) people. Some of the board members that [redacted] could recall were [redacted] The NPMRI was physically based in Seward, AK. The ASLC administratively handled the funds and set up various accounts to handle the funding separately from the ASLC funds. [redacted] did not think that the NPMRI money was co-mingled with ASLC funds but believed that some of the NPMRI money given to the ASLC was used to purchase the Depot.

NPMRI established office space in Anchorage and hired a couple of employees but the funds were physically handled by the ASLC for a fee. [redacted] wanted a physical presence in Anchorage for the ASLC and therefore sub-leased space from NPMRI. [redacted] form a non-profit for the ASLC to administer the NPMRI but it was never done.

After the purchase of the Depot, the property deed was issued to the SAMMS board and not the ASLC. [redacted] advised this occurred because the ASLC is not a legal entity and therefore there was no legal liability. [redacted] explained that the ASLC name is only a trade name. In the event of a ASLC default, everything physically located at the ASLC would go to the City of Seward. [redacted] went on to explain his opinion regarding the SAMMS ownership of property and the City of Seward lease to the ASLC. [redacted] opined that the original lease does not give the City of Seward ownership of SAMMS property. [redacted] also opined that federally appropriated funds should not be inappropriately used via the SAMMS board.

[redacted] went to explain where he thought federally funded money could be inappropriately used. [redacted] explained that the funds originating through the NPRMB and NPRMI came as a result of a dispute between the state of Alaska and the United States regarding property located in Alaska. According to [redacted] a United States Supreme Court decision rendered that the property was owned by the United States. A large amount of money was given to the federal government. SENATOR STEVENS pushed to have $800 million directed to the federal government while another $800 million was steered to the National Park Service and Fish and Wildlife. The remaining amount was to be placed into an account and the interest gained would be given to the NPRMB and NPRMI. [redacted] advised this pot of money could be "funny" money meaning it could easily be directed with new legislation.

[redacted] was asked if he recalled the resolution of the bond that was issued to the ASLC from the City of Seward. To date, [redacted] advised the remaining funds are in a single bank account because the ASLC is unsure of how to spend the remainder.

[redacted] was uncomfortable with the federal appropriations because he did not think the ASLC management was going to utilize it the way SENATOR TED STEVENS had envisioned the use of the funds. [redacted] felt that SENATOR STEVENS would want the remaining funds to be used for the benefit of the City of Seward. [redacted] wanted to use the funds to make repairs at the

Dear Special Agent Fryslie:

Attached please find a copy of a 21-page letter to Principal Deputy Chief Brenda Morris of the Public Integrity Section of the DoJ Criminal Division.

I believe the letter will provide information of assistance to you in your investigation of corruption in Alaska.

Briefly, the National Legal and Policy Center is an ethics watch dog group with a strong record of exposing corruption. It was NLPC's investigation of conflicts of interest of a former Air Force official, [redacted] that led to the unraveling of the multi-billion-dollar tanker deal. Our complaint to the DoD IG made the front page of the Wall Street Journal and within months both [redacted] and Boeing [redacted] pled guilty to conspiracy to violate federal conflict of interest laws. Both went to federal prison. My own 32 yerars as an attorney include service as a prosecutor.

The attached letter documents that the Utah land deal involving Sen. Stevens and [redacted] and two others was far more profitable to Stevens than was previously reported. Stevens made more than $322,000 on an investment of $1,001 to $15,000. His return on investment was a minimum of 2,150%.

More importantly, our investigation shows that the three co-investors of Sen. Stevens in the Utah land deal were all business associates of [redacted] just prior to the land deal. In 1998, the year Stevens received a 25% interest in Grantsville Development Co., LLC, the vehicle for the Utah land deal, a company owned by [redacted] was facing a loss of as much as $400 million if legislation introduced by Stevens (American Fisheries Act) became law.

Stevens dramatically changed his legislation - which would have eliminated [redacted] fleet of factory trawlers in the Bering Sea with no compensation whatsoever. His newly revised legislation gave American Seafoods a generous buyout in which the company received most of a $90 million payment which included a $20 million sum from the taxpayer. Stevens used his position as Chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee to make sure this expensive buyout was part of the deal.

American Seafoods also received a valuable allotment of fishing rights

194A-AN-14699-SLC-49
~~194A-AN-13620~~-SLC

for [redacted] The allotment was supposed to be subject to sunset but in 2001 Stevens eliminated the sunset provision in a closed-door conference committee. Interestingly, also in 2001 Stevens received a $58,477 payment from his Grantsville investment. Stevens' [redacted] in drafting the American Fisheries Act, [redacted] had become [redacted] of At-Sea Processors Association, the trade group controlled by [redacted]

And for background color [redacted] was subsequently found guilty of bribing a government official in Europe and went to prison briefly for that crime.

I would be happy to FedEx you the complete filing which, with exhibits, runs a bit over a 100 pages with the exhibits. just let me know the proper address.

Re: Utah land deal co-investors with Senator Stevens were financially tied to major beneficiary of the Senator's legislative favors

b6

Dear Principal Deputy Chief Morris:

The facts set forth in this letter provide important details regarding a highly profitable Utah land deal entered into by Senator Ted Stevens in 1998.

The information provided will show that the land deal was far more lucrative than was previously reported in the media. It appears that an investment of $1,001 to $15,000 resulted in a profit of more than $322,000. The return on investment exceeded 2,150%. There is reason to believe that the deal may have greatly exceeded these figures since the higher end of the $1,001 to $15,000 range for the purchase price was used in the calculation.

Other aspects of the deal raise very serious questions as to whether the timing of the transaction coincided with Sen. Stevens' decision to sharply change his position on legislation in a manner that saved the financial interests of a [redacted] tens of millions of dollars.

Stevens had proposed legislation which would have had the effect of banning large commercial fishing trawlers from Alaskan waters with no compensation for the owners. [redacted] of the trawlers to be banned.

After Stevens was invited to buy a 25% interest in Grantsville Development Co., L.L.C. for $1,001 to $15,000 in 1998, he changed his position substantially on the fishing legislation to allow for a buyout of designated trawlers for $95 million with $20 million coming from the federal government.

Given that the current indictment against Stevens cites failure to properly disclose key information regarding things of value received by Stevens on Financial Disclosure Reports as required by the Ethics in Government Act and 18 U.S.C. § 1001, it is important to note that Stevens failed to disclose the date of his purchase of a financial share in the L.L.C. involved in the land deal, as required by the Ethics in Government Act. This may be a critical omission because during 1998 Stevens substantially altered legislation to benefit the Norwegian billionaire.

The connection between the [redacted] and the Utah land deal can be found buried in two separate Securities and Exchange Commission filings.

Each of Stevens' three Grantsville Development Company, L.L.C. co-investors and the company's developer in Utah had financial ties to the billionaire's financial holdings prior to Stevens joining the company in 1998.

[redacted] who assisted Stevens in the legislation, received a well-paying executive position with a trade association dominated by the financial interests of the billionaire after Stevens changed his position on the legislation.

Over the past year, the National Legal and Policy Center (NLPC) investigated a Utah land deal in which Stevens was involved from 1998 to 2004. The deal was investigated beginning in July, 2007 when NLPC filed a complaint before the Senate Ethics Committee questioning the legality of the sale of a prime Alaskan real estate parcel on the Kenai River to Senator Lisa Murkowski (R-AK) by real estate developer [redacted] at far below the market price.[1] The day after NLPC filed the complaint, Sen. Murkowski announced that she would sell the property back to [redacted][2] b6 b7C [redacted] involvement in the improper Murkowski land deal and his numerous other questionable financial ties to Senator Stevens led NLPC to focus on the 1998 Utah land deal.

Central to NLPC's investigation was a 1998 investment in an Alaskan limited liability corporation, Grantsville Development Co. The investment was first disclosed in the Financial Disclosure Report for the year 1998 filed by Sen. Stevens in 1999. Under Part IIIB – Non-Publicly Traded Assets and Unearned Income Sources, the asset was identified as follows:

> Grantsville Development Co., Anchorage, AK
> (Subdivision development in Grantsville, UT)[3]

Under Valuation of Assets Stevens checked the box indicating that the value of the asset was in the range of $1,001 to $15,000.

The co-investors in Grantsville Development Co. were:

[redacted]

[redacted]

[redacted] of former Anchorage developer [redacted] who has been working on the Grantsville project

A 2004 Associated Press story on the investment listed [redacted] and Sen. Stevens as each owning 25% with former Anchorage resident [redacted] owning 40% and [redacted] owning 10%.[4]

In the same Associated Press story [redacted] was quoted as saying another attractive feature of the land deal for Stevens was that, as a limited partner, Stevens would not be liable for the debt if the project failed.[5] b6 b7C

Participation in the non-publicly traded Grantsville Development Co. was by invitation only. The reason Senator Stevens was singled out for the lucrative opportunity was candidly explained in the same Associated Press story:

> [redacted] said he and his business partners invited Stevens to join them in "appreciation for all he's done for Alaska and the country. We respect him very much."[6]

The investment itself was in a 96-acre tract of land about 30 miles southwest of Salt Lake City, Utah. [redacted] stated that the property was subdivided and about 14 lots had been sold with another 30 to 40 to be sold over three to ten years.[7]

Failure to Disclose Purchase Information on 1998 Financial Disclosure Report

Since the investment was made in 1998, Stevens was also required to disclose purchase information in Part IV. Transactions. The instructions accompanying this part of the Financial Disclosure Report are quite clear:

> Report any purchase, sale, or exchange by you, your spouse or dependent child (see page 3, Part B of the instructions) during the reporting period of any real property, stocks, bonds, commodity futures, and other securities when the amount of the transaction exceeded $1,000.[8]

By failing to file any account of his purchase of his interest in this section, Stevens avoided having to disclose on what date the transaction took place. The date of purchase is especially critical since it was during 1998 that Senator Stevens reversed himself on major fishing legislation which had a multi-million-dollar impact on the financial interests of [redacted] whose financial interests benefited from Stevens' legislative actions and who had financial ties to all of Stevens' co-investors in Grantsville Development Co.

b7C

Copies of the warranty deed transferring title to Grantsville Development Co. and the quit claim deed of water rights transferring water rights to Grantsville Development Co. were both dated May 21, 1998. (attached as Exhibits A and B) Neither document states the price paid by Grantsville Development Co. and neither provides any indication as to whether Sen. Stevens owned his interest at the time of the purchase.

Sweet Deal: Investment of $1,001 to $15,000 Generates $187,585 in Income in 7 Years

Stevens' Financial Disclosure Reports for the years 1998 through 2003 show that Stevens earned a net total of $187,585 for the years 1998 through 2004 before selling the investment in 2004 for $150,000:

Sen. Stevens' Income from Grantsville Development Co.
Source: Part IIIB – Non-Publicly Traded Assets and Unearned Income
Stevens' Financial Disclosure Reports 1998 -2003

1999	(-$31)
2000	(-$116)
2001	$58,477
2002	$4,259
2003	$65,018
2004	$60,012

[8] Financial Disclosure Report for the year 1998 filed by Senator Theodore Stevens, Part IV. Transactions.

Net total income: $187,585

For an investment of $15,000 to generate $187,585 in income over just seven years – prior to selling the asset for $150,000 – is phenomenal. Keeping in mind that the actual amount invested was in the range of $1,001 to $15,000, it is quite possible that the return on investment may have been even more spectacular if the amount invested was closer to the $1,001 figure.

Secretive Deal

b7C

The Utah land deal was not just secretive in that Stevens never disclosed the date of purchase on his Financial Disclosure Report, as required by law, but also in the responses of Stevens and [redacted] to press inquiries.

Over the years, Senator Stevens was reticent to discuss the investment. When inquiries were made by the Associated Press about the $65,018 Stevens listed in income from the investment in his Financial Disclosure Report for 2003, AP reported:

> "When it comes to the senator's growth or losses in his financial disclosure form, his financial disclosure form is all that we're required to release, so we're not going to expand upon it," [Stevens'] spokeswoman [redacted] told the Anchorage News.[9]

[redacted] appeared especially deceptive in his efforts to explain to the Associated Press how Stevens could earn $65,018 in 2003 on such a modest investment.:

> Stevens, in the disclosure form required annually of all senators, reported that last year he earned "income" of $65,018 from the Grantsville development. [redacted] said that figure corresponds to the amount the investment appreciated over the year, not any cash payments.[10]

[redacted] statement appears to contradict the plain language of the Financial Disclosure Reports. Not only is his claim that somehow the amount listed as income was actually the value of the appreciation not consistent with the plain meaning of "income," but any appreciation is already reportable in Block B: Valuation of Assets under Part IIIB – Non-Publicly Traded Assets and Unearned Income Sources.

The scrutiny Stevens received over his Utah and other real estate investments apparently upset him. On December 28, 2004, he sold his interest in Grantsville Development Co. and put the assets in a blind trust:

> "There's just no possibility of having any kind of [9] "Stevens investment grows at least 566 percent," Associated Press, June 21, 2004.

> investment of mine at home without bringing the wrath of the media on anyone that was involved in those investments," Stevens said, citing reports in the Daily News, the Los Angeles Times, and the New York Times.[11]

Even in disclosing the sale of his assets, Stevens continued to be secretive:

> Except for the $150,000 note he personally negotiated for the Utah property, he would not say how much he made from his investments until he is required to file that information as a regular disclosure in May. He said the assets were disposed by a retired accountant in Anchorage, whom he would not name.
> . . .
>
> "I don't have to answer questions about my investments any longer," Stevens said Friday. "They're going to be disclosed on May 15th and that's going to be it."
>
> However, Stevens was required to file a copy of the December 4 trust agreement at the Senate Public Records office. The 21-page document and attachments showed the accountant and co-trustee to be [redacted] the Anchorage office of KPMG L.L.P. The agreement showed that Stevens' initial deposit was between $250,000 and $500,000 in cash and an unsecured note of between $500,000 and $1 million payable at 8 percent interest over five years.
> The document didn't say whether all that money came from the sales of his Anchorage and Utah investments, and Stevens said he wouldn't answer any more questions until May.[12]

b6
b7C

[redacted] was also in a sour mood when asked about Stevens' sale of his Utah property investment:

> [redacted] reached at his Anchorage office, decried the pressure that led to Stevens' actions.
> "Because of the harassment from the ADN and other media, Senator Stevens has elected to sell and withdraw from our endeavor in Salt Lake City that he's been a partner in for five years," [redacted] said. "It is incredulous that this kind of harassment can be brought against a person trying to have an honest arms-length transaction."[13]

It is interesting that [redacted] described Senator Stevens as "a person trying to have an honest arms-length transaction" with respect to the lucrative Utah land deal. Stevens sold his interest in Grantsville Development Co. on December 28, 2004 for $150,000[14] and he reported in Attachment 5 of that same Financial Disclosure Report:

> The Note received from the sale of Grantsville was from Nickel, Inc. and provided for interest at a rate of 4% and is payable in full on June 5, 2005.[15]

Alaska corporate records show that Nickel, Inc. is clearly affiliated with [redacted] who serves as its [redacted] who has been associated with [redacted] Penland Sales. Other officers and/or shareholders according to the records at the Alaska Division of Banking, Securities and Corporations include [redacted]

Of those affiliated with Nickel, Inc. [redacted] and [redacted] are each listed on RGI Realty, Inc.'s SEC Schedule 13D filing of 1996 which shows the three co-investors of Stevens in the Grantsville Development Company, L.L.C. financially tied to [redacted] company. (See Exhibit D)

It appears that [redacted] idea of an arms-length transaction is one in which an elected official who has done legislative favors for a businessman can be invited into an extremely profitable private real estate deal, earn many times over the minimal amount invested, have no debt liability if the deal goes bad and then sell the investment back to a company associated with the same businessman for a privately negotiated price which happens to be at least ten times the amount invested.

This would appear to be the exact opposite of an arms-length transaction.

It would appear to be a textbook example of a sweetheart deal – an investment purposely structured to result in a large profit for the beneficiary with little or no risk.

Stevens' Co-investors Were All Financially Tied to [redacted] and his Companies

As noted, Senator Stevens had a 25% interest in Grantsville Development Company, L.L.C. with [redacted] also having a 25% interest [redacted] having a 40% interest and [redacted], having the remaining 10%.[16]

An examination of Securities and Exchange Commission filings of companies substantially owned and controlled by Norwegian [redacted] shows:

- all three of Steven's co-investors in Grantsville Development Company, L.L.C. were financially tied to [redacted] company before they invested with Stevens in Grantsville.

- the largest shareholder in Grantsville [redacted] received financial compensation from another Rokke firm, RGI Holdings, Inc.

- [redacted] the Grantsville Devlopment Company, L.L.C. employee/agent, also received financial compensation from RGI Holdings, Inc.

RGI Realty and Sen. Stevens' Co-Investors in Grantsville Development Co., L.L.C.

In a Schedule 13D Statement of Beneficial Ownership filed by RGI Realty, Inc. with the Securities and Exchange Commission on January 29, 1996, all three of Stevens' 1998 co-investors in Grantsville Development Company, L.L.C. [redacted] were listed as filers.[17] b6 b7C

The filing identified RGI Realty, Inc. as a Florida corporation and a wholly-owned subsidiary of RGI International which was described as a wholly-owned subsidiary of RGI Denmark. RGI Denmark was described as a Danish limited liability corporation and a wholly-owned subsidiary of RGI Europe which, in turn, was described as a Netherlands corporation which was a wholly-owned subsidiary of RGI Antilles. Finally, [redacted] a citizen of Norway, [redacted] of the outstanding stock of RGI Antilles N.V., a Netherlands Antilles limited liability corporation.[18]

In short, [redacted] RGI Realty, Inc., the company which listed the three future Stevens' co-investors in Grantsville Development Company, L.L.C. on its Statement of Beneficial Ownership form.

This heavy [redacted] interest by [redacted] though somewhat obscured by the chain of subsidiaries, is critical to this case because [redacted] was also [redacted] American Seafoods, a large commercial fishing company which stood to lose tens of millions of dollars if the original version of Stevens' American Fisheries Act legislation passed. RGI Holdings, Inc. and Sen. Stevens' Co-Investors in Grantsville Development Co., L.L.C.

In a Schedule 13D Statement of Beneficial Ownership filed by RGI Holdings, Inc. with the Securities and Exchange Commission on November 1, 1996, two individuals financially tied to the Grantsville Development Co., L.L.C. in 1998 when Stevens bought his 25% share are disclosed as receiving financial compensation from a company [redacted][19]

The first individual is [redacted] identified as having a [redacted] stake in Grantsville.[20] She was named in the prior submittal of RGI Realty, Inc.'s Schedule 13D Statement of Beneficial Ownership on January 29, 1996, supra.

The second individual disclosed as receiving financial compensation from [redacted] RGI Holdings, Inc. is [redacted] was identified in the Associated Press account just cited as the [redacted].[21] The account further quoted [redacted] as describing [redacted] as a former Anchorage developer who has been working on the project in Grantsville.[22]

The Warranty Deed and Quit Claim Deed of Water Rights for the Grantsville property listed [redacted] as the representative of Grantsville Development Company, L.L.C. to receive copies of both documents after they were recorded.[23]

Buried at the end of the S.E.C. filing as an exhibit is a professional services contract between RGI and Goodman Financial Services, Inc. which shows the sum of $500,000 paid to [redacted] with the following explanation:

The RGI Holdings, Inc. filing to the Securities and Exchange Commission documents that RGI Holdings, Inc. is owned in large part by [redacted]

The filing states that RGI Holdings, Inc. is a Washington corporation and 75% owned by a subsidiary of RGI Real Estate, Inc. which was described as a Washington corporation and a wholly-owned subsidiary of RGI International, which is a Washington corporation and a wholly owned subsidiary of RGI Denmark. The filing went on to declare that RGI Denmark is a Danish limited liability corporation and a wholly-owned subsidiary of RGI (Europe) B.V., a Netherlands corporation and wholly-owned subsidiary of RGI Antilles. It identified [redacted] as a "citizen of Norway and the owner of approximately [redacted] of the outstanding capital stock of RGI Antilles, N.V.[26]

In short, [redacted] s RGI Holdings, Inc.

The key point here are that one company owned by [redacted] listed all three of the individuals who in 1998 were co-investors with Senator Stevens in an incredibly lucrative land deal in a Statement of Beneficial Ownership filed by one of his companies, RGI Realty, Inc.

b6
b7C

Later in the same year, [redacted] disclosed that [redacted], the largest shareholder in the subsequent land deal with Senator Stevens, was financially compensated by a different company of his, RGI Holdings, Inc. along with financial compensation going to [redacted] who played a key role in developing the lucrative Grantsville Development Company property in Utah.

This is quite a coincidence considering that [redacted] would be saved tens of millions of dollars by an abrupt change in Senator Stevens' position on fishing legislation in 1998, the same year that Stevens would be enriched by a wildly lucrative land deal with the same three people so closely tied to [redacted]

The American Fisheries Act, as Originally Written by Sen. Stevens, Would Have Been a Financial Disaster to American Seafoods Company, [redacted]

On September 25, 1997, Senator Ted Stevens (R-AK), Chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, introduced the American Fisheries Act (AFA), S. 1221. The ostensible purpose of this legislation was "to prevent foreign ownership and control of United States flag vessels employed in the fisheries . . . of the United States."

The real purpose of this legislation appeared to be to expel economically-efficient factory trawlers from fishing in the lucrative Bering Sea. Approximately 55 factory trawlers, many of which were based in Seattle, Washington, were so successful that they were taking an increasingly larger share of the annual Pollock harvest from Alaska's onshore canneries. The annual Pollock catch was worth about $1 billion in 1997.[27]

American Seafoods Co., a Seattle-based factory trawler operator, stood to be the biggest loser if the bill was approved. American Seafoods was a wholly-owned subsidiary of Aker RGI, a Norwegian multinational conglomerate [redacted] According to [redacted] of United Catcher Boats and an AFA supporter, American Seafoods harvested 42 percent of the offshore Pollock fishery ("We Need the American Fisheries Act," PR Newswire, June 2, 1998.)

b7C

Stevens' AFA was the result of years of increasingly bitter feuding between the Alaskan canneries and that state's congressional delegation, most notably Stevens and Rep. Don Young, and the factory ship owners and the Washington State delegation, lead by Senator Slade Gorton (R-WA). After Stevens introduced the bill, a spokesman for American Seafoods, which had 16 trawlers operating in the Bering Sea at the time, flatly stated that the proposal would put it out of business.[28]

It was widely recognized by the media and interested parties that American Seafoods was Stevens' primary target. In a March 11, 1998 article in the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, columnist Bruce Ramsey wrote, "The bill is aimed squarely at American Seafoods."

Stevens goal was to "Alaskanize" the Bering Sea fisheries by revoking the fishing licenses of 18 factory trawlers. American Seafoods, number one in the industry, owned 12 of those 18 ships. There would be no compensation. American Seafoods would lose millions of dollars since the ships were largely built to operate only in the Bering Sea.

Among the bill's provisions, a ship could not be more than 165 feet long and had to be 75 percent U.S.-owned. Both provisions were clearly tailored to eliminate American Seafoods' giant trawlers.

"This is not a gentle law. It is a law that grabs one's opponents by the ears and heaves him into the sea," noted the columnist [redacted][29]

Stevens' proposed AFA was considered by some experts to be so draconian that it could be considered an illegal "taking" of property if there was no compensation for the ship owners. Maritime law expert [redacted] of Preston Gates & Ellis said, "They're effectively taking the vessel asset. He added that the law could be struck down as a bill of attainder, a law that targets a specific person or group of persons.

b6

While the questionable legality of the law could be viewed by American Seafoods as a potent weapon to oppose Stevens, any legal victory would have been a hollow one. Getting a decision from the courts could take five years, by which time the boats would have been seized and the crews scattered.

American Seafoods was facing a financial disaster if it did not stop the enactment of AFA in 1998 or at least substantially amend it.

July 1998: Bitter Deadlock Over American Fisheries Act

By July 1998, the legislative battle in the U.S. Senate over the American Fisheries Act had intensified but neither side seemed capable of defeating the other. Supporting the bill was its author, Sen. Stevens, who used his powerful position as Chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee to insert the legislation into a must-pass spending measure.[30]

Opposing the bill was Sen. Slade Gorton (R-WA) who was representing the trawlers and crews based in his own state of Washington. Gorton had a powerful ally in Sen. John Ashcroft (R-MO) as well as other senators who viewed the bill as antithetical to private property rights. These senators correctly pointed out that about two-thirds of the onshore fish processors were owned by the Japanese so Stevens' argument that his bill would Americanize the fishing industry in the Bering Sea rang hollow.

Sen. Gorton was especially angry that Sen. Stevens was trying to use his Appropriations Committee to force the measure through. Gorton argued that the committee with the expertise in this area was the Commerce Committee.

Both Senators Gorton and Patty Murray (D-WA) threatened to filibuster the AFA to death. Stevens retaliated by threatening to force repeated votes and attach the measure to other must-pass legislation.[31]

American Seafoods was making the case that the AFA was an illegal "takings" as the centerpiece of the opposition:

> "It's clearly a takings issue. We're talking about a much as $400 million in assets that would be rendered worthless," said [redacted] for American Seafoods.[32]

Movement to Compromise over American Fisheries Act Terms

The legislative deadlock in July 1998 led directly to efforts to work out a compromise. American Seafoods, with its very financial existence at stake, began signaling its willingness to compromise. The first move came from the At-Sea Processors Association (APA), the trade association for the factory ships of which American Seafoods was the largest member.

[redacted] for APA, stated, "that he hopes a cooperative approach can move the debate forward, and possibly remove the pressure to pass 1221." [redacted] also said that his members had agreed to shift all vessels to majority U.S. ownership.[33]

For his part, Sen. Stevens also signaled willingness to compromise when he withdrew an appropriations rider he had originally sponsored as an end-run to get AFA enacted.[34]

An August 12 article in the Seattle Post-Intelligencer announced that Senator Slade Gorton will preside over a "peace conference" for Pollock operators. Participants included owners of factory trawlers, fishermen, catcher boats, mother ships (ships that fishing boats bring their catch to for on-sea processing; factory trawlers catch and process) and Alaskan shore plants. The August 18 meeting was held at Davis Wright Tremaine law offices.[35]

Gorton's goal was to find a formula to reduce the number of boats, especially the trawlers, acceptable to all parties. This article was the first to explicitly state that "Stevens agreed to let Gorton try to work out a compromise."

Both sides applauded the meeting. The American Fisheries Act Coalition was pleased that Gorton had agreed to retiring the boats. The factory trawler companies were pleased that Gorton insisted that "all present participants are in it legally" and that any reduction in boats "be done in a manner that recognizes the economic interests of all."

The Seattle Post-Intelligencer noted, "The pro-Stevens side may try to sell Gorton on a boat buyback. [redacted] of Victor Seafoods, stated, "Some compensation might be possible to owners of kicked-out boats." But he insisted that the foreign-built boats had to go. [redacted] said that "is clearly Senator Stevens' issue, and we're not in a position to negotiate it away."[36]

But one unidentified boat company boss said the problem with a buyback is who pays. "I don't think the government is going to put down money to buy factory trawlers."

[redacted] Makes a Rare Appearance

[redacted] of American Seafoods, [redacted] was never quoted or made any official statement during the months of intense debate. The one and only time he was mentioned was the Seattle Post-Intelligencer August 12 article.

[redacted] [American seafood's [redacted] was in Seattle a few weeks ago. [redacted] would not confirm it, but several sources said [redacted] talked with representatives [37] of Alaskan villages, which have bought interests in other factory trawlers. They don't have the cash to buy American's fleet, but politically they would be unassailable."

b6
b7C

There was a lot of movement among the debate's key participants in the two-week period from late July to August 10-12:

- Stevens drops his appropriations rider to ban foreign-owned ships.
- Stevens signs off onto Gorton's August 18 peace conference to seek a compromise.
- The At-Sea Processors Asssociation and American Seafood's [redacted] agree to the American-ownership requirement.
- The American Fisheries Act advocates propose a boat buyback.

Second Compromise Meeting: September 10, 1998

Senator Gorton's August 18, 1998 meeting failed in its objective to broker an industry consensus on an AFA compromise acceptable to Stevens. In the first week of September, Gorton and Stevens met again, and the two moved closer toward an agreement among themselves.[38] Stevens then summoned the fishing executives to Washington, DC to try again for a deal.

On September 9, Stevens proposed a five-year deal that would toughen U.S. ownership requirements on foreign-controlled operators, but not force them to surrender ships. However, Stevens' plan did call for the factory trawler companies to give up some ships. Stevens proposed "to create a $40 million fund to buy out others and reallocate the Pollock catch so the remaining operators would be more certain to profit."[39]

During the ensuing discussions, there were several offers and counter offers that sometimes got heated. Nevertheless, both parties showed signs of willingness to compromise. The biggest remaining obstacle was Gorton's objection to Stevens' proposal to give the Alaskan onshore plants 50 percent of the catch – a substantial increase over the 35 percent they had at the time.

Participants, however, said those differences "could be bridged by sweetening other aspects of the deal, such as the amount of money to buy out factory trawlers so owner investments can be recovered."[40]

On September 10, after three days of negotiations, a tentative agreement was reached. Under the plan worked out by Stevens and Gorton, nine fishing vessels, including factory trawlers based in Seattle, would be retired but the owners would be compensated. At that time, the figure given was $92 million which would include some federal money.[41] Stevens' position as Senate Appropriations Committee Chairman enabled him to ensure that federal money would sweeten the deal for [redacted] American Seafoods through compensation for the lost trawlers.

The Alaskan shore plants would be allocated 50 percent of the catch, an increase from their 35 percent share at the time. Offshore vessels -- factory trawlers, mother ships and catcher boats -- would be allocated 40 percent after the retirement of the nine ships. Their share had been 65 percent. The factory trawlers alone had been getting 50 percent.

Of the $90 million dedicated for compensation of the factory ship owners, the federal government will kick in $20 million while the onshore plants would kick in $70 million.[42]

The general feeling among participants and observers was that this was the best deal possible for American Seafoods and the other companies. "The reality of it was, sooner or later they were going to lose, at least this way they were bought out," said [redacted] of Profish International and a North Pacific Council board member [redacted] of the APA said his members should get up to 20 percent improved yield under the agreement and operate more efficiently.

The agreement was described as ending "what had become a state of siege" for American Seafoods." Under the agreement, American Seafoods would probably have to cut up to half of its 15 factory ships and restructure to 75 percent U.S. ownership. It would be left with less quota, but that will better match its reduced fleet. [redacted] American Seafoods' [redacted] said, "There are a lot of positives in this agreement. We had to make some sacrifices, but it looks like it will work for everybody."[43]

Stevens' [redacted] Played Key Role in Hammering Out Agreement

[redacted] in hammering out the AFA compromise agreement. Between the announcement of the September 10 tentative agreement and the final AFA legislation enacted into law on October 21, [redacted] was frequently cited or quoted. According to one news account, "Since September 10, congressional staffers [redacted] have been working overtime trying to write the many details into legislation while keeping the complicated balance of fishing interests from unraveling."[44]

At this stage of the negotiations – about October 7 – the provisions had identified eight factory trawlers owned by American Seafoods that would be scrapped. A vessel from another company would also be eliminated.

The buyout had modestly increased to $95 million. Per the September 10 agreement, the federal government would directly pay out $20 million. The other $75 million would be a government loan to the onshore processors so they can buy out the rest of the ships. The money would be repaid by the plants over 25 years through a per-pound tax on fish delivered to them.

b6

The quotas were finalized with the onshore plants getting 50 percent, the factory trawlers getting 40 percent and 10 percent to three floating processing ships that process but don't catch the fish.[45]

The AFA compromise was enacted into law when President Bill Clinton signed the new federal budget on October 21, 1998. [redacted] of American Seafoods said, "Our fishing fleet will be reduced from 15 vessels to seven under this. But we believe that with the ability to form a cooperative we will be able to get more value out of the same amount of fish."[46]

What the AFA Meant for [redacted] and American Seafoods.

In fiscal 1997, Aker RGI generated $101 million in net profits on revenues of $3.4 billion. RGI started as a fishing company but by the time of the 1997-1998 AFA debate, it had diversified into clothing, athletic shoes and real estate. In 1996, [redacted] Seattle-based real estate company called Legend Properties.

In the first nine months of 1998, RGI Seafoods Corp., the RGI subsidiary that owned American Seafoods' vessels, lost $17.7 million on $38 million in revenues. RGI's $54 million in profits came mostly from its concrete and shipyard operations.

[46] Arthur Gorlick, "Deal Near on North Pacific Pollock; Proposal Aims at Placating Bitter Rivals," Seattle Post-Intelligencer, October 20, 1998.

Clearly, the Stevens' legislation forced American Seafoods to significantly downsize its operation but it was hardly going to face hard economic times. Indeed, under the AFA, American Seafoods was allowed to keep its seven best vessels. In addition to getting the better part of $90 million from the federal government and the Alaskan onshore processors, it was guaranteed a 17 percent allocation of the Bering Sea Pollock harvest.

In Stevens' original version of the AFA introduced in September 1997, [redacted] and American Seafoods would have lost 12 ships without any compensation.

Company officials and industry observers were unanimous in saying that version would have meant the end of American Seafoods.[47] Under the circumstances and the worst that could have happened [redacted] and American Seafoods made out very well.

Postscript: [redacted] of the At-Sea Processors Association

As o[redacted] for Senator Stevens.[48] By the beginning of January 2000, [redacted] of the At-Sea Processors Association.[49]

b7C

The provisions in the AFA naming the fishing companies that could participate in the Bering Sea Pollock fishery were supposed to sunset in 2004 which means it would have required reauthorization from Congress and provide recourse for changes needed in the law. But Stevens lifted the sunset provision, thus making the allocations permanent, by circumventing the public hearing process. In November 2001, during a closed-door House and Senate conference meeting on the Commerce-Justice-State spending bill for fiscal 2002, Stevens inserted the language abrogating the sunset provisions.

This aroused considerable ire among fishermen and conservationists. [redacted] t the National Environmental Trust, said, "When they made the allocation permanent, it became a bankable asset.' [redacted] said this would transfer control of the fishery away from fishermen and companies and to the banks that hold the mortgages on the boats and facilities.

[redacted] of the Pacific Coast Federation of Fishermen's Associations said the deal "is a bit too cozy" and convenient. [redacted] said the man who worked out the sunset deal is the same who worked out the AFA – [redacted] The APA, incidentally, approved of the lifting of the sunset provision.

"Every time these companies want to get around the public process they go to Washington, DC, and get someone to take care of it for them," said [redacted] of the Alaska Marine Conservation Council. "The American Fisheries Act is a frightening example of what companies with certain influence can get if they want it."[50]

Postscript: [redacted] Goes to Jail for Bribing a Government Official

We do not have to wonder if [redacted] is the type of person who would bribe a government official.

He is.

He not only bribed a government official but he was found guilty and he served a brief jail sentence for his crime.

[redacted] conviction on bribery was covered more heavily in the European press because of his Norwegian citizenship, but as [redacted] of the Kvaerner Philadelphia Shipyard, the conviction was also covered in The Philadelphia Inquirer.[51]

b6
b7C

The key points in the story are pretty straightforward:

> [redacted] the Kvaerner Philadelphia shipyard, faces 30 days in prison after his conviction Friday on charges he bribed a maritime official to obtain a yacht operator's license.
> He was convicted in a district court in Oslo, Norway, home of his Business empire, which employs 40,000 worlwide."

[redacted] has been among the richest persons in the world for some time. A 1998 Forbes article "World Billionaires" listed [redacted] as having a net worth of approximately $775 million.[52] This year Forbes listed [redacted] in a March 5, 2008 article, "The World's Billionaires," as #[redacted] with an estimated net worth of $2.9 billion.

Conclusion

The gravamen of this case could not be simpler.

An influential U.S. Senator, currently indicted in connection with corruption, had made a spectacularly successful real estate investment in a Utah land deal Each of his co-investors were financially tied to a [redacted] whose financial interests in Alaska were in enormous peril from legislation proposed and pushed hard by the senator. In the same year the senator is invited to purchase a 25% interest in Grantsville Development Company, he makes a series of legislative compromises which mean financial survival for American Seafoods.

The case for the Department of Justice to investigate this matter further rests on these points:

1. The land deal was just too lucrative to be a standard investment

   A. Stevens' investment of $1,001 to $15,000 resulted in a profit of more than $322,000.

   B. The return on investment for Stevens exceeded 2,150%.

   C. [redacted] invited Stevens into a deal, which was not open to the public, because of their "appreciation of all he's done for Alaska..."

   D. The deal was not an arms-length transaction because [redacted] was a longtime political benefactor (contributions, gifts, business deals) of Stevens who had sought and received legislative favors from Stevens. b6 b7C

   E. The deal was also not an arms-length transaction because Stevens ultimately sold his interest in Grantsville to Nickel, Inc., a company [redacted] for a price that Stevens personally negotiated with Nickel, Inc.

2. The Grantsville Development Company co-investors had financial ties to two different companies [redacted] prior to Stevens being sold a 25% interest in Grantsville.

   A. Stevens [redacted] all were listed on an SEC Schedule 13D, Statement of Beneficial Ownership filing by RGI Realty, a company [redacted] as having an interest in RGI Realty, Inc.

   B. [redacted] interest in Grantsville, and [redacted] the Utah development, were both disclosed to have received financial compensation from a second corporation owned and controlled by Rokke, RGI Holdings, Inc., according to a Securities and Exchange filing by RGI Holdings, Inc.

FBI - Stevens-10935

3. Sen. Stevens' original version of the American Fisheries Act would have meant financial ruin for American Seafoods, a company largely [redacted]

   A. The director of government affairs for American Seafoods estimated that passage of the original version of Stevens' legislation would have resulted in "as much as $400 million in assets that would be rendered worthless."

   B. American Seafoods owned 12 of 18 trawlers which would have had their rights to fish in the Bering Sea revoked with no compensation whatsoever.

4. The compromise legislation subsequently enacted with Stevens' support was substantially better for [redacted] financial interests.

   A. American Seafoods was allowed to keep its seven best vessels.

   B. American Seafoods received the largest share of the approximately $90 million in compensatory funding, of which $20 million came from the federal budget directly with Stevens' assistance in the appropriations process.

   C. American Seafoods was guaranteed a 17% allotment of the Bering Sea Pollock harvest.

5. Other possible sweeteners related to this issue:

   A. Stevens' [redacted], became [redacted] the trade association, At-sea Processors Association, the group in which [redacted] company was the most powerful member.

   B. In November 2001, during a closed-door House and Senate Conference meeting on the Commerce-Justice-State spending bill for Fiscal Year 2002, Stevens lifted the sunset provisions in the American Fisheries Act, making the Pollock allocation permanent, a move that greatly favored American Seafoods. An interesting note is that 2001 saw the Grantsville Development Company pay Stevens $58,477 in income, the first income he received from the investment since purchasing it in 1998.[53]

b6

[53] Financial Disclosure Report for the year 2001 filed by Senator Stevens, Part III- Non-PublicallyTraded Assets and Unearned Income Sources.

The Utah land deal is inherently questionable because it has all the telltale features of a classic sweetheart deal between a favor-seeker and a public official: spectacular profit, minimum risk, a transaction not available to the public, and a veil of secrecy which includes the public official's failure to disclose the transaction properly on his Financial Disclosure Report.

Add to that, the track record of [redacted] as a gift-giver, political contributor and business associate to Stevens and other Alaskan political figures, and it looks even more like a sweetheart deal thinly disguised as a land investment. The fact that Stevens ultimately sold his interest to a company controlled by [redacted] and not on the open market makes the Utah land deal a textbook example of a sweetheart deal.

[redacted] certainly had a compelling reason to want to ingratiate himself to Stevens and those close to Stevens since he stood to lose hundreds of millions of dollars if Stevens could not be assuaged in his long term goal to "Americanize" the Bering Sea fishing operations.

In this context, what are the odds that all three of Stevens' co-investors in the Utah land deal just happened to have prior financial ties with [redacted] financial interests?

And that two of the individuals involved in the Grantsville Development Company – the largest single interest-holder and [redacted] the actual development – were on the receiving end of financial compensation from a different company owned by [redacted] through a series of subsidiaries ultimately owned by a Netherlands Antilles corporation in which [redacted]

Given the huge amounts of money involved in this case, the unlikelihood that the financial ties outlined above are just a random coincidence and both the timing and context of the relevant facts, this certainly looks like a classic quid pro quo involving the sale of a public office.

It would be difficult to imagine a more compelling public integrity case.

Given that your office has been conducting a wide-ranging investigation into corruption in Alaska, I hope that this information may be helpful to your efforts. Please don't hesitate to contact me if I can be of assistance.

Sincerely,

[redacted]

ROBERT BURNETTE WILLIAMS, a.k.a. ROCKY WILLIAMS, born August 15, 1950, social security account number 264-92-9363, home address 1200 W. Dimond Boulevard, Space 203, Anchorage, Alaska, home telephone 907-522-3812, cellular telephone 907-244-6016, was interviewed at DENNY'S RESTAURANT on Benson and Denali in Anchorage, Alaska. After being advised of the identities of the interviewing agents and the nature of the interview, WILLIAMS provided the following information:

WILLIAMS started working for VECO during the EXXON VALDEZ oil spill. WILLIAMS later worked for VECO in the ANCHORAGE TIMES office. At some point, WILLIAMS became friends with [redacted] recognized WILLIAMS' diverse knowledge and abilities related to general contracting and remodeling. [redacted] had WILLIAMS remodel [redacted] home and many other homes of [redacted] home was originally a trapper's cabin on a fox farm. WILLIAMS became [redacted] "go-to guy." [redacted] also utilized WILLIAMS for his knowledge of computers. The last VECO project that WILLIAM'S worked on was the "trading bay project." [redacted] was nice [redacted] however, his disposition changed. WILLIAMS currently visits [redacted] about every six months to say hello.

WILLIAMS knew TED STEVENS from fundraisers and because WILLIAMS moved furniture from [redacted] house to TED STEVENS' Girdwood home (STEVENS' home). The project to remodel STEVENS' home was initially a small project but later turned into a big project, lasting six to nine months.

[redacted] TED STEVENS came up with the idea to "jack up" STEVENS' home four feet after the Kenai Classic. [redacted] STEVENS kept talking and the project continued to grow, which made STEVENS more concerned about VECO Corporation doing all of the work. About this time, STEVENS decided he wanted to get a contractor that STEVENS could pay. WILLIAMS suggested they hire [redacted] as the contractor. [redacted] was used previously by WILLIAMS when VECO was [redacted] [redacted] brought two workers to help him with the STEVENS' home project, [redacted] LNU and two other

[redacted]. DICK REDMOND performed the grading. REDMOND is deceased but was STEVENS friend forever. [redacted]. MARK TYREE performed all the plumbing necessary. TYREE is deceased. b6 b7C

When shown a recent color photo of the front of STEVENS' home, WILLIAMS advised a bottom deck was added since his work on STEVENS' home. The pitch of the roof was faulty causing problems when it snowed. WILLIAMS estimated the cost to "jack up" STEVENS' home was approximately $2,500 - $3,000. After the house was jacked up, a VECO engineer created the plans/blueprints after-the-fact for structural integrity. There were no inspections by inspectors and WILLIAMS did not recall having any building permits. The kitchen in the original portion of the home was remodeled. A staircase to the second level kitchen was constructed and the kitchen countertops and cabinets were replaced.

WILLIAMS estimated the total construction costs on STEVENS' home was approximately $240,000, to include all labor and material. Later in the interview, WILLIAMS estimated the total cost to be between $280,000 - $300,000.

WILLIAMS had a VECO truck that he used. It was white with a number on it. WILLIAMS could not recall if the truck had a VECO emblem. WILLIAMS was never asked to hide the VECO truck. STEVENS knew that [redacted] and WILLIAMS were VECO employees. b6 b7C

Near the end of the STEVENS' home remodel project, WILLIAMS received a $2,000 check and two airline tickets from TED [redacted] STEVENS as a tip. WILLIAMS was pleasantly surprised by the gift. TED STEVENS told WILLIAMS he really appreciated his work. [redacted] really liked the remodel. WILLIAMS did not know whether [redacted] received a tip from the STEVENS.

[redacted] went to the FLY-BY-NIGHT CLUB in early September 2006. TED STEVENS and [redacted] were both at the club. WILLIAMS talked to both STEVENS [redacted] but not about STEVENS' home or about recent events involving the FBI. WILLIAMS talked to [redacted] and about STEVENS' [redacted] past trip to the Paris Air Show.

While working for VECO, WILLIAMS installed a new air conditioner in RAMONA BARNES home, patched her roof and built a ramp. BARNES is now deceased. WILLIAMS recalled setting a

The remodel of Ted's Home took approximately nine months to complete. This timeline was gauged from when WILLIAMS recalls the planning began to when the work ended. WILLIAMS never did anything else on Ted's Home after Christmas 2000.

The following documents were gathered in reference to the investigation involving United States Ted Stevens:

1. A letter dated July 5, 2006 from Samuel W. Bodman, the Secretary of Energy, to Governor Frank Murkowski. The letter encourages the State of Alaska to develop the State's natural gas resources because it is in the best interest of the nation's economic and security interests.

2. A letter dated July 10, 2006 from Joseph Kelliher, Chairman of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, to Governor Frank Murkowski. Attached to the letter is the Second Report to Congress on Progress Made in Licensing and Constructing the Alaska Natural Gas Pipeline. The letter highlights that the Alaska State legislature must act to prevent further delay in the construction of a gas pipeline.

3. Notes from the July 7, 2006 meeting of the State Special Committee on Oil and Gas held in Anchorage. United States Senator Ted Stevens addressed the committee and commented that the State legislature must push aside partisan politics and do what's right for the state. He went on to say that what's right for the state is to get the job done and "GET THE PIPELINE BUILT." (He was hammering on the table for emphasis during the last phrase.)

4. A June 29, 2006 press release from the United States Department of Energy Office of Public Affairs which quoted Secretary Bodman, "Alaska's North Slope is a valuable natural resource that has tremendous potential to provide a significant portion of our nation's natural gas needs to help heat homes, and build industry."

5. A transcript of Governor Murkowski's address to the Alaska State legislature on July 13, 2006. In Governor Murkowski's remarks he said that Senator Ted Stevens was right in what he said last Friday- we need to finish the job in this legislature, or you may find yourselves delayed for two years with no further progress."

The Honorable Frank H. Murkowski
Governor of Alaska
Juneau, AK 99811-0001

Dear Governor Murkowski:

I am writing to encourage the leadership of the State of Alaska to complete the necessary legislative and contractual work required to facilitate construction of a transportation system to move Alaska's natural gas to markets. The current natural gas market appears to support the investment needed to construct the Alaska Natural Gas Pipeline. The Federal Government is ready to expedite the Federal permitting processes and has recently executed the Federal Interagency Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) for the Alaska Natural Gas Transportation Project. The MOU was signed by senior executives from fifteen departments and agencies of the Federal Government and establishes a project management framework for cooperation in completing the regulatory approvals that would be required for this major project.

The current forecasts call for dramatic increases in United States natural gas demand while U.S. and Canadian conventional natural gas production has reached a plateau. The Nation will need to find or import more than 13 billion cubic feet per day of new natural gas supplies to meet the Nation's needs by the next decade. Wellhead gas prices in the lower 48 States more than doubled from 2002 to 2005; that price increase has greatly increased consumer natural gas prices and has adversely affected gas intensive industries such as fertilizer production and petrochemicals, resulting in plant closures and job losses.

If the State of Alaska does not conclude necessary legislative and contractual work promptly, Alaskans may lose the opportunity to pursue this project for several years or even a decade. In the global marketplace, capital investment will seek the most attractive projects. Given the global constraints on personnel and other resources, energy companies may re-deploy their resources, resulting in significant delays of an Alaska project. In addition, the opportunity for Alaska natural gas to serve markets in the lower-48 States could be overtaken by LNG imports if Alaska gas is not perceived as a reality to meet demand. We believe strong efforts should be made to make use of American reserves of natural gas, which will promote both national security and domestic economic growth.

FEDERAL ENERGY REGULATORY COMMISSION
WASHINGTON, DC 20426

OFFICE OF THE CHAIRMAN

July 10, 2006

The Honorable Frank H. Murkowski
Governor of Alaska
P.O. Box 110001
Juneau, Alaska 99811-0001

Dear Governor Murkowski:

Enclosed please find a copy of a report entitled Second Report to Congress on Progress Made in Licensing and Constructing the Alaska Natural Gas Pipeline. The report, which is required by section 1810 of the Energy Policy Act of 2005, was prepared by staff of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission and was submitted by me to Congress on July 10, 2006.

The report discusses the significant steps that have taken place in the last six months to move a potential project forward. These include: an agreement on components of a draft contract between the State of Alaska and the Producer Group; the presentation to the Alaska legislature of the draft contract and of legislation bearing on issues relating to a potential pipeline project; the execution of a Federal Agency Memorandum of Understanding among 15 federal departments and agencies, establishing a cooperative project management framework for the approval of an Alaska natural gas pipeline; the nomination of a Federal Coordinator for Alaska Natural Gas Transportation Projects; the issuance by the Department of Energy of an Alaska Natural Gas Needs and Market Assessment; and efforts by Commission staff to prepare to lay the groundwork for fulfilling the Commission's environmental and certificate responsibilities associated with an Alaska natural gas pipeline project application.

On the other hand, the report also notes that because a fiscal contract between project sponsors and the State of Alaska under the Stranded Gas Development Act has not been finalized and approved by the Alaska legislature, the opportunity for beginning meaningful development of an application in 2006 has been missed. Commission staff explains that if a project sponsor is ready to begin developing its application and conducting necessary field surveys in the spring of 2007, it is possible that an application could be filed at the Commission before the end of 2008. Our staff and those of the participating federal agencies have committed to assisting in the development of an application through the Commission's pre-filing process. The report states, however, that whether the project sponsor begins developing an application and conducting field surveys in the spring of 2007 depends largely on the Alaska state legislature acting this summer. If not, the Alaska gas pipeline will be further delayed.

The report also highlights the importance of timing of an Alaska natural gas pipeline. Staff reviews the manner in which U.S. government and industry are acting to obtain natural gas supplies to meet future demand. According to the report, while Alaska North Slope gas once would have competed only with other North American gas production, the U.S. natural gas market is turning increasingly to imported liquefied natural gas (LNG) to meet incremental growth, noting that while North Slope gas reserves represent about 13 percent of North American reserves, they are less than 1 percent of global reserves. The report predicts that given the large capital investment in LNG liquefaction facilities, LNG exporters will prefer to establish long-term relationships, and that if there is no substantial progress on building an Alaska pipeline, gas buyers in the lower 48 states will be more likely to enter into long-term LNG contracts. The report expresses concern that Alaska is at risk of being marginalized in the search for new natural gas supplies for U.S. consumption.

As you know, I have repeatedly stated how important I believe an Alaska natural gas pipeline is to America's energy future. I have directed my staff to work with federal and state authorities, project sponsors, and other interested entities to ensure that any project application submitted to the Commission is timely and thorough. Should the Commission receive such an application, you have my assurance that Commission staff will review it in a highly expeditious manner, so that the Commission is able to act on it as quickly as possible.

If you have any questions about the report or other related matters, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Sincerely,

Joseph T. Kelliher
Chairman

United States Congress

by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission

Second Report to Congress on Progress Made in Licensing and Constructing the Alaska Natural Gas Pipeline

July 10, 2006

Second Report to Congress on Progress Made in Licensing and Constructing the Alaska Natural Gas Pipeline

I. Executive Summary

This report by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (Commission) is submitted pursuant to section 1810 of the Energy Policy Act of 2005 (EPAct 2005).[1] Section 1810 of EPAct 2005 provides that within 180 days of the date of enactment, and every 180 days thereafter until the Alaska natural gas pipeline commences operation, the Commission shall submit to Congress a report describing the progress made in licensing and constructing the Alaska natural gas pipeline and any impediments thereto.

During the period covered by this report, the following events have occurred: an agreement on components of a draft contract between the State of Alaska and the Producer Group; the execution of the Federal Agency Memorandum of Understanding among 15 federal departments and agencies, which establishes a cooperative project management framework for the approval of an Alaska natural gas pipeline; and the nomination of a Federal Coordinator for Alaska Natural Gas Transportation Projects.

The United States energy market is moving forward to make arrangements to obtain adequate natural gas supplies to satisfy future demand. Significant progress has been made in developing infrastructure to support liquefied natural gas (LNG) projects that would satisfy this need. Many nations, in partnership with commercial entities, are quickly bringing LNG supply projects on-line. In the next two to three years, this worldwide capacity to supply LNG to the market will greatly increase.

This report describes the events and the progress that have transpired since the Commission's First Report on February 1, 2006. The report also explains the urgency of completing the next steps toward approval of an Alaskan gas pipeline so that Alaskan gas supplies also can be part of the solution to the nation's growing need for gas.

II. Status Report

A. Status of Three Potential Projects

The three potential projects described in the Commission's First Report are still being pursued by the project sponsors. One of these potential projects is the Alaska Natural Gas Transportation System (ANGTS) which is supported by the TransCanada Corporation. This project is proposed pursuant to the Alaska Natural Gas Transportation Act of 1976 (ANGTA), Canada's Northern Pipeline Act (1978), and a 1977 Agreement on Principles between the United States and Canada. A second potential project is the Trans-Alaska Gas System (TAGS), an LNG export project which is being promoted by the Alaska Gas Port Authority. The third potential project involves an entirely new pipeline to transport gas from the North Slope of Alaska to the Canadian border, which would seek authorization pursuant to the provisions of section 103 of the Alaska Natural Gas Pipeline Act (ANGPA) [2] and section 7 of the Natural Gas Act (NGA).[3] The sponsor of this project is the Producer Group, which is composed of BP, ConocoPhillips, and ExxonMobil.

[1] P.L. 109-58, 119 Stat. 594 (2005), 42 U.S.C §16,523.

FBI - Stevens-3734

B. Progress on Alaska Stranded Gas Development Act Agreement Negotiations and Related Legislation

1. Draft fiscal contract issued

As stated in the Commission's First Report, the Producer Group has indicated that it will only begin to develop an application once it has successfully negotiated a contract establishing fiscal certainty in Alaska. On February 21, 2006, Governor Frank H. Murkowski announced that the State of Alaska and the Producer Group had reached agreement on the major components of an Alaska Stranded Gas Development Act fiscal contract. This agreement represents significant progress towards development of an Alaskan natural gas pipeline.

Under the terms of the draft agreement between the state and the Producer Group, the State of Alaska would own 20 percent of the primary project elements – the gas treatment plant, the mainline in Alaska, and the Alaska-to-Alberta pipeline. The state would own other elements of the project in proportion to its share of the expected throughput in those elements. The state also would receive its royalty gas in kind and receive gas, not cash, in payment of the producers' production tax obligations. In return for the state's participation in and financial support of the project, the producers would receive fiscal stability on their oil and gas obligations in Alaska for decades, as spelled out in the contract.

On May 10, 2006, Governor Murkowski provided the draft fiscal contract to the Alaska legislature for its review and to the public for comment and called the legislature into a special session. The special session was called to consider six subjects, all related to the natural gas pipeline. After the public comment period is completed, the governor's staff will finalize the contract and formally submit it to the state legislature for its approval.[4]

The release of the proposed contract was followed by a series of statewide public hearings and a special session of the state legislature. The first special session that considered the new petroleum production tax changes (see details below) adjourned on June 8, 2006 without the legislature acting on the tax and credit rates. A series of amendments to the Stranded Gas Development Act that are necessary to make that Act conform to provisions of the draft fiscal contract with the producers were not voted on during the first special session and, therefore, will have to be reintroduced in the next special session for the legislature's consideration and vote. On June 23, 2006, the governor announced a second special session of the state legislature to begin on July 12, 2006 to consider the Petroleum Production Tax (PPT) and amendments to the Stranded Gas Development Act.

2. Oil tax revision

On May 24, 2006, Governor Murkowski announced that state and industry negotiators had reached agreement on the oil fiscal certainty portion of the gas pipeline contract.[5] The governor introduced oil tax-reform/modernization legislation designed to link taxes to the oil companies' Alaska profits. The governor announced that state and industry negotiators had reached initial agreement on the PPT including a 20 percent tax rate with a 20 percent tradable tax credit to strike a balance between exploration and development incentives and a tax rate. He said that this tax revision was designed to encourage investment – which leads to more exploration, which leads to more barrels of oil, which leads to more state tax revenue than a higher tax might bring.

The new PPT would change the existing oil taxation system in Alaska. The current production tax on oil is based on a percentage of the gross value of production. The proposed new tax structure would be based on a percentage of the net profit. The current production tax rate is driven by the Economic Limit Factor, or ELF. The governor has said that the ELF-based system is no longer working for Alaska. The Alaska legislature adjourned both its regular session and the special session without completing action on the PPT. As noted above, the governor called another special session to begin on July 12, 2006.

[4] The governor extended the public comment period an additional 45 days, until July 23, 2006.

[5] An amendment (to be addressed in the next special session of the Alaska Legislature) to the Stranded Gas Production Act would allow the governor to negotiate existing oil and gas tax agreements as part of the gas contract. Current law prohibits significantly altering tax and royalty rates on existing oil and gas production.

C. Federal Interagency Memorandum of Understanding

In June 2006, the Federal Interagency Memorandum of Understanding for the Alaska Natural Gas Transportation Project (MOU) was fully signed and executed by senior executives and heads from 15 federal departments and agencies. [6] The signing of an MOU by this large number of agencies demonstrates that the federal agencies are prepared to work together to expedite the permitting and construction of an Alaska natural gas pipeline project.

The MOU establishes a project management framework for cooperation among participating federal agencies with responsibilities related to the approval of an Alaska natural gas transportation project. In particular, the MOU provides for early agency coordination in order to streamline regulatory reviews of applications for permits needed to construct and operate the project. Coordination among these agencies on issues such as project review and implementation schedules, data requirements, and mitigation measures is critical to enable agencies to discharge their responsibilities expeditiously. A coordinated project management approach will facilitate and expedite completion of an Alaska natural gas transportation project. Because federal loan guarantees are authorized, the federal government may bear a significant portion of the financial risk associated with this project. Therefore, it is of critical importance that the project be completed on time and within budget, and the MOU will help the federal government achieve that goal.

The MOU includes agreement by the Participating Agencies to participate and work within the pre-filing time frame set by the Commission to identify and seek to resolve issues at the earliest stages of project development. The Commission's pre-filing process, which is initiated by a request of the project sponsor, serves as a mechanism to meet requirements of the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (NEPA) while optimizing scheduling. The Commission agreed to consult with the Federal Coordinator and relevant Participating Agencies as it establishes a schedule for the project review process. The schedule established by the Commission will be as expeditious as possible while consistent with any statutory permit review periods. To the extent practicable and permitted by law, the relevant Participating Agencies agree to implement, with the assistance of the Federal Coordinator, their related agency review and permitting processes on a concurrent rather than sequential basis to enable completion of the environmental impact statement (EIS) within the time limits required by ANGPA .

D. Nomination of Federal Coordinator

On June 12, 2006, President George W. Bush nominated Drue Pearce, of Alaska, to be Federal Coordinator for Alaska Natural Gas Transportation Projects, for a term ending one year following the completion of the Alaska Natural Gas Transportation Project. Under section 106 of ANGPA, the Federal Coordinator will head the Office of the Federal Coordinator for Alaska Natural Gas Transportation Projects. The advice and consent of the United States Senate is required before Ms. Pearce can begin her service as the Federal Coordinator. Until the nominee's confirmation, ANGPA temporarily vests the Federal Coordinator authority in the Secretary of Energy.

The Federal Coordinator shall be responsible for: (1) coordinating the expeditious actions of all Federal agencies with respect to an Alaska natural gas transportation project; and (2) ensuring the compliance of Federal agencies with the provisions and deadlines of ANGPA.

E. U.S. Department of Energy Activities

1. In-state Demand/Needs Study

a. Purpose of Study

In June 2006 the U.S. Department of Energy (DOE) released a report, "Alaska Natural Gas Needs and Market Assessment" (Needs Study), which estimates the potential demand for natural gas in South Central and other areas of Alaska directly associated with a potential spur pipeline connecting the proposed Alaska North Slope gas pipeline to the Cook Inlet pipeline infrastructure. The Needs Study is a conceptual engineering and socio-economic analysis intended to provide an independent estimate of in-state natural gas demand and supply options for the years 2015 through 2035. The study could be used to satisfy the Commission's Order No. 2005 requirement that applicants desiring to build an Alaskan natural gas pipeline conduct a study to determine in-state natural gas needs prior to holding an open season.[7] The applicants could adopt this study to design their proposed in-state service which would be bid upon in the open season.

FBI - Stevens-3738

b. Study Results

The Needs Study looked at future South Central Alaska yearly-average natural gas demand use for residential/commercial consumption and electric power generation estimated for 2015, 2025, and 2035, the relevant 20-year period that could be the initial years of Alaska pipeline operation. The study found a modest predicted natural gas demand ranging from 280 million cubic feet (MMcf) per day in 2015 increasing to over 500 MMcf per day by 2035.

While this study examined opportunities presented by a spur line that would start at a take-off point from the North Slope pipeline near Fairbanks or other Central Alaska locations near the pipeline route, it does not dismiss the assumption that South Central Alaska demand can potentially be met by increasing natural gas reserves from the Cook Inlet basin through exploration and development. There are both positive and negative assessments of the success expected for the exploration and development of Cook Inlet natural gas resources. The remaining option for South Central Alaska is importing LNG to meet basic demand.

The Needs Study also examined alternative cases of including additional natural gas markets for LNG, gas-to-liquids, petrochemicals and propane, and lower prices. If these alternative cases prove valid, a much larger spur pipeline would be needed; one with a capacity of 700 MMcf per day to 1,300 MMcf per day. The Needs Study notes that such a large local market withdrawal of petrochemical and propane from a natural gas pipeline from the North Slope could require design changes in the pipeline and cause significant economic and political hurdles for that project.

c. Commission Staff's Role

One element of the Needs Study involves an estimate of the transportation tariff rate for the Alaskan pipeline and any potential spur pipeline for use in the natural gas market modeling programs. The Commission staff was asked to review the appendix to the Needs Study which supports the transportation tariff rate calculations. The Commission staff advised DOE that there is insufficient detail in the Appendix to do anything other than say that the underlying bases of the analysis are generally consistent with the approach the Commission uses to develop gas transportation rates for interstate pipelines, e.g., the calculations reflect the net book value of the pipeline and related facilities, a 30-year, straight-line depreciation, federal and state taxes, and fuel and non-fuel costs. The approach used could yield ballpark estimates of per unit transportation charges.[8]

[8] There are many issues raised by the calculations that cannot be adequately analyzed or addressed absent a specific proposal, including: the appropriate capital

 FBI - Stevens-3739

The Commission staff noted that the study correctly takes into account the very high pressure design of an Alaskan gas pipeline that will make treatment and economics of natural gas liquids an important factor of the overall assessment. Another adequate assumption of the Appendix is the use of the Panhandle Eastern equation for the evaluation required for the examination of a range of potential off-take volumes that the spur line would receive.[9]

2. Alternative Means of Construction Study

DOE has undertaken a pre-scoping study to evaluate options, risks, and resources needed for further study. Section 109 of ANGPA states that if no application for the issuance of a certificate or amended certificate of public convenience and necessity authorizing the construction and operation of an Alaska natural gas transportation project has been filed with the Commission by the date that is 18 months after the October 13, 2004 date of enactment, the DOE shall conduct a study of alternative approaches to the construction and operation of such an Alaska natural gas transportation project. On April 13, 2006, the DOE commenced an Alternative Means of Construction Study as required by section 109 of ANGPA.

In conducting the actual alternatives study, the Act requires DOE to consult with the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Army (acting through the Chief of Engineers) and include in the scope of the study consideration of the feasibility of establishing a Federal Government corporation to construct an Alaska natural gas transportation project. The study must also take into consideration the feasibility of securing alternative means of providing federal financing and ownership (including alternative combinations of Government and private corporate ownership) of the Alaska natural gas transportation project. Upon completion of the study, DOE must submit a report to Congress that describes the results of the study and any recommendations (including proposals for legislation to implement such recommendations).

3. Federal Loan Guarantee

The DOE program for the federal loan guarantee for the Alaskan natural gas transportation project is monitoring the progress of the commercial negotiations with the State of Alaska and the bills before the Alaska state legislature. When the commercial project emerges, DOE will proceed with structuring the loan guarantee.

structure, the return on equity level, the presumed debt cost, the lack of amounts for general and intangible plant, the lack of inclusion of certain taxes, and rate design.

F. Commission's Environmental Review - Update

As described in the First Report, the Commission has been active for the past several years in preparing to fulfill its NEPA and certificate application responsibilities. The First Report includes a list of the siting activities associated with an Alaska natural gas pipeline in which the Commission staff has participated. Since that time, the staffs of the Commission and the Department of the Interior have met to continue discussions of resources and training needs for the EIS and project permitting. In April 2006, representatives of the steel industry met with Commission staff to present their perspective about the design, testing, and manufacturing of the great amount of steel pipe that will be needed for the Alaskan pipeline project. As discussed above, the Commission staff participated in the completion of the Federal agency MOU. Finally, the Commission staff plans to tour the route of the northern segment of the pipeline in July 2006.

With the release of the draft fiscal contract by Governor Murkowski in May 2006, the governor's administration and the Producer Group have provided more details on a schedule for planning, permitting, and constructing the project. In summary, the Producer Group estimates a period of 10 years from the beginning of formal project planning activities to date of first gas deliveries. The project planning activities would commence within 90 days after the signing of the fiscal contract. Following the planning phase would be the Front-End Engineering Design, the open-season process, field data collection (the open season and field work could occur simultaneously), and preparation of an application for a FERC certificate of public convenience and necessity.

In its conceptual schedule, the Producer Group estimates it could file permit applications at the end of 2008 if the commercial negotiations are completed with the State of Alaska in 2006. This timeline reflects the complexity of the project, which requires more than two years from initial planning to the filing of permit applications. The Commission staff and the participating federal agencies have committed to assisting in the development of the application through the Commission's pre-filing process. The purpose of the pre-filing process is to encourage the early involvement of interested stakeholders, facilitate interagency cooperation, and identify and resolve issues before an application is filed with the Commission. Based on its consultations with the industry, the Commission staff had previously estimated that the development of the application, and the concurrent pre-filing process, could take as long as 18 months in order to complete the substantial field data collection and engineering design. This timeframe fits easily within the Producer Group's estimated two years.

The Commission's First Report described some of the difficulties associated with the development of an application for an Alaska pipeline project. Specifically, it noted that two field seasons may be necessary to complete the required field studies and surveys due to the shortened field season in Alaska and that mobilization needs to begin early in the calendar year to get the personnel and equipment into the field the following summer. The First Report concluded that any realistic expectation for the development of an application in 2006 was dependent on the legislative approval of a fiscal contract with the State of Alaska under the Stranded Gas Development Act soon after issuance of the First Report in February. Because no agreement has been finalized at the time of this report, the opportunity for beginning meaningful development of an application in 2006 has been missed.

If a project sponsor is ready to begin developing its application and conducting field surveys in the spring of 2007, it is possible that an application would be filed at the Commission before the end of 2008. The ANGPA streamlines the time from the filing of a complete application to final certificate from the Commission, mandating that the EIS be completed within 18 months, and that the Commission must issue a final certificate order no more than 60 days after the EIS is final. The Commission staff stands ready to begin processing any complete application that is filed for an Alaska natural gas transportation project and to meet the processing timelines established by the ANGPA. Whether the project sponsor begins developing an application and conducting field surveys in the spring of 2007 depends largely on the Alaska state legislature acting this summer. If not, the Alaska gas pipeline will be further delayed.

G. Developments in Canada

The Mackenzie Gas Project continues under consideration by the Government of Canada. The Mackenzie Gas Project includes development of natural gas fields, gathering lines, and processing facilities in the Mackenzie River Delta of Canada's Northwest Territories, and a transportation pipeline along the Mackenzie River Valley to deliver the natural gas to market. This major pipeline project consists of over 750 miles of 30-inch natural gas transmission pipeline that would transport 1.2 billion cubic feet (Bcf) per day of new Arctic gas to market. The capital cost of this project is estimated at over $7 billion, and it is planned to be in operation by 2011. However, it has been reported in the press that Imperial Oil Ltd., the lead partner proposing the project, will revise the project's cost estimate and construction schedule within the next six months.

Although this project is neither a complement to nor competitor of an Alaska natural gas pipeline, its development presents certain problems and risks to an Alaskan project. First, industry reports indicate that there will not be enough pipeline grade steel available to construct both projects at the same time. Similarly, there could be a shortage of the skilled labor force required to build two technically-challenging Arctic projects of such magnitude at the same time.

Sponsors of the Mackenzie Gas Project have been discussing royalty and fiscal issues concerning the project with the Government of Canada, but it is reported that these talks have paused pending the review of the project's cost estimate and construction schedule. However, the regulatory review process in Canada for the Mackenzie Gas Project is continuing as scheduled. The Joint Review Panel is examining issues and impacts in the areas of the natural and human environments associated with the proposed Mackenzie Gas Project to determine how the project could affect the land, environment and lives of people and communities in the project area.[10] The National Energy Board (NEB) is reviewing the technical aspects, such as engineering, economic feasibility, tolls and tariffs, and lands issues associated with the proposed project. The NEB will consider the Joint Review Panel's report in deciding whether the project is in the public interest. If at the end of the process the NEB Panel decides the project is in the public interest, the federal Cabinet must then decide whether to authorize the NEB to issue a certificate so that the project can proceed. If the NEB Panel decides that a project is not in the public interest, then no further approval of its decision is required.

III. Need for Greater Progress

A. Overview

Government and industry in the United States are acting in various ways to obtain adequate natural gas supplies to satisfy future demand. There are projects being developed to access: imported LNG, deepwater Gulf of Mexico reserves, non-conventional sources – coal bed methane, tight sands and, shale – in the U.S. and Canada, Canadian Arctic reserves, as well as Alaskan natural gas. At best, it appears that the non-conventional sources of natural gas, along with production from the deepwater Gulf of Mexico, only will serve to replace declining conventional sources, albeit at higher cost. In addition, our major source of imports, pipeline gas from Canada, is expected to decline as Canadian domestic demand increases and gas production from its major production area, the Western Canadian Sedimentary Basin, declines over time.

The U.S. natural gas market increasingly is turning to imported LNG to meet incremental growth. Many nations, in partnership with commercial entities, are quickly developing LNG supply projects. In the next two to three years, the worldwide capacity to supply LNG to the market will greatly increase. Alaskan North Slope gas can also be part of the solution to the nation's natural gas needs in this generation. Alaskan gas is not the only option available to the Lower 48. Twenty years ago, Alaskan gas would have been in competition only with other North American gas production. Now, Alaskan natural gas production will also face competition from low-cost production in LNG exporting countries across the globe. Natural gas markets have changed significantly over the past 20 years, and are becoming increasingly international markets.

[10] The Joint Review Panel for the Mackenzie Gas Project is a seven-member, independent body that will evaluate the potential impacts of the project on the environment and lives of the people in the project area.

FBI - Stevens-3743

Prompt action by the project sponsors, Governor Murkowski and the Alaska legislature is necessary to enable Alaska to provide a reliable continental source of natural gas for the Lower 48 that will not only assist in the growth of the U.S. economy, but also contribute to the economic well being of the State of Alaska. Timely action on an Alaska natural gas project will allow North Slope gas to reach the Lower 48 states.

B. Reserves: Alaska vis-a-vis the World

It is estimated that as of January 1, 2005 there are 6,044 trillion cubic feet (Tcf) of proved gas reserves in the world, 5,780 Tcf of which is located outside of North America.[11] Of the North American total (264 Tcf), the North Slope of Alaska contains about 35 Tcf of proved reserves. To put this in perspective, while North Slope natural gas reserves represent approximately 13 percent of North American gas reserves, they are less than 1 percent of the world's gas reserves. Consequently, potential importers and energy infrastructure developers are realizing that there is an opportunity to secure substantial new gas supplies for the U.S. by looking abroad.

Of the top five countries with the most proved natural gas reserves, Russia has 28 percent of the world total. The following chart displays the total world proved reserves and compares the top ten countries' proved reserves along with those of the Lower 48 and Alaska.

Source: Based on data from EIA International Energy 2004, Table 8.1 World Crude Oil and Natural Gas Reserves (January 1, 2005).

C. Alaska Gas's Potential Market Share

Gas supply from Alaska, estimated to flow at about 4.5 Bcf per day, will only partially fulfill the nation's future natural gas needs. LNG also will be a major source of future U.S. gas supply and the necessary infrastructure is being developed. For Alaska to [11] PennWell Corporation, Oil & Gas Journal, Vol. 102, No. 47 (December 20, 2004).

FBI - Stevens-3744

be a meaningful part of the natural gas supply mix of the U.S. in the coming years, action needs to be taken now. At best, if the draft contract were approved under the Alaskan Stranded Gas Development Act, gas would not flow in significant quantities to the Lower 48 prior to 2016. As U.S. energy markets make decisions regarding where future supplies will be obtained, they will carefully examine the likelihood that particular supplies will be available when needed. To the extent that Alaska gas is to play a role in meeting future needs, progress towards the construction of an Alaska gas pipeline is crucial.

The following chart shows the role that Alaskan gas is expected to play in the future composition of U.S. natural gas supply.

Source: Lower 48 Production, Net Pipeline Imports, and LNG Imports: Energy Information Administration, Annual Energy Outlook 2006; Alaskan Gas: Assumed Flow Rate of 4.5 Bcf per day.

D. The Closing Window for Alaska Gas Delivery

The Energy Information Administration (EIA) of DOE projects that demand for natural gas in the U.S. will grow by more than 23 percent between 2005 and 2025, while domestic production in the Lower 48 is expected to increase by close to 7 percent, further widening the existing gap between supply and demand.[12] During this same time period, the EIA projects that net pipeline imports to the U.S. will decline by 55 percent. Even if the Mackenzie Gas Project in Canada goes into operation, it is doubtful that the U.S. will see any of this gas due to the development of the Canadian oil sands in Alberta (necessitating natural gas for the mining operations), increased demand in Canada, and the decline in production from the Western Canadian Sedimentary Basin. In fact, the National Energy Board of Canada projects that by 2015, the oil sands will have a gas requirement of 2.1 Bcf per day; the oil sands gas requirement was about 0.5 Bcf per day in 2002.[13]

Therefore, the largest sources for growth in U.S. gas supply are Alaskan gas and LNG. As previously stated, gas flow from the Alaskan North Slope is expected to be 4.5 Bcf per day, a not inconsiderable amount. However, this amount pales in comparison to recent LNG infrastructure activity at the Commission. Beginning with the approval of the Cameron (formerly, Hackberry) LNG terminal in September 2003, the Commission has approved eleven new LNG terminals in the Lower 48 that have a total redelivery capacity of 20.6 Bcf per day. In addition, the Commission has also approved an expansion of an existing LNG terminal and an expansion of an approved (but not yet in operation) LNG terminal, totaling an additional 2.2 Bcf per day of deliverability. When combined with the nation's existing deliverability of 5.8 Bcf per day, there is the potential for 28.6 Bcf per day of deliverability from LNG. Further, there are ten new LNG sites that have been proposed to the Commission with a total delivery capacity of 11.5 Bcf per day and pending expansions for about 4.6 Bcf per day at three LNG terminals (existing and approved).

Given the large capital investment in LNG liquefaction facilities, LNG exporters will prefer to negotiate long-term arrangements to sell their LNG to provide the necessary cash flow to finance their facilities. While some LNG volumes are sold in the "spot" market, the execution of long-term arrangements will serve to make this supply a reliable source. Gas buyers in the Lower 48 are more likely to enter into long-term LNG contracts if there is no substantial progress on building an Alaska pipeline. And, the longer an Alaskan pipeline is delayed, the more strength is gained by the proponents of LNG.

Currently, much work is being done to develop the supply "chain" (production, liquefaction, shipping and regasification) that will deliver LNG to the U.S. and other countries that do not have adequate domestic production to satisfy their gas needs. The International Energy Agency states that, through the year 2030, over $250 billion will be invested worldwide to develop LNG infrastructure. This large investment in LNG infrastructure necessarily requires commitments and establishes long-term relationships.

Also, the chart below shows that there has been a decline in investment required per unit of LNG produced, which is expected to continue as technology progresses.

FBI - Stevens-3747

At the time of ANGPA, an Alaskan pipeline generally following the ANGTS route had been estimated to cost $18-20 billion. Now, estimates are running as high as $25 billion. Any further delays may serve to make the Alaska gas pipeline uneconomic in comparison to LNG imports. As demonstrated by the magnitude of monies being invested in LNG facilities and the falling costs per unit of LNG infrastructure, Alaska is at risk of being marginalized in the search for new natural gas supplies for U.S. consumption.

IV. Conclusion

The Federal Government has made great strides to prepare for the review of a final proposal to build a natural gas transportation project for Alaskan natural gas. Significant progress on an Alaska natural gas pipeline is needed for North Slope gas to become part of the supply mix which will satisfy the U.S. need for natural gas in this generation. Alaska offers a reliable continental source of natural gas for the Lower 48 States that will help the U.S. economy to grow and thrive, and also contribute to the economic well being of the State of Alaska. Whether the long-term arrangements needed to make delivery of Alaska gas a reality are put into place in the near future will determine Alaska's role as a supplier as the dynamic global gas market moves forward to match supply with demand.

Before the meeting Sen. Elton commented to me that at the Fairbanks meeting on July 6th there were only about 50 people in attendance, and of those 40 to 44 were legislators (and/or staff), consultants, oil company representatives, the governor's people, or media.

Because of Elton's comments I counted the people a couple of times. There were about 50 people present, but of those only 5 or so were people I didn't recognize who might have represented the general public. Thus, most of the meeting was a rehash of the same things by the same people.

Highlights of Roger Marks' Introduction

- 6,000 TCF of gas in the world
- 2006 = 17 new applications for Nuclear Power Plants in North America
- 5 years ago we projected oil today would cost $17/bbl.
- We can't know what price oil & gas will be in 35 years
- Cost of LNG coming down
- Projects could be very good or very bad. Investors fear that bad outcome would be more bad than good outcome would be good. Greatest fear = cost overrun.
- Producers fear high side could be taken away by high taxes created by later legislature

Comments by Harold Heinze

1. Parts of contract need fixing; it can be fixed.
2. $40K commitment required of each household for FT (?)
3. Need RCA involvement; not deletion
4. Eliminate, to extent possible, unintended consequences
5. Has schedule concerns, especially as it regards to open season, that it won't adequately allow participation by utility companies.
6. Needs more investment of energy by all parties to understand what it takes to make it work
7. Threshold issue – nothing in contract about industrial usage of gas]
8. Caution – the state may be giving up rights to NGLs
9. Recommendation – recognize there are implementation issues, state gas issues

General Notes

Seekins asked about the $40K commitment

Heinze said it's to pay for gas; i.e., at $5.50 to purchase gas, transportation, distribution, etc., it's a take or pay/ship or pay issue.

15 years ± ft for utilities in state = $6B

Lots of companies will need 75% volume on day 1.

200 bcf is current instate consumption
900 mmcf/day = 300 bcf/year

Heinze said that a book he has on his shelf sums up his concern = "Hope is not a Strategy"

The top three things he hears from people are:

- Jobs
- Better economy
- Where's my gas?

But he realizes that there will be no spur line without a main line.

FBI - Stevens-3750

Ted Stevens
We are currently importing 15% of our gas.
Rising to 40% by 2015 (1/2 will be LNG)
Greatest concentration of demand is in the mid-west

Study is currently underway by the Feds to build pipeline

"I believe Congress will open Block 181 in Florida this year."

Push aside partisan politics & do what's right for the state, and what's right for the state is to get the job done and GET THE PIPELINE BUILT! (He was hammering on the table for emphasis during the last phrase.)

I've heard people say we should build the pipeline ourselves, but the cost would be greater than we have in the permanent fund. (Does he mean cost is now expected to exceed $35B?)

There will be no waiver of the Jones Act, so LNG is not an option. But LNG from other countries does not require Jones Act vessels.

He said he was one of the authors for the feds to take gas in kind.

Gas prices will follow oil prices and (there is) no question that oil prices will continue to go up.

Over the Top? – No chance line will go across ANWR – about the same chance as building a raceway across the Mona Lisa. Also unlikely to go offshore due to environmental concerns.

Canadians having their own problems with the MacKenzie Delta line.

Potential is 34,000 TCF

With all due respect to my friend here (referring to Wagoner), the concept of a tax on gross when you can't know the price . . . and uh and uh .. you won't see that development in your life time.

If you look at all of the pipelines planned in the world it's mind-blowing. Very clearly there will be delays in getting pipe. If we get in line now we might get pipe in two years. We may want to consider rolling pipe here in Alaska.

Federal Agencies Collaborate to Expedite Construction of Alaska Natural Gas Pipeline

Agreement Establishes Framework for Increasing Energy Security

WASHINGTON, DC — The U.S. Department of Energy and 14 other federal departments and agencies have signed an agreement to expedite the permitting and construction of the Alaska Natural Gas Pipeline which, when operational, will substantially increase domestic natural gas supply and advance the Administration's energy security policy. The agreement signals the U.S. government's commitment to expedite the federal permitting processes for the Alaska Natural Gas Pipeline and establishes a project management framework for cooperation among participating agencies to reduce bureaucratic delays in construction of the pipeline and delivery of natural gas to consumers.

"We need to do all we can to increase our domestic supply of energy – including natural gas – and the Alaska Natural Gas Pipeline will help us do that," Secretary Bodman said. "Alaska's North Slope is a valuable natural resource that has tremendous potential to provide a significant portion of our nation's natural gas needs to help heat homes, and build industry. I appreciate the coordinated effort of all of the federal agencies who are working together to help make the pipeline a reality."

The Federal Interagency Memorandum of Understanding for the Alaska Natural Gas Transportation Project was signed by senior executives from fifteen federal organizations. It defines responsibilities related to the approval of the pipeline project and provides for streamlined regulatory and environmental processes and reviews/approvals for the giant undertaking.

The pipeline is expected to supply about 10 percent of future U.S. natural gas demand. When the Alaska pipeline is fully operational, it will carry 4 billion cubic feet of natural gas each day. Natural gas serves six of every 10 American households, about 62 million homes, and is used to generate about 16 percent of the nation's electric power. Natural gas is also indispensable as a feedstock for fertilizer and chemical manufacturers. In recent years, rising demand and limited increases in supply have resulted in high natural gas prices that affected residential and industrial users across the economy.

Alaska Governor Frank Murkowski has called a second special session of the State Legislature to begin on July 12th to consider and pass a new oil and gas tax structure, amendments to the Stranded Gas Act, and the gas pipeline contract. Once the gas transportation contract and related legislation are passed by the Alaska State Legislature, the State of Alaska will join with industry to form a corporate entity that will build the pipeline.

The Alaska Natural Gas Pipeline Act, enacted on October 13, 2004, established the expedited federal review of a natural gas transportation project that would carry Alaska natural gas to the border of Alaska and Canada. In accordance with the Act, President Bush nominated former Alaska State Senator Drue Pearce as Federal Coordinator for Alaska Natural Gas Transportation Projects. Until her confirmation, the position's temporary authority is vested with the Secretary of Energy.

The MOU was signed by the Departments of Energy, Agriculture, Commerce, Defense, Homeland Security, Interior, Labor, State, Transportation, Treasury, and the Advisory Council on Historic Preservation, Council on Environmental Quality, Environmental Protection Agency, Federal Inspector for Alaska Natural Gas Transportation Projects, and the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

Governor Frank H. Murkowski
24th Alaska State Legislature Special Session House and Senate Joint Session of Third Special Session, July 13, 2006

(MR. PRESIDENT, MR. SPEAKER, GUEST ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS)

Good morning…

Thank you for coming to Juneau during what I know is a busy time of the year for each of you.

This is my third opportunity this year to address this joint body on a subject that will have lasting consequences not only for us, but for our children, and our grandchildren, and perhaps even our great grandchildren.

I would like to address you not as democrat or republican, but as Alaskans, for the issue facing us today is greater than party politics, greater than petty bickering, and greater than your job here as legislators, and greater than my job here as governor.

The issue is a rare and historic opportunity to authorize the largest construction project ever undertaken in our state. a project that for the next 50 years will solidify the economic foundation of our state for generations to come.

The one thing history must not judge us on is inaction. Winston Churchill once said, 'no action is in fact, an action".

I intend to work with all members of this legislature to get our job done, no matter how long it takes.

Clearly the the for this gas line is now.

To share with you -- at current prices, we would generate more than $100 billion over the next 35 years. Extend the life of TAPS for 20 more years -- which would bring us another $50 billion in revenue. And cement in a solid foundation for economic growth for at least the next 50 years.

FBI - Stevens-3754

Without a gas pipeline, the oil flow through TAPS will end around 2030 with a catastrophic drop in state revenue.

The people of Alaska want and expect us to stop arguing and get a gas pipeline contract approved. NOW! This session.

We have negotiated almost two years, spent millions of dollars on consultants.

Senator Ted Stevens was right in what he said last Friday.

We need to finish the job in this Legislature, or you may find yourselves delayed for two years with no further progress".

He was also right in saying that we need to take the politics out of this and do what's right for Alaska.

With a gas pipeline, our future is secured. Without it, we face uncertainty.

This special session comes at a crucial time in our negotiations, because clearly the competitive world of energy is not standing around waiting for us to make a decision.

First, we have had a clear message to move the gas pipeline project forward now.

...From the Vice President of the United States, Dick Cheney ...Secretary of Energy Samuel Bodman...

...Senator Ted Stevens, Senator Lisa Murkowski and representative young...

...And most recently, from the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission or FERC.

The FERC report on your desks describes the signable, fiscal contract we have with the Producers as "significant progress towards development of an Alaska natural gas pipeline".

FERC warns, "Whether the project sponsor begins developing an application, and conducting field surveys in the spring of 2007, depends largely on the Alaska state legislature acting this summer.

"If not," FERC adds, "The Alaska gas pipeline will be further delayed".

FBI - Stevens-3755

FERC notes that two years are required to complete the work to get to the filing of an application.

FERC emphasizes that the project is threatened by the growth of imported LNG, and I quote: "In the next two to three years, the worldwide capacity to supply LNG to the market will greatly increase....Alaskan gas is not the only option available to the Lower 48.

"Twenty years ago, Alaskan gas would have been in competition only with other North American gas production. Now, Alaskan natural gas production will also face competition from low-cost production in LNG exporting countries across the globe. Qatar's cost of lifting gas is 5 CENTS. .Ours is far higher.

The FERC warning continues, "Gas buyers in the Lower 48 are more likely to enter into long-term LNG contracts if there is no substantial progress on building an Alaska pipeline.

"And, the longer an Alaskan pipeline is delayed, the more strength is gained by the proponents of LNG.

"The estimated cost of an Alaska gas pipeline has increase since October 2004 (ANGPA) from $ 18 to $ 20 billion to as high as $25 billion.

"Any further delays may serve to make the Alaska gas pipeline uneconomic in comparison to LNG imports".

"As demonstrated by the magnitude of monies being invested in LNG facilities, and the falling costs per unit of LNG infrastructure, Alaska is at risk of being marginalized in the search for new natural gas supplies for U.S. consumption".

"Prompt action by the project sponsors, Governor Murkowski and the Alaska legislature is necessary to enable Alaska to provide a reliable continental source of natural gas for the Lower 48, that will not only assist in the growth of the U.S. economy, but also contribute to the economic well being of the State of Alaska".

And, FERC adds, "Timely action on an Alaska natural gas project will allow North Slope gas to reach the Lower 48 States".

The message from FERC is clear: Act now or risk losing the project to the increasing supplies of imported LNG –

Explaining to our children how we missed on the gas pipeline could become a reality.

One reason for holding a special session now is the threat of the reserves tax.

By exacting what I view as a punitive tax of $1 billion per year from now until first gas, the reserves tax adds at least 8 to 10 billion dollars in project costs.

The Producers can only recover 40 to 45 percent of the tax after first gas, and perhaps much less -- depending on gas prices and when the project actually starts.

The net present value of this on the gas pipeline is devastating and will kill the project regardless of who is in the Legislature or in the governor's chair.

The idea of penalizing the project by increasing the cost nearly 50 percent before any revenue is generated from sales is simply absurd.

You don't tax projects into existence – you incentivise them.

It will also halt exploration for gas and oil on the leases where the action is taking place – Prudhoe Bay, Kuparak, Alpine, Point Thompson.

It will halt exploration for gas on those leases because if you find it, it will be taxed.

It will halt exploration for oil because if Producers are exploring for oil and find gas they will be taxed. It will thus halt investment in both oil and gas.

With such investment disincentives, the flow of oil through TAPS, which is already experiencing a substantial annual decline, will cease long before 2030.

That is why I instructed my gas team to protect the project from the reserves tax.

They have done so in the gas pipeline contract. But to protect the project the contract must be in place before the November ballot.

FBI - Stevens-3757

We are having the special session now so I can get the necessary approvals and negotiate changes to the contract with the Producers in time to obtain ratification before November.

Those who advise you to gavel out and go home without acting or to wait until November are either ignorant of the LNG and the reserves tax threats to this project, or don't' care.

As you know we negotiated a contract with the Producers that they are ready to sign. We have held public meetings around the State and we are prepared to make changes to the contract based on those comments—all as the SGDA directed us to do.

Alaskans now expect you, the Legislature, to do your job.

Another reason for the special session: The petroleum production tax! I have not changed my mind. I am introducing the PPT at the same tax rate I have in the last two sessions.

You may ask, "Why would I do that?"

After all, both the House and Senate made substantial changes to our proposal.

--- Increasing the tax rate

--- Tweaking the credits

--- Adding progressivity

No doubt, you believe these amendments improve the tax regime.

I don't agree, and here's why:

First, my proposal of 20/20 was acceptable to the producers. That doubled their tax by over 1 billion dollars;

SECOND, WE don't need the short term, slightly higher revenues a PPT rate in excess of 20 percent might bring. With higher oil prices we already have a substantial inflow of revenues;

FBI - Stevens-3758

Rather, we need substantial long-term investment by the Producers and the rest of the industry.

...In a gas pipeline ... heavy oil ... and small traditional fields to monetize our gas and arrest the substantial annual decline in oil flowing through TAPS;

We get both with the 20/20 proposal I negotiated last February with the Producers' CEOs and which I urge you to accept.

20/20 GETS us a gas pipeline agreement and more investment in the North Slope. This means two more Prudhoe Bays: 13 billion barrels of heavy oil... and 12 billion barrels of oil-equivalent of gas.

In this case, more short term revenue means less total revenue to the state. Since our job under Alaska's constitution is to maximize our resources for the benefit of the people, I urge you to accept the 20/20 approach.

For the producers, the 20 percent is far beyond what they wanted to pay – They initially proposed 12 percent. 20-20 will give Alaska the highest government take in north America. The real prizes here are the gas pipeline and substantially more investment in the North Slope.

We need to focus on what Alaska gets, not what the Producers get.

people have argued that since the producers agreed to this, they would be willing to pay more.

But this is a negotiation. Both sides reached an agreement and had to give some.

If there is an attitude that anything the producers agree to is unacceptable, the project is doomed to failure.

By focusing on what the Producers get, we could get nothing, as has happened with the Hebron project in Newfoundland. Yes, it can happen.

We Have listened to Alaskans and we have listened to you regarding items that we must make sure are right in order to obtain ratification.

We will be holding additional meetings around Alaska between now and July 24th to provide feedback on what we are considering changing.

FBI - Stevens-3759

This suggests:

--- No fiscal certainty on oil until project sanction – 4 to 5 years from now

--- Fiscal certainty for 14 TO 16 years for construction of the project and a capital recovery period

This change in fiscal certainty is meant to help you accept my 20 percent PPT tax rate proposal – Or whatever PPT rate you set.

For example: On fiscal certainty on oil, I am proposing the approach adopted by the Senate and by House Judiciary, and that rate would be the effective contract rate.

Some are advising you to simply repeal "ELF," leaving a gross severance tax in place for oil.

A gross tax simply collects revenue based on the number of barrels of oil produced and collects no more when oil prices are high.

I am surprised that the proponents of this approach seem willing to accept the proposition that the Legislature is not up to making tough decisions.

Like the reserves tax a gross tax is self defeating for Alaska ...because Substantial industry investment in the North Slope is absolutely critical to our future.

A gross tax does not deduct operating and capital costs and thus provides no incentive for the Producers to invest in Alaska.

The Producers will invest instead in countries like Norway or the U.K. where they get a deduction for operating and capital costs.

One has to question the motives of some Alaskans who support a gross tax now, yet made their wealth after expensing their cost and paying taxes on their net.

Moreover, the timing effects of the deductions; credits proposed in our PPT bill is also intended to make North Slope investment attractive.

FBI - Stevens-3760

As soon as investments are incurred they can be monetized—years before taxable production ensues. This will increase the net present value and rates of returns, which will make investing in Alaska even more attractive.

Finally, consider the impact of our PPT proposal on exploration:

Under the present system, if a pure wildcatter comes to Alaska to explore and drills a dry hole, he goes away empty. the State shares none of his dry hole risk.

Under the PPT, through credits and deductions, the State would share 40 percent of his dry hole costs. ...and This is a very significant means to reduce dry hole risk and promote exploration.

Finding new oil is the key to keeping the pipeline filled up.

With a tax based on gross, none of this happens.

Why am I so concerned about North Slope investment?
Oil-flows through TAPS were at 822,000 barrels/day during the last fiscal year.

That is 10 percent less than last year and 17 percent less than five years ago.

Our projections show TAPS shutting down in around 2030.

We need substantial new investment to arrest this decline.

Getting investment in a gas pipeline also changes this result, by adding at least two more decades to the life of TAPS to 2050.

This will give us time to do the research necessary to develop the estimated 13 billion barrels of heavy oil on the North Slope.

Most of you have previously voted for a net profits tax.

Stick with it because it will get us the substantial investment which Alaska needs.

The argument HAS BEEN made that we need a gross severance tax because:

--- It is simpler

FBI - Stevens-3761

--- The Producers will game us

I put in a 19-page bill in February that dealt with 98 percent of the oil affected by the PPT.

There as been concern about the ability to audit upstream costs with the PPT. This is ill-founded.

Currently, the Department of revenue audits transportation costs under the ELF based-system without a problem. Going to upstream costs is only a small step.

We get the Producers audits of each other on costs deducted by the operator on each field.

We get each producers' federal income tax return.

In short, we have had great success in protecting Alaska's oil income. "Gaming" is not a good reason to give up the benefits of a net profits system.

An important issue is how will we spend the funds from an enhanced PPT?

I need you to fund now a portion of the first year's revenues for the PCE endowment. Gasoline charges in rural Alaska are in the $8-9 range.

Rural Alaska Businesses-even fishing-are being stifled by the high cost of energy.

The Rural Energy Action Council (REAC) is addressing these concerns. Full funding of the PCE endowment will provide substantial assistance in rural Alaska.

Further, our ability to take gas in kind, as the gas contract provides, allows us to use the Yukon River takeoff point to strip propane and butane from the gas and barge them to villages along the AYK River system—thereby lowering rural energy costs.

I will be introducing next session a proposal to fund a feasibility study to develop a lateral all-Alaska line, possibly along the railroad right-of-way from Fairbanks to the Mat-Su, Anchorage and the Kenai Peninsula.

We must make every effort to insure that the Agrium and the LNG plant continue to operate as they appear to be key elements in the economics of the project.

FBI - Stevens-3762

Alaska property taxpayers also deserve relief.

In the next regular session of the Legislature I will propose the use of PPT revenues to refund $1000 to each residential property tax payer in the state.

My friend Mayor Begich mentioned this to me and said he would get Democratic votes for it. Are you with us Ethan?

Another measure I will be introducing – to offer Alaskans an opportunity to purchase shares of stock in the pipeline – AHFC is working up the details that would allow Alaskans the option of a check-off on their Permanent Fund Dividend to access stock purchases.

This will offer Alaskans an ownership share in the economic engine of our state.

I would propose that we put aside the remaining PPT money as savings—for gas pipeline capitol cost among other things.

Last night Nancy asked me:

What does this pipeline debate really mean to the average Alaskan?

She expressed concern that Mr. and Mrs. Average Alaskan may not relate to the multi-billion dollar numbers and decades-long time line of the pipeline debate.

$1 billion more per year in oil tax revenues.

Nearly 10,000 construction jobs.

More than $100 billion in new state revenues in the first 35 years of operation of the gas pipeline.

An additional 20 years of operating life of the TAPS oil pipeline,to 2050.

An estimated $ 25 billion more deposited into an already $35 billion Permanent Fund, resulting in larger PFDs.

Sitting here in 2006, it may be difficult to visualize something that CAN happen in 2050.

FBI - Stevens-3763

Looking back, we have gotten along very nicely for a quarter century with no personal income tax.

Before it was repealed in 1980, working Alaskans paid the state an additional 16 percent of what they paid the IRS.

Do a back-of-the envelope calculation on your own to see how much you have kept in your wallet.

We believe that with the gas pipeline, there should be no reason for a personal income tax in Alaska.

Likewise, there should be no need for any statewide sales tax.

The gas pipeline will mean bigger dividends, because 25 percent of gas royalties will be deposited into the Permanent Fund.

It will extend the life of TAPS by 20 years -- this means 20 more years of 25% of oil royalty deposits into the Permanent Fund – or $12.5 billion dollars.

You may not be able to visualize the benefits to yourselves of something happening 30 and 40 years into the future.

But there are young Alaskans – our children, grandchildren and great grandchildren -- who will be here at that time and will benefit from our good decisions today…

Alaska is blessed with an abundance of natural resources that are important to the nation and the world.

The gas pipeline is the key to moving Alaska into that more secure and stable future.

Alaskans want their sons and daughters to have better opportunities than they have had here.

We want them to have a better quality of life – better educational opportunities – health care – security, job opportunities, caring for our seniors and others who are most.

FBI - Stevens-3764

Another important factor in this prospect is job training and the role of our labor community. We must provide training and opportunities for Alaskans first.

We also must recognize this project cannot be built without a project labor agreement, which I support and urge labor and the producers to start meaningful discussions.

It is our duty under the constitution – under the oaths of office we all signed – to maximize the value of Alaska's resources for the benefit of the people.

I firmly believe we will fulfill that obligation under the PPT and gas pipeline contract we have set before you.

Ours is a long-range view of maximizing the resources.

Not one of short-term gain that cuts off the future.

And leaves resources undeveloped in the ground.

As the Legislature, you have the power to approve our vision of the future.

Or not, as you choose.

But if you do not choose wisely?

I believe with too high a tax rate, and less incentive, the producers gradually withdraw from Alaska.

At 20/20, or total government take is higher than the Gulf at 42, or Canada at 49. Our proposal that has been accepted is 60 percent government take.

If Alaska does not remain competitive industry will extract as much oil from their North Slope reserves as they economically can before they roll up the pipeline and go away.

By about 2030.

But long before that, the State of Alaska will be forced to find other sources of revenue to pay for state services.

FBI - Stevens-3765

What would those sources be?

A personal income tax.

A statewide sales tax.

And tapping the Permanent Fund, reducing everybody's dividend.

Alaskans do not want that to happen.

We all can recall a couple of years ago, before the run-up in world oil prices brought budget surpluses.

We recall the gut-wrenching decisions that had to be made.

And the palpable fear among Alaskans that we were headed back to the mid-1980s.

Nobody wants to give up their dreams.

Lose their jobs and walk away from their homes.

Some expressed the sentiment in the 1980s that the last person to leave the state should turn out the lights.

To avoid these draconian alternatives, the people of Alaska have asked over and again for a fiscal plan.

Well, here's our fiscal plan.

$1 billion more every year through a 20/20 PPT.

Build a gas pipeline to bring in $100 billion over 35 years.

Extend the life of TAPS by 20 years – adding $50 billion in revenue from oil we would not get without a pipeline.

It is my job to persuade you of the logic and soundness of this fiscal plan.

And to get your support for it.

FBI - Stevens-3766

We are building the bridge to Alaska's future.

Are any of those among you intent on tearing the bridge down?

Or will you walk across it with us?

The choice is really up to you.

to recap the reasons I have asked you to return to Juneau.

1) – The PPT is left undone and that indecision is costing Alaska $3.2 million every day, or over $400 million since February 20, when the producers accepted our proposal

2) – The federal government is urging us to move this project forward in the public interest

3) - The punitive reserves tax is on the November ballot and will kill the gas pipeline if it passes and the contract is not in place to protect the project...and

4) - We must attract the substantial investment necessary to stop the decline in TAPS through-put.

You and I will be held accountable by every Alaskan for the decisions we make here.

Whether those decisions are good or bad.

In conclusion – Let's get to work and get this gas pipeline moving now.

As a summing up, I would consider emphasizing that we have a choice.

A --- With the 20/20 PPT and the proposed contract we have a very good chance of doubling oil taxes at current prices and getting a gas pipeline with tremendous riches.

Or B --- By trying to get a little more, we have a very good chance of ending up with nothing.

FBI - Stevens-3767

A bright future is before us.

We must reach out for it now.

That is my vision I wanted to share with your and all Alaskans today.

Thank you.

[redacted] depending on the season and the orders received. The employees of the Fab shop are made up of all crafts including welders, painters, pipe-fitters, and electricians. The primary product the Fab shop manufactures are truckable modules for the oil fields on the North Slope of Alaska. These modules are made primarily of steel and can be adapted for a variety of uses in conjunction with oil production. They cost between $70,000 and $800,000.

The Fab shop keeps a supply of "new" steel on hand. If there was more than 20 tons at any given time, that would be a lot. They also had plenty of surplus steel. Since the surplus steel was only worth $0.10 a pound as salvage, the Fab shop keeps it on hand.

The Fab shop is under VECO ALASKA, formerly VECO CONSTRUCTION, a subsidiary of VECO CORPORATION. Projects worked on in the Fab shop were billed to a job number. Time cards and project costs were attributed to these job numbers. b6 b7C

Background

[redacted]

Time Cards

Employees at VECO, particularly in the fabrication shop (Fab shop), would fill out time cards. They would annotate on the time cards the job number of the project they were working on. In the case of TED STEVENS' house in Girdwood, Alaska, the cards would be annotated with "TED STEVENS' PLACE," "GIRDWOOD" or similar discriptives. It was general knowledge in the VECO Fab shop that the house in Girdwood, Alaska belonged to STEVENS.

b6
b7C

These time sheets would be kept on file in locked file cabinets at the Fab shop. If the project was reimbursable the time cards would be retained until after an audit. VECO audits annually, and there may have been audits by the customer as well.

The time cards, unless they had been destroyed, may have been stored in a heated cargo container that was designated for Fab shop records on the western perimeter of the Fab shop lot. [redacted] due to tax reasons, the time cards should be on kept on file from seven to 10 years.

The time card data would be entered into a Fab shop computer system called IMPACT. IMPACT creates status reports by job number and sends those reports to an accounting program called MCCOSKER. The cost report from IMPACT, associated with a specific job number, reflect the hours and dates worked. The employees in the Fab shop did not have access to these systems.

[redacted] The Cost Scheduler would apply job hours worked to specific job numbers associated with on-going VECO projects. The Cost Scheduler would be assigned to a project on a constant basis. The STEVENS' house renovation was associated with 188-003-0003, a job number set up specifically for the special projects associated with [redacted] special projects.

Materials at the Fab shop were project specific, so there was no new material laying around for a special project. Scrap metal, however, could be used. At any given time the Fab shop kept 20 to 40 tons of scrap metal on hand (equivalent to a couple semi-truck loads). The Fab shop did not have much lumber as the vast majority of work there required metal.

Purchase Orders

[redacted] could have obtained supplies and materials [redacted] through purchase orders. [redacted] obtain materials from local suppliers who had VECO accounts. The cost of which would go directly to the job number, and to the cost report, but would not have been associated with the Fab shop.

Contractors could also be obtained through the use of purchase orders. Although, it was VECO policy that if the company was utilizing people, not only equipment, they had to be under contract for liability reasons. A purchase order in that situation would not be within company guidelines.

VECO Fabrication Shop Operations

b7C

At the Fab shop [redacted] The Fab shop produces pre-fabricated, truckable modules, and other equipment for oil companies on the North Slope of Alaska. Modules would be constructed from the ground up. [redacted] Projects would start with the creation of an estimate to be submitted in a competitive bidding process. In the bid itself there would be a scope of work for each discipline (i.e. electrical, structural, etc.). The scope of work would allow for a forecast of man-hours. Man hours would be built into each bid. The overhead for the Fab shop would be applied as a certain dollar per hour against each man-hour. Fab shop costs were estimated over a year and pro-rated towards each project.

The supervisor for each discipline would, daily, report what hours were worked and on what job number. Supervisors filled out the time sheet for each employee and annotated on the time sheet the job number. Often times there would be a sub-cost code which reflected disciplines. These codes could be used to track the progress on a project.

[redacted] Customers were very interested in the progress of the work. They want the project completed because, for them, the sooner the module was finished the sooner they could use it to produce oil. To these customers, finishing a project on time was a concern. [redacted] spot check time cards to verify supervisors were keeping accurate track of their workers time. [redacted] make sure that they were billing accurately compared to [redacted] At the end of the month they would do a review of time worked and safety statistics.

If a job was relatively small, there might only be a couple of sub-job numbers. It would not be efficient administratively to have more. On a large job, however, there could be 100's of sub-job numbers. With the customer concerned about the completion of the job, these sub-job numbers allowed visibility of the progress on the project to be viewed in much higher detail.

[redacted] the VECO Accounting office to produce reports that showed the total hours for the entirety of an individuals employment with the company. A request, either with the employee number, or by name, would have to be submitted, however. [redacted] He had no idea who was responsible for the VECO CORPORATION [redacted]

[redacted] time sheets from the supervisors. [redacted] Corrections to the time sheets could be keyed into a computer. Issues with time sheets could involve the specificity on the job numbers, supervisors identifying the wrong component for which work had been accomplished, etc. From a cost and scheduling perspective, [redacted]

VECO Fabrication Shop Personnel

The Fab shop was entirely self-sufficient. At any given time the Fab shop employed 80 to 90 workers. All of the disciplines were represented in-house. These included instrumentation "guys," who would install tubing and guages, electricians, iron workers, and carpenters. In the trades each of these disciplines would be represented by someone who had ample experience to do the job and was considered a journeyman. Assisting the journeyman, in many cases, would be an apprentice trying to learn the trades. These apprentices would operate much like laborers, not having the skills to do the more complex work required.

Amongst these employees were also [redacted] b6 b7C nobody in the senior VECO management had a problem with his position.

In addition to the individual disciplines, there were also be [redacted] in the Fab shop. On larger projects, a client representative would sit in the office for the daily or weekly, status report.

Field engineers input created the rationale behind all of the cost calculations. They determine how to assemble projects. These determinations were used to compute materials and man-hour estimates. The field engineers also determined what disciplines would be required to complete the project. [redacted]

Accounting

The accounting department would collate and transfer the numbers provided by the Fab shop to VECO CORPORATION. The accounting department was under VECO ALASKA, formerly VECO CONSTRUCTION. They were located in the "A Street office." If employees had a problem with their paycheck they would deal with it in the Fab shop, and the requests would be sent to accounting. The Fab shop, through VECO ALASKA reported all costs to VECO CORPORATE.

Truckable Module Design

Customers often had their engineering and design work done prior to contracting VECO for construction. The engineering was done through a competitive bid to other companies by customers. VECO ALASKA, however, had begun to put together some basic module design packages. They were standard off-the-shelf designs provided by their engineering office on "36th." They could customize the modules to a degree. The modules had to fit within a 20 foot bay and stay within certain limits to remain truckable.

Some of the off-the-shelf designs came from previous designs VECO had built. There was no need to do the engineering for a module that VECO had just built for another customer. [redacted]

FBI - Stevens-3831

This document contains neither recommendations nor conclusions of the FBI. It is the property of the FBI and is loaned to your agency; it and its contents are not to be distributed outside your agency.

The primary focus after receiving the earmark funding and the subsequent funding from USAID was to set up small business development centers in the Russian Far East. Initially, two centers were set up, one center was in Sakhalin and the other in Yakutsk.

The initial earmark in 1993 was for two million dollars for the first year. Thereafter, USAID provided funding. The funding from USAID continued for eight years. This was not an earmark funding; there was language that stated the funding should continue and it did.

With regard to the initial funding in 1993, [redacted] explained that [redacted] is a very good friend of STEVENS. [redacted] told STEVENS that he [redacted] was getting inquires from Alaskans on setting up a program to train Alaskans to do business in Russia. At the same time, [redacted] at the Alaska Center for International Business wrote a proposal to USAID proposing essentially the same thing. When the proposal was finalized, as they combined into one proposal. The final proposal included a change where the individuals to be trained would be Russians rather than Alaskans. b6 b7C

In 1999 or 2000 the ARC received additional funding through an earmark. [redacted] received a call from STEVENS office asking if ARC would be willing to conduct training for Russians. According to [redacted], ARC had not asked for the funding so it was a surprise to receive it. After the budget cuts, the final figure for funding was 2.7 million over three years. [redacted] explained that a substantial number of Alaskan companies were trying to do work in the Russian Far East. A majority of the contracts with these companies required that 70% of the work force labor come from Russia.

In order to affect this training, ARC worked with over 400 local companies. BP, Nachek, and Lyndon Transport were three of the companies that [redacted] could recall off the top of his head. [redacted] recalled that Nachek was doing a module on the northern slope. This training was set up so that 50% of the time was classroom work and the other 50% was conducting site visits.

[redacted] recalled that the companies contacted to assist where identified through a list obtained from the Alaska Support Industry Alliance. Many of the companies declined to assist. It was difficult for ARC to get trainers.

[redacted] that approximately 150 individuals were trained through the DOL earmark received in 1999/2000. Eighty two completed the project management course; fifty two completed the logistics management course; nine completed the train-the-trainer for project management; seven completed the train-the-trainer for logistics management; and twenty seven completed the technical supervisor course. b6 b7C

In addition to earmarks and funds from USAID, ARC is funded through grants. [redacted] writing grants. ARC's current grant funding will end in March 2007 and funds received from USAID will end in August 2007. Some of the smaller grants are involved with providing assistance to Russian orphans. This program seeks to train social workers to provide for needs in the orphanages. [redacted] explained that there are a large number of children in the Russian orphanages. Russian orphanages serve not only children who have no parents, but also delinquent/troubled and/or abandoned children.

[redacted] the University of Alaska to assume the funding for the activities of the ARC as international studies. USAID is also looking at public health management in Russia. [redacted] is of the belief that our government needs to figure out a back way to keep the Russians moving forward. Going in and demonstrating for them how it should be done does not work. They need to see for themselves how it has been done and look to accomplish these things themselves.

According to [redacted] USAID is only focused on giving the Russians "stuff." To [redacted], this approach does not work. [redacted] is of the belief that the Russians need to be shown how it has worked. [redacted] explained that, in training the Russians that have been brought to Alaska, they are told that the majority of the Anchorage infrastructure has essentially been built since the 1964 earthquake. When the Russians see what has been accomplished in just over 30 years, they leave with the sense that they too can accomplish this in Russia.

[redacted] commented that he was surprised when the additional earmark was received in 1999/2000. ARC was not involved in asking for this funding. [redacted] was aware that the funding was coming. [redacted] thought that [redacted] may know more about the earmark funding. MARK TYREE who was paid by VECO CORPORATION installed the baseboard heating in the new areas of the Girdwood residence.

On the outside of the Girdwood residence was a set of stairs that ran from the second story deck to a landing at ground level. Subject Alaska Sea Life Center

[redacted]

As requested, a brief summary on our preliminary findings:

In December, 1994, Senator Ted Stevens pushed the EVOS Trustee Council to authorize the expenditure of $25 million dollars to help create the Alaska Sea Life Center (ASLC) in Seward, AK. The center opened in 1998 and is run by The Seward Association for Advancement of Marine Science (SAAMS) through a Board of Directors. Previous Board members include Trevor McCabe and Dale Lindsey. The center receives continued funding through Congressional appropriations made by Senator Stevens, federal grants, and other sources of revenue. The North Pacific Research Board, created by Senator Stevens has previously provided research grants to ASLC. Trevor McCabe has been on the Board of Directors of that organization. In 2001 Senator Stevens even established the "North Pacific Marine Research Institute" to be administered at the Alaska Sea Life Center by the North Pacific Research Board. (Public Law 106-291, H.R. 4425, Section 5008). According to a newspaper article dated 04/23/06, ASLC has also received funding/grants from the At-Sea Processor's Association while Trevor McCabe was head of that organization.

In March, 1999, Senator Ted Stevens co-sponsored a controversial bill in Congress that released the remaining Exxon Valdez Oil Spill (EVOS) Settlement money from the federal court system (CRIS) and moved it to income producing obligations in the "Natural Resource Damage Assessment and Restoration Fund". Senator Stevens included a section that allowed some of the monies (estimated at $115 million) to go toward "community and economic restoration projects and facilities". Then Assistant Attorney General, DOJ Environmental Division Lois Schiffer strongly opposed the legislation as it went against the original Consent Decree and MOA signed by the funds' trustees. A written statement by Schiffer appended to the legislation reads "The MOA requires that these funds be used "for the purposes of restoring, replacing, enhancing, rehabilitating, or acquiring the equivalent of the natural resources injured as a result of the Oil Spill and the reduced or lost services provided by such resources. Plainly, expenditures for economic restoration projects and facilities unrelated to the restoration or protection of natural resources would be inconsistent with this mandate, and thus contrary to court orders approving the consent decree and MOA to the Clean Water Act, which provides the statutory authority for the EVOS settlement."

On 04/14/2003, business partners Trevor McCabe [redacted] and Dale Lindsey filed a new Limited Liability Company by the name of Centennial Group LLC with the Alaska Department of Commerce.

On 04/30/2003, the Centennial Group, LLC, purchased a property located at 134 Fourth Avenue, Seward, AK, also known as the "Arcade Property". (Kenai Peninsula Borough Parcel Number 14910001). During this same time frame, the group also purchased another property known as "Old Solly's" in dowtown Seward.

In Section 344 of Public Law 108-447, the Department of Interior and Related Agencies Appropriations Act of 2005, Senator Stevens earmarked funds previously appropriated "for such purpose" under Public Law 106-291 ($1,630,000.00) and Public Law 108-199 ($2,300,000) (Research inconclusive on where this money came from - NPS employees advised that this money was originally appropriated to the U.S. Forest Service (Deparment of Agriculture) and then diverted to NPS after negotiations between Forest Service and the University of Alaska fell through). This law stated: the National Park Service shall (1) not later than 60 days after enactment of this section purchase the seven parcels of real property in Seward, Alaska identified by Kenai Peninsula tax identification numbers 14910001 (the Arcade Property), 14910002, 14911033, 14913005, 14913020, 14913007, and 14913008 that have been selected for the administrative complex, visitor facility, plaza and related parking for the Kenai Fjords National Park and

Chugach National Forest which shall hereafter be known as the Mary Lowell Center; and (2) transfer to the City of Seward any remaining balance of previously appropriated funds not necessary for property acquisition and design upon the vacation by the City of Seward of Washington Street between 4th Avenue and 5th Avenue and transfer of title of the appropriate portions thereof to the Federal Government, provided that the City of Seward uses any such funds for the related waterfront planning, pavilions, boardwalks, trails, or related purposes that compliment the new Federal Facility.

This action took the NPS completely by surprise. They did not pass the information about what parcels of land they were looking at to the Senator's office and had already decided they didn't need all 7 parcels for their purposes. Following a "Waterfront study" by a hired consultant the NPS had already decided they didn't need to purchase the Arcade property. On 09/22/03 the Seward City Council approved "Resolution 2003-100" supporting the "Preferred Alternative, Concept 3, Town Center from the Waterfront Study" that did not include the Arcade property. An NPS employee went so far as to state that he "strongly suspected that Trevor McCabe had forwarded the land parcel information to Senator Steven's office through long time associate and friend [redacted] who was allegedly Steven's [redacted] at the time. This NPS employee further stated that he was aware that [redacted] was heavily involved in writing the legislation that was passed.

After the legislation passed, the NPS had Government appraisals done on all seven properties and began negotiations with the 5 land owners (The Centennial Group owned two properties and another land owner owned two properties). The Centennial Group had their own appraisal done on the Arcade property and were very angry at the low amount of the Government appraisal on the Arcade property. The Government had appraised the Arcade property at $94,000.00 due to the cost of cleanup of hazardous materials on the site. The Centennial Group was asking $460,000.00 for the Arcade property. Negotiations between the Centennial Group and the NPS continued between 09/24/03 and 06/10/05, when NPS gave their final offer to the Centennial Group before sending a letter to Senator Steven's office advising that they were unable to purchase all the properties as instructed in the appropriation earmark. During this process, NPS employees advised they received pressure from the Senator's office to purchase all seven land parcels. On 02/18/05, in a conversation between an NPS employee and Trevor McCabe, McCabe stated that "he did not understand why we are not buying all the parcels as Section 344 says we should." During another conversation with Trevor McCabe on 06/08/2005 McCabe indicated that he" would be willing to sell just the Old Solly's parcel and retain the Arcade parcel and renovate it for another use, perhaps to lease to the Sea Life Center."

In late July, 2005, within the Department of Interior, Environment and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2006, Senator Stevens ammended Section 344 of Public Law 108-447 to read, in part: "by striking all language after "(2)" and inserting in lieu thereof "immediately transfer to the Alaska Sea Life Center for various acquisitions, waterfront improvements and facilities that complement the new Federal facility, any remaining balance of previously appropriated funds." (1.6 million) It appears that the language in this bill was changed at some point between when it was debated in Congress and when it was actually passed because Senator McCain references the Alaska Sea Life Center earmark while speaking on the Bill in Congress on 07/29/2005 as an earmark for "eider and sea otter recovery work at the Alaska Sea Life Center". (These may be new funds in addition to the re-appropriated funds from the 2005 Bill).

On 03/31/06 the Centennial Group added SAAMS (the Board that runs the Alaska Sea Life Center) to the Arcade property deed and on 07/27/06, the Centennial Group name was completely removed from the Deed for the Arcade property, leaving the Alaska Sea Life Center as the owner of the Arcade property. The sales price has not been verified, but newspaper articles state the sales price as $558,000.00. Further, according to the newspaper article - no master plan for the buildings use was created before the property purchase.

The Alaska Sea Life Center has also proposed to provide two hour boat tours of Resurrection Bay through an independent contractor from a dock at the center. According to a newspaper article, the independent contractor is Alaska Northern Outfitters, owned by Trevor McCabe. It is not clear where the source of funds for this proposal will come from.

[redacted] said he did not fill out any paperwork or work order for this job. He was making about $30.00 per hour at the time so his time card would show about $120.00 for his wages, with driving time on top of that charge. He estimated that it took him about 45 minutes to an hour to drive each way. For his time card, he started the time when he left the VECO yard just off Potter street where he picked up the VECO van. He does not recall what he wrote on his time card, but he probably wrote Girdwood, Senator's house, or VECO. He would have written on his time card whatever he was instructed to write by his boss, [redacted].

With regards to the second occasion when he worked on the STEVENS' residence, he was again called by his boss, [redacted] [redacted] and told to go to the STEVENS' house in Girdwood. He went and obtained a VECO van and drove to the residence. It was snowing at the time but the weather improved as he got closer to Girdwood. Upon arrival, he again met with [redacted] who told him what to do. He was told that the [redacted] [redacted] and that Senator STEVENS did not want to have to bend down to [redacted] said that VECO gave the statue to the STEVENS as a gift, but did not say why. [redacted] said that the statue was worth $50,000.00. To complete the requested [redacted] work, [redacted]. This is the only [redacted] work he performed this day. He worked at the house around lunchtime and recalls this because while he was there, Senator STEVENS arrived at the house while riding in a Girdwood fire truck with [redacted]. The fire truck was driven by a fireman. The fire truck departed after dropping off Senator STEVENS and [redacted] Also present was [redacted] the [redacted] of Senator STEVENS, and the [redacted] believes that the [redacted] present were the [redacted] and [redacted] After the fire truck left, they started talking about making sandwiches, and [redacted] was offered a sandwich by [redacted]

After the fire truck dropped off the Senator and the [redacted] Senator STEVENS came over and shook his [redacted]) hand. [redacted] introduced [redacted] to Senator STEVENS as one of their employees. [redacted] was driving a VECO van but was not wearing any clothing identifying himself as a VECO employee. The other vehicles at the residence were [redacted] truck described as a blue Chevrolet pick-up, and another vehicle parked in front of the garage. [redacted] said that his time card would show probably four to six hours of work and would include the drive time. He did not recall what he wrote on his time card, but, again, he would have written what he was instructed to write by his supervisor.

b7C

[redacted] advised he does not know of anyone else who worked at the STEVENS' Girdwood home. He does not believe that he would have needed a city permit to perform the work he did on the two occasions, and therefore, the work did not have to be signed off by a city inspector. As a licensed [redacted] the work he performed would be within in approved codes. A permit would be needed for extensive remodeling of a home. He does not know if permits were obtained for work done on the STEVENS' home and does not know if inspections were made. He did not notice and was not looking for work performed on the house which would not meet the necessary building codes.

[redacted] recalls being directed by [redacted] on two other occasions to meet with [redacted] He was sent to [redacted] house in [redacted] to meet with [redacted] He cannot recall the name of [redacted] They were doing a remodeling job on the house and were [redacted] ended up not doing any [redacted] work on this house. [redacted] are both [redacted] did not know if [redacted] worked for VECO.

On another occasion in [redacted], he was directed to meet [redacted] at the residence of Senator RAMONA BARNES. He met [redacted] at the residence but Senator BARNES was not there. [redacted] had the keys to her house. [redacted] did not recall the address of this house but said it was located in the [redacted] said that they wanted to install a motorized wheelchair ramp inside the residence and wanted to know what [redacted] work needed to be done. [redacted] did not perform any work on this house. He did complete his time card and may have written "RAMONA BARNES" on the time card. [redacted] recalls being told by [redacted] to put down Senator STEVENS and RAMONA BARNES on his time cards and then the office would take care of it. No invoices were prepared for the work done on the STEVENS' house, for the time he went to [redacted] house, or for RAMONA BARNES' house. He only completed his time cards.

[redacted] advised that he would not have any documents in his possession relating to these above described jobs other than old pay stubs kept for tax purposes. The pay stubs would not identify the individual jobs. He may have been called on his personal cell phone by [redacted] but he also may have been called on the company cell phone. At the time, his personal cell phone number was [redacted] and his carrier was Cellular One.

[redacted] was served with a United States District Court, District of Alaska, Grand Jury subpoena.

[redacted] advised that the Girdwood, Alaska area is governed by Title 21 zoning codes, meaning that the work performed on this residence would require a Land Use Permit. The Title 21 codes do not require inspections on the work performed. A Land Use Permit is obtained by first filing a plot plan, which would include an engineering diagram of the work to be performed. A fee is charged to the property owners and a permit is then issued, providing that the plans are approved. The file in this office is closed upon receipt of "Re-certified As Built" notification by the owners. The Re-certified As Built is usually filed by the land surveyor, who would verify the plot plan. A Re-certified As Built notification has not been filed in this case involving the address of 138 Northland Road. As a matter of practice, additional permits would not be granted on a property unless a Re-certified As Build notification has been filed. The Land Use Enforcement office upstairs may open a case in a situation where a Re-certification As Built notification was not filed, however, a case is not usually opened unless a complaint from the public is made. She recalls seeing a VECO truck hanging the Christmas lights on a large tree at the STEVENS' residence. The excavation work on the STEVENS' residence was being done by the HR Redmond company located on Alyeska Highway, telephone number 783-2373.

[redacted] could not recall the year that she saw the Christmas lights being hung, but it occurred probably after they completed the renovations. She described the VECO truck as white in color with a long cherry picker arm extension and bucket. The VECO designation was on the doors of the truck. She cannot say if other persons may have seen this truck used to hang the lights. This is not something that people in Girdwood do to the trees. The Christmas lights usually go up as far as a step ladder will allow. Some of the trees in Girdwood are eighty to a hundred feet tall.

[redacted] advised that she has not been inside of the STEVENS' residence. She was invited on one occasion but did not go. She has seen Senator STEVENS at fund raisers and a wedding, but did not think that Senator STEVENS would know her. She has no knowledge of who paid for the renovations at Senator STEVENS' house.

In total, 198 photos were taken, titled 100_0376.jpg through 100_0573.jpg. The photos were taken with a Kodak EasyShare Z650 6.1 megapixel digital camera. Upon return to the Anchorage FBI field office, SA [redacted] downloaded the photos to a CD-R compact disk using an Apacer Portable CD burner and placed the original and a copy into the 1A section of this case file.

During the search, SA [redacted] inadvertently labeled the photo log with the incorrect date of "05/17/2007" when in fact the date was Monday, May 21, 2007. In addition, SA [redacted] incorrectly set the internal date of the camera as "05/21/2008" when in fact it was Monday, May 21, 2007.

Greetings;
You are know doubt facing a mountain of corrupt acts by Alaska Politicians and are spending countless hours putting it all together, but if you have time, and I hope you do. Please look at the actions of the mayor. For a good accounting of what he has done and his weak defense about them just go to adn.com and click on blogs and alaska politics. He has and continues to make his political backers rich and now it comes to light that he even received a 'gift' of property from [redacted] while conducting official acts just for [redacted] and his associates. [redacted] knows a LOT about the dealings, but it needs a look by folks who can get to the bottom of it all.
As a citizen, let me give you my heartfelt thanks for cleaning up this mess that is graft and corruption in Alaskan Politics.

[redacted] telephone number [redacted] was telephonically interviewed by Special Agent (SA) [redacted] [redacted] Federal Bureau of Investigation office, Anchorage, Alaska. [redacted] NORTH POINT PROPERTIES (NPP). NPP manages apartment complexes in the state of Alaska and is a division of PACIFIC RIM PROPERTIES (PRP). [redacted] [redacted] PRP.

On or about 2000, PRP submitted a bid to obtain a 50-year contract for the development and management of new housing units at Elmendorf Air Force Base (EAFB). One of the many conditions on the bid was that the developer of the units needed to team up with a management company from the state of Alaska. PRP, an Alaskan management company, teamed up with HUNT BROTHERS (HB), developer, from Texas. PRP and HB submitted their proposal to EAFB in a timely manner.

The proposals were going to be evaluated and rated by personnel from the United States Air Force at EAFB. After the proposals were evaluated, each proposal was ranked. PRP and HB's proposal was ranked number 2. A proposal by a management company called J&L PROPERTIES (hereinafter J&L) was ranked number one. [redacted] could not recall the name of the developer that teamed up with J&L.

J&L began contract negotiations with EAFB. J&L had 90 days to finalize a contract with EAFB. If no agreement was reached in 90 days, J&L was eliminated and the companies ranked number 2 were given the opportunity, 90 days, to negotiate a contract with EAFB. The negotiating period ended for J&L and no agreement was reached between J&L and EAFB.

After learning that no agreement was reached between J&L and EAFB, [redacted] contacted HB to begin preparations to negotiate with EAFB. However, HB personnel were not very enthusiastic and did not return [redacted] calls. [redacted] then contacted the EAFB personnel in charge of awarding the contract and was informed that

J&L teamed up with HB and that the contract was awarded to J&L and HB. Neither EAFB nor HB gave PRP an explanation why HB was allowed to team up with J&L or why HB teamed up with J&L.

[redacted] wanted to challenge the award of the contract and take legal action against EAFB, J&L and HB. However, [redacted] did not follow up with a legal suit or challenge the award of the contract because [redacted] learned that Senator TED STEVENS was either a partner or part owner of J&L. [redacted] and [redacted] learned that STEVENS invested $50,000 in J&L and after the contract was awarded to J&L and HB, STEVENS investment in J&L increased to $750,000. [redacted] feared that taking legal action against a company in which STEVENS had an interest was worthless because of STEVENS' influence and power in the state of Alaska.

ANCHORAGE - U.S. Sen. Ted Stevens acknowledged he did not pay for stays at a Bristol Bay fishing lodge at a time Cook Inlet Region Inc. used it as an entertainment destination.

The Alaska Republican sent checks this month to cover the cost of the visits in 2001 and 2003, according to an aide.

The use of the Golden Horn Lodge and who paid for it are among issues noted in a lawsuit in which CIRI is accusing a contractor of misappropriating more than $38 million.

Contractor [redacted] is being sued by CIRI and its partner, Houston-based Nabors Industries, over purported financial misdeeds including overcharging for the use of jets and competing with the company he was supposed to be running for them.

"As I recall, other guests at the Lodge included a number of Alaskans and visitors from outside the state. We all enjoyed the wonderful fishing that Southwestern Alaska offers and had numerous conversations about the issues facing Alaska. We focused on a variety of topics including the unique transportation, communications, economic and social challenges Alaska must meet," Stevens said in the statement.

Knik awarded Guantanamo project

Knik Construction made the 11 p.m. news at Seattle station KOMO-TV for securing a job with the Department of Defense at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba. Several Lynden employees saw the news announcement that Knik was awarded a construction contract for repairs to Leeward Airfield at the naval station.

Knik was selected for the job to pave the airport based on the success of its project on Wake Island for the U.S. Navy. According to Knik President Steve Jansen, supplies and equipment will be hauled from Seattle via Alaska Marine Lines' barges and from Houston or New Orleans via chartered barges. Aggregates will be hauled on barges from Jamaica and Florida. The project is now under way, with paving scheduled for next month and demobilization in September.

The firm, Veco Corp., captured a lucrative five-year NSF contract in 1999 to provide logistics and support for polar research, although it had no previous experience in that field. During the same time period, Veco's top executive managed renovations that doubled the size of the longtime Republican senator's Girdwood home -- the scene of a July 30 FBI raid.

NSF spokesman Dana Cruikshank told McClatchy Newspapers that the FBI has made inquiries into the 1999 award, worth up to $70 million, and a 2004 follow-up contract for as many as seven years that the company values at up to $100 million. Justice Department spokesman Bryan Sierra and spokeswoman Deborah Weierman of the FBI's Washington field office, which is leading the investigation, declined comment on the NSF contracts.

Veco's founder and CEO, Bill Allen, pleaded guilty this spring to making $400,000 in illegal payments to Alaska lawmakers, including Stevens' son, Ben, who until last year was president of the Alaska Senate. Allen is cooperating in a sweeping FBI corruption investigation that also has led to the conviction of a former Alaska state representative and guilty pleas from a second Veco executive and a prison-industry lobbyist.

FBI - Stevens-4322

Three other state lawmakers are awaiting trial on bribery charges. Ben Stevens has not been charged.

The disclosure provides further evidence of the degree to which the investigation of public corruption in the Alaska Legislature has widened to include at least two of the state's three members of Congress. Alaska's sole congressman, U.S. Rep. Don Young, is also under investigation for his ties to Veco.

STEVENS-VECO CONNECTION WAS KNOWN

Until now, there has been little hint as to how Veco might have benefited from the close relationship that its CEO had with the elder Stevens, who served for several years as the powerful chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee. Stevens also had oversight of the National Science Foundation in his senior role on the Senate Commerce Committee.

No evidence has surfaced that Stevens directly steered the contract to Veco, but his aggressive support for increased funding for Arctic research coincided with the company's sudden emergence as a major player in providing logistics for polar scientists. Under the contract, Veco helps transport researchers to remote Arctic regions for more than 150 scientific projects, feeds them, houses them and provides equipment and communications during their stays.

Stevens would not comment on any aspect of the investigation and has refused to talk about the FBI raid on his house. A spokesman said that the 83-year-old senator has long had an interest in seeing more money spent on Arctic research.

"Sen. Stevens has long been a supporter of increasing federal funding for Arctic research," said Aaron Saunders, the spokesman. "Alaskans, more than anyone in the nation, are feeling the effects of climate change. In order to understand the causes and impacts of these changes, Sen. Stevens believes that a variety of agencies must help us learn more about the Arctic. As an appropriator and a senior member of the Commerce Committee, it is Sen. Stevens' role to ensure government entities receive the necessary funding to carry out this important work."

As far back as 1994, as a member of the Senate Commerce Committee, Stevens championed putting more Arctic research money into the NSF budget. In 1997, when a government advisory group overseeing Arctic research issued a report detailing disparities in research between the Arctic and Antarctica, Stevens became a standard bearer for the cause.

"I know that Sen. Stevens was very strongly taken with what we had uncovered in the study," said George Newton, a research engineer and former U.S. Navy submarine captain who served for 12 years as chairman of the panel, the Arctic Research Commission. He said Stevens cited the study as a basis for appropriating more money for Arctic research.

Unsolicited, Stevens put $25 million into the commission's budget without ever explaining why an advisory panel instead of the National Science Foundation would get the money. The funds were later shifted to the NSF.

Newton said that when it came time in 1999 to award a polar logistics contract, it was believed within the NSF and in polar research circles that Veco's relationship to Stevens' son might give the company an advantage.

CAME FROM NOWHERE TO WIN CONTRACT

In Allen's plea, he admitted paying fees to the younger Stevens' consulting firm beginning in 1995 -- six years before he was appointed to the state Senate. From 2002 to 2006 when he was a state senator, Stevens was paid $243,250 by Veco mainly for "giving advice, lobbying colleagues and taking official acts in matters before the legislature," Allen admitted in court filings. Allen also offered to make Stevens a Veco executive, the filings say.

"The thought was going around, that as the competition was going on within NSF, there was always this talk that Sen. Stevens' son was connected to Veco," Newton said. "A wink of an eye, so to speak, among people who were not involved in the evaluation. It was water cooler conversation."

One losing bidder questioned the fairness of Veco's initial award in 1999 and said it should "bear further scrutiny."

Marijane Hancock, who submitted a proposal on behalf of the University of Nebraska's Polar Ice Coring Office in partnership with a Canadian company, said she could not imagine Veco gearing up to submit a competitive proposal within a three-month bidding deadline unless company officials somehow had a head start.

The University of Nebraska project held the polar research logistics and support contract from 1974 to 1989, lost it for five years to the University of Alaska, then won it back for the period from 1994 to 2000, earning $17 million over the final six years.

Karl Kuivinen, who headed the Nebraska project in the 1990s, said Veco came from nowhere to win the successor contract.

No one knew the contract's value until the agency floated a formal request for bids on April 21, 1999, said Mike Ledbetter, a former Science Foundation technical manager who sat on a panel that reviewed competing bids.

Ledbetter and Hancock said that Veco gained expertise by hiring several former employees of Antarctica Support Associates, a company that performed similar support services on the South Pole.

Hancock, now a University of Nebraska assistant vice president for academic affairs, said she drafted a protest letter when Veco won the contract, but her bosses decided not to send it. Among other things, she complained that Simon Stephenson, the National Science Foundation's contract manager, "had developed long-term personal relationships" with the former Antarctica field workers who were hired by Veco.

ARCTIC OIL FIELD WORK A FACTOR

The NSF declined to make Stephenson or anyone else available for an interview.

Hancock also noted that, when potential bidders were invited to send personnel to Greenland to tour the main site of the research in June 2000, two Antarctica workers missed a sign-up deadline. She said NSF officials then asked her office to escort the two, who Hancock said, "were provided personal, extensive and special access to all aspects of our operation."

"We learned in the middle of December, after the contract was awarded, that the two individuals we accommodated went to work for Veco Rocky Mountain Inc., on their contract," she wrote.

Veco had no previous government logistics contracts of such scope, but the company's work on North Slope oil fields gave it experience operating under harsh Arctic conditions. The entity set up by Veco to manage the NSF logistics contract, Veco Polar Resources, was formed after its parent company landed the work in 1999.

NSF said there had been no major problems with Veco's performance on the contracts.

Since Allen's guilty plea, he has stepped down from Veco. The Colorado engineering firm CH2M Hill is in negotiations to buy Veco for $463 million.

Veco man says he worked on Stevens, Young fund-raisers

By MATT APUZZO
The Associated Press

(Published: September 19, 2007)

WASHINGTON - A construction worker who oversaw renovation of Sen. Ted Stevens' home said his company also paid him to help run fundraisers for the Alaska Republican, a practice that appears to violate federal campaign finance laws.

Contractor Robert Williams is a key witness in a bribery investigation that stretches from Alaska to Capitol Hill and threatens legal and political headaches for the Senate's longest-serving Republican. The FBI is investigating whether Stevens received illegal gifts from Veco Corp., the once-powerful Alaska oil contractor.

Williams said he was in charge of "special projects" for Veco founder Bill Allen, and the renovation of Stevens' home was one such project. Others included working three or four fundraisers for Stevens while on the clock with Veco. Federal elections laws prohibit candidates from accepting donations or free services from corporations.

Unlike other Veco employees, Williams did not itemize his time sheets with job codes so customers could be billed. When working on one of Allen's pet projects, Williams just logged his hours and Veco made sure he was paid.

"I never had any doubts about it until the FBI came down and served me with subpoenas," Williams said in a telephone interview.

At fundraisers, including at least one at the home of Stevens' brother-in-law, Williams said he was assigned odd jobs. He delivered ice, arranged for table rental or oversaw the four or five Veco employees parking cars.

"If I didn't have parking patrol, I basically just had to be there to make sure nothing got messed up," Williams recalled.

Williams said he also helped run annual fundraising pig roasts for Rep. Don Young, another Alaska Republican who has come under scrutiny in the Veco investigation. The fundraisers were among many Williams said he worked on during his more than 13 years at Veco.

Stevens spokesman Aaron Saunders had no comment Wednesday. The senator has said he wants to avoid any suggestion he was trying to influence the investigation by discussing it publicly.

A spokesman for Young's office referred questions to his campaign spokesman, who did not immediately return a call.

Corporations are prohibited from donating to federal candidates, and that includes providing services, said Kenneth A. Gross, a Washington campaign lawyer and former Federal Election Commission counsel.

FBI - Stevens-4364 IGYA-AN-13620-TSteves,

"The company would have had to have been paid," Gross said.

Young recently amended his campaign finance reports to reflect $38,000 in back payments to Allen for the fundraisers. A review of Stevens' campaign finance expenditures since 2000 revealed no payments to Veco or Allen for fundraising.

Robert K. Kelner, another elections attorney and former Republican National Committee lawyer, said the question is whether Stevens or his campaign workers knew the Veco employees were on the clock.

"Should a thoughtful candidate consider that possibility and look into it? Yes," Kelner said. "Do they have a legal obligation to be that thoughtful? No."

Fundraising and favors are at the heart of the corruption investigation, which has ensnared several Alaska legislators. Allen has pleaded guilty to bribing lawmakers and is cooperating with the FBI. He admitted in court last week that his employees provided "some labor" on Stevens' house in 2000, but Williams recalled the job in greater detail.

Williams remembered spending two or three days a week for about six months at Stevens' house, supervising workers and installing hardwood floors. He also recalled moving a truckload of furniture, including a bed and a rug, from Stevens' mother-in-law's house to the senator's home.

The renovation was supposed to have been just a concrete slab in the basement. But groundwater levels complicated the job, Williams said, so workers raised the house, built a new first floor and added electrical and plumbing connections.

A few other Veco employees helped on the job and Williams hired outside contractors. A garage was added, though Williams isn't sure how that idea came up.

Veco isn't in the residential construction business. Its workers build oil pipelines. But Williams said Allen often assigned him work for friends and family. Stevens and Allen are longtime friends, so Williams didn't think the renovation project was unusual.

Stevens met with workers and knew Veco was handling the job, Williams said, so he assumed the senator was reimbursing Veco for his time. Stevens has said he paid every bill he received on the house.

"Ted said he wanted to make sure everything is paid for," Williams recalled from an early meeting with Allen and Stevens.

He recalls Stevens and his wife paying for flooring and is certain the senator paid for at least some of the work. But because Williams didn't record his time at Stevens' house, he said, nobody could know for sure how much his time cost.

At the time, he assumed that when he signed off on expenses and submitted them to Veco, the company would pass those bills on to Stevens. Now, he's not so sure.

"I think Bill's ego got away from him," Williams said. "I think he did what he thought he could do."

Allen liked to do things his own way and wasn't fussy about separating business and friendship, Williams said. "Bill's personal life and the company were one and the same."

Williams testified about the house project before a federal grand jury in Anchorage. He couldn't remember the total cost of the renovation but said the Justice Department seemed to already know more about the project than he did.

Investigators were "very thorough" and had numerous documents and bills associated with the house, he said.

"I thought everything was on the up and up," Williams said. "I'm disappointed with the way things turned out, and I'm sorry for Ted."

Anchorage, AK [redacted]

Dear Representative Gara,

I have been following the news about the Veco scandals and it brought to mind an experience that may or may not be of interest to you. I have seen that you and Representative Crawford are calling for further investigation of illegal contributions by Veco.

In [redacted] my husband and I were shopping for investment properties. We went to an open house for a newer duplex in east Anchorage. It was very nice with the down stairs used a corporate rental, furnished and hardly used, and the owners living upstairs. [redacted] The owners were [redacted] He was Lisa Murkowski's [redacted] The corporate renter it turned out was Veco.

We were initially informed that Veco was not going to continue to lease the apartment once the building was sold. When we expressed our disappointment that we would not have the renter in place, we were told that Veco would be willing to extend the lease for six months after the purchase. When we were sitting for the preliminary purchase write up, we actually got to see the lease agreement that would be extended for six months. Of course it was written up in the wife's name (which we do not remember but it is or was her maiden name) and was signed by someone other than [redacted] perhaps [redacted] Anyway, we never did buy the duplex because there was an issue with the fire hydrant out front being directly in front of one of the garages.

I did think it fishy at the time, but now realize that perhaps Veco's two thousand a month rental of that apartment, which the owners boasted had only been used twice, was perhaps not a needed corporate rental but instead a nice extra for Lisa's [redacted] I do not know if this is relevant information or not but in light of all the giving done by Veco that now turns out to be illegal, I thought I'd pass the information on to someone like yourself who may know what to do with it. We do not have any of the paperwork so finding a copy of that lease would require getting it from Veco's records.

I hope this information is interesting to you if not relevant.

Sincerely,

[redacted]

Case Background (Include role of interviewee or documents requested, and the Congressional member)

This investigation was initiated in July 2003, predicated on allegations of corruption involving a private prison in Alaska. Polar Pen expanded into a broader investigation involving VECO, the largest engineering and construction firm in Alaska providing support, maintenance and operations services to the oil industry. [redacted] for VECO, and [redacted] for VECO, were engaged in a criminal enterprise in which [redacted] illegally promised and provided benefits, including cash payments, to multiple Alaska state legislators in exchange for official acts by those legislators. VECO was focused on developing a natural gas pipeline in Alaska and was attempting to influence the legislators over a related Petroleum Production Tax that would be assessed by the State of Alaska. The investigation has also identified a corrupt relationship between VECO and U.S. Senator Ted Stevens (R-AK) and U.S. Congressman Don Young (R-AK) wherein, VECO provided both Stevens and Young with a stream of benefits in exchange for official acts.

In August 2006, after operating a long-term Title III investigation, Anchorage served approximately 35 search warrants and conducted over 100 interviews over a three-day operation. The search warrants included several state capital offices, district offices and homes of state legislators. [redacted] including Stevens and Young.

Stevens has long supported the oil and resource extraction industries in Alaska, pushing for expanded development opportunities and various projects that would be in the best interest of the oil industry. VECO, and [redacted] very often have been at the forefront of efforts by the oil industry to lobby the Alaska State Legislature and the Alaska Federal legislative delegation on these issues.

In approximately 1983, Stevens purchased a small A-frame residence in Girdwood, Alaska. In approximately 1999, Stevens implemented a plan to fully remodel and expand this residence and enlisted the assistance of [redacted] and VECO. From early 2000 through 2006 [redacted] and VECO regularly participated and completed projects at Stevens' Girdwood Residence.

While the support provided by Stevens has been relatively broad in spectrum, i.e., tending to benefit the oil industry at large, there are certain instances in which VECO has been the direct beneficiary. In return, Stevens has received multiple benefits from VECO that have not been claimed on his United States Senate financial disclosure forms, notable among these is approximately $300,000 in materials and labor paid for by VECO for the renovation of the Girdwood residence

GEORGE B. NEWTON, white male, home address of [redacted] McLean, Virginia, cellular telephone number [redacted] office telephone number [redacted] email address [redacted] was interviewed at his place of employment, [redacted] Reston, Virginia. After being advised of the identity of the interviewing agent and the nature of the interview, NEWTON provided the following information.

b7C

NEWTON was appointed to the UNITED STATES ARCTIC RESEARCH COMMISSION (USARC) in 1992 by President GEORGE H. BUSH. In 1996 and again in 2000, NEWTON was reappointed to USARC and elevated to the position of Chairman by President BILL CLINTON. In 2004 President GEORGE W. BUSH extended NEWTON'S position with USARC indefinitely. In 2006 NEWTON resigned his position at USARC.

Each member of USARC is considered to work in a consultant role and is authorized to work 90 days a year with compensation. Each member can work additional days, but will not be compensated for their time.

USARC is funded under the NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION budget and typically receives $1 million dollars a year. In July 1997 USARC issued a report regarding the difference in the amount of funding for research in the Arctic versus Antarctica. The basic conclusion of the report was that Antarctica received substantially more research money overall because funds were drawn from two sources of money: 1) money spent solely on research and 2) money spent on logistics to complete the research. In the Arctic there was only one source of money in which to draw from for research and the logistics resulting in a large portion of the research grants being used to pay for logistics versus actual research.

On an unknown date after the report was issued, USARC received a call from SENATOR TED STEVENS' office requesting another copy of the report. Shortly thereafter and "out of the blue", USARC received an appropriation of $25 million to support Arctic research. USARC realized the commission did not have the necessary employees or resources to oversee the spending of the funds and therefore USARC transferred the money to NSF. This appropriation "had nothing to do with VECO" but was to provide money to pay for the logistics associated with research in the Arctic. NEWTON did not believe the management of the funds was subcontracted out to anyone, but that NSF controlled the spending of the entire amount. Approximately $5 million of the money was allocated to pay for the U.S. share of the joint U.S./Japan International Arctic Research Center in Fairbanks, Alaska.

SENATOR STEVENS would periodically come to meetings of the USARC to address items of interest and to hear what USARC thought was important regarding the Arctic. SENATOR STEVENS also spoke at NEWTON'S retirement reception. NEWTON never discussed the specifics of any appropriation with SENATOR STEVENS and has no knowledge of his role in the $25 million appropriation.

The Arctic Research and Policy Act established cooperation between local, Federal and Arctic research entities. As a part of this, [redacted] held a hearing on the development of the cooperative research endeavor with state entities. NEWTON was asked to testify at this hearing and this was the first time he met [redacted] NEWTON met [redacted] on one other social occasion.

NEWTON did not have any knowledge of the relationship between SENATOR STEVENS and VECO executives. The only information regarding [redacted] relationship with VECO executives was "water cooler talk" that [redacted] NEWTON had no independent knowledge of any relationship between [redacted] and VECO executives. b6 b7C

NEWTON recommended speaking with the following individuals who may have more knowledge regarding the political environment in Alaska and USARC.

1) MEAD TREADWELL is the current Chairman of USARC and took over that role when NEWTON resigned. TREADWELL lives in Alaska.

2) DR. DONALD O'DOWD was the Chairman of USARC from 1991 until 1996 and currently lives in Santa Barbara, California.

3) LYLE PERRIGO was the head of the Alaska office of USARC until 2001 and was "well connected" in Alaska. PERRIGO currently resides in Richland, Washington.

Source Reporting:

Source, who is in a position to testify, provided the following information about U.S. Senator Ted Stevens' Girdwood, Alaska home:

At the same time Stevens' home was being finished, [redacted] so a lot of [redacted] stuff went into Stevens' Girdwood home.

Interior Staircase from 1st to 2nd Floor

[redacted] The handrails gave the installers a lot of trouble because of the design/layout and the symmetrics. Above the top of the staircase on the wall was a torch from [redacted] an Olympic Champion.

2nd Floor Bathroom

Virtually everything in the bathroom was new, to include the vanity, mirror, lights, etc. The toilet was a pressure-assisted Kohler toilet that [redacted] really liked. [redacted] Initially, there was a new toilet put in during the remodel process but [redacted] didn't like them [redacted] replace them with the pressure-assisted Kohler toilets, which [redacted] also had in his home.

2nd Floor Hallway Pantry

This closet had new shelving inside it.

2nd Floor Hallway Closet

Source was unsure if there were any changes in this closet.

CIP 303cej01.ec

All Windows with Screens

Source recalled that [redacted] new screens for all the windows in the house. [redacted] new screens from a small company in the Mountain View area, near a smoke shop (Source later drove by the business and recalled the name of the company to be Quality Screens, 235 N. Bliss Street, Anchorage, Alaska). [redacted]

2nd Floor Bedroom

[redacted] Veco paid for the desk. [redacted]

1st Floor

Due to the remodel, the entire first floor was new.

1st Floor Mud Room

[redacted] The eagle statue was there in the home from before the renovation. The entry door was the same as the door on the second floor entry by the kitchen. This entry door that lead into the kitchen, was purchased from Spenard Builders Supply (SBS). SBS initially [redacted] which opened the opposite way. Because the door also had a side piece with a window, the entire piece had to be returned and replaced with one that opened the correct way. Because the mud room door was a twin pair to the upstairs door, when the upstairs door had to be returned and replaced, the downstairs door did as well.

b6

1st Floor Den/Entertainment Room

The couches were moved from the second floor living area to this room, Ted Stevens' old couches. [redacted] Source could not positively remember whether the television and speakers were purchased by [redacted] for Ted Stevens or whether it was [redacted] old television and speakers that was given to Stevens. [redacted] Source thought [redacted] might have gotten the speakers on top of the television from [redacted] The wet bar was new.

1st Floor Hallway Closet

Source believed the washer and dryer were probably new. Source was unsure who purchased them.

1st Floor Bathroom

Everything was new, to include the sauna, steam shower, etc. [redacted] Source advised the toilet was the same kind as that on the second floor [redacted] a pressure-assisted Kohler toilet.

1st Floor NW Corner Bedroom

Source recalled there used to be bunk-beds in this room. [redacted] would visit and stay down here. [redacted] This occurred around the time-frame when [redacted] The dresser was probably one of the old dressers Stevens had before the remodel. The bed currently occupying the room was also probably one of Stevens' old beds.

Garage

[redacted] Mark Tyree to put in the plumbing. [redacted] All of it was "fabed" at Veco shop [redacted] This was given to Ted Stevens. Source recalled waiting until the snap on truck came to have Veco purchase the stuff for Stevens. [redacted] and left them for Stevens. [redacted] and then passed to Ted Stevens. The Coca-Cola box was Stevens'. The metal cabinet was also Stevens'. When Source saw a picture of the bag of rope lighting, Source knew exactly what it was because [redacted] The shop vac was either from Veco or [redacted] left in the home. [redacted] Source believed the Dewalt set, shown in photos on top of the red snap on, was bought at SBS. The set had all the bells and whistles and was a very nice set of tools. The exercise bike and nordic track was in the den area but when [redacted] came to visit, those items were moved out and the workout room became the den/living area on the first floor. A patch on the floor in the garage near the center drain could be seen in photographs. [redacted]

b6
b7D

[redacted] that there was a problem with the drain. Source advised the pipe underneath the concrete was not to grade and not draining right. [redacted] On one of the shelves in the garage is a red case, a chainsaw case, that says "Ted Stevens" on it. [redacted]

b6
b7C
b7D

Garage Ladders

[redacted] the four-fold silver flexoladder from AIH even though someone wrote "STEVENS" on the side of the ladder. The red ladder was a Veco ladder. On the side of that ladder, it says "electrical." This meant it was from the electrical department of Veco. On the other side of the red ladder was a yellow "electrical." On that same ladder on both sides are gray areas, which Source believed may have been where "VECO" was stenciled onto the ladder. It may have been scraped off. The red exterior ladder, which was laying on its side in the garage, was definitely Veco's ladder. [redacted]

3rd Floor Bedroom

The bed for Ted Stevens' room on the third floor was hoisted up

Military Housing, Political Influence & Real Estate Transactions

By [redacted] Tel: [redacted] Email: [redacted] b6 b7C

An argument in support of the "Clean Elections Initiative"

View the following as a growing shared research document to which many have contributed.

Corrections are made and new information is added as it comes available.

Thus far the background information below has led or contributed to national stories on NBC, CNN; and on Anchorage television news KTUU, as well as articles in the Wall Street Journal, LA Times, and two articles in the Washington DC newspaper known as Roll Call.

Based on information received, here with a bit of speculation as to what it all may mean, I have set out a series of facts and dates and transactions involving the use, and what I believe to be the misuse of Federal funds, and political influence. It involves real estate transactions, U.S. Senator Ted Stevens, his son Ben Stevens, Anchorage (Alaska) Mayor Mark Begich, a few Assembly persons and group of local real estate developers who have contributed heavily to local, state and federal elections. And those elected officials have found an astonishing number of ways to enrich their supportive real estate developers. In some cases, not only have these politicians showered their developer friends with favors, they have even made themselves business partners with them. The horrifically profitable transactions described below involved hundreds of millions of dollars and, in many cases required the widespread cooperation of local, state and federal officials: a cooperation involving a majority of those at the top of Alaska's political dog-pile. A cooperation that could not have occurred without a majority vote of the Anchorage Assembly, both houses of Alaska's Legislature, and the cooperation of all three members of our Congressional delegation.

This describes how politicians use your tax money and real estate to enrich developers, who in turn reward them with lucrative partnerships, consulting contracts, and campaign donations. Politicians who don't play starve out early and seldom get to the top because their campaigns are under funded. Developers who refuse to "Pay to Play" are often bankrupted because they can't compete with their subsidized competitors.

So you be the judge: Read the entirety of the outline below. It is just one "case in point example" of the how this state has been run since statehood. After your review, do your own research to support or dispel my statements of fact and/or speculation and belief. Your return report of any improvements or corrections would be appreciated. When you're done, share your opinion by letting others know if you think the following behavior meets 'the smell test' for the kind of government you want.

According to other agents familiar with the transaction, Mayor Mark Begich, a licensed real estate agent at the time, was at the very last minute abruptly pushed into the middle of a real estate transaction, and received a large real estate commission, rumored to be more than $50,000 and less than $100,000, from the land sale from Stevens. [redacted] and friends. It appears to have been concurrent with his about face on the Base Housing tax exemption and his decision to help grease the wheels of the Planning Department on behalf of [redacted] for the rezoning of a property Begich had previously opposed. Begich's assistance enabled [redacted] to secure the building permits and the Federal earmark for the construction of the Parks Building, (the one next to the Anchorage FBI building,) and enabled [redacted] to justify tripling the value of a property he owned - just before the federal government purchased it using an earmark that U.S. Senator Ted Stevens had arranged. (Note: Ted Stevens and Mark Begich were both business partners with [redacted] at the time.)

- In clarification Mark Begich has said he received some commission in cash at closing of [redacted] acquisition of the land for the Federal Park Service building and an interest in two office buildings that [redacted] owned in Anchorage, known as the Calais Towers.

Switching to the subject of another property, according to Alaska Senator Tom Wagoner, Begich helped with the Bill that Alaska State Senator Ben Stevens pushed through the Legislature, enabling the Anchorage Assembly to exempt [redacted] from paying between three and five million dollars per year in Municipal taxes on the real property, which was given to him for a dollar per year by Ben's father, U.S. Senator Ted Stevens. The property in question is the Elmendorf Military Housing located on the Elmendorf Military Reservation and within the Municipality of Anchorage. (When real property improvements are privately owned but located on land owned by the Federal Government, the improvements plus the value of the lease are taxable by the local government.)

The newly elected State of Alaska Representative Anna Fairclough, formerly Anchorage Assemblywoman Anna Fairclough, wrote the corresponding City ordinance that enabled Rubini to take advantage of the newly created State law, enabling Rubini's tax exemption. While on the Anchorage Assembly, Fairclough received several large contributions from Veco and [redacted] Fairclough received more Veco and Rubini contributions again later, when running for former Alaska Representative Pete Kott's seat in the Alaska Legislature. (Pete Kott was one of the legislators whose offices had been raided by the FBI. He has since been indicted for taking bribes from Veco – U.S. Alaska District Court, Case 3:07-cr-00056-JWS-JDR.)

Known facts on the timeline of cooperating efforts - by Ted Stevens, Ben Stevens, Mark Begich, [redacted] (his partner in JL Properties), and Ted Stevens' [redacted] - to arrange cooperation between local, state and federal authorities to manipulate real property values in ways that resulted in the enrichment of each other:

The eight Anchorage real properties in question are:

1. Military Base Housing on Elmendorf (approximately 1,200 units) owned by [redacted] and Ted Stevens [redacted]
2. The newly constructed 'Parks Building' for the U.S. Dept. of Interior's National Park Service, located at 240 W. 5th Ave in Anchorage, Alaska.
3. The 8 acres fronting on Denali Street: behind Lowe's Hardware on Tudor Road.

4. The Arctic Slope Regional Corporation's Flagship Headquarters Building [redacted] and formerly [redacted] in partnership with Ted Stevens. (Ted Stevens bought in to the building project for $50,000 in 1997 and was bought out in 2004 for $1.038 million.)

5. The currently under construction future Flagship Headquarters Building of the Chugiak Native Regional Corporation, [redacted] Ted Stevens' business partner.

6. The Strip Mall on the southwest corner of 36th & C Street, [redacted] Ted Stevens' business partners [redacted] and Ted Stevens' [redacted] It's the building that Flight Standards, a division of the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) was ordered to move into; yet the FAA was already occupying a property at the airport. The FAA is subject to the oversight of the U.S. Senate's Commerce Committee which Ted Stevens chaired.

7. The Calais Towers, [redacted] and formerly owned with Anchorage Mayor Mark Begich as a partner. Begich bought in for an unknown amount and was bought out for an unknown amount about two years later.

8. Two lots that the City of Anchorage, at the direction of Mayor Mark Begich, elected to lease from the parking area from Augustine Development, LLC. Lease payments of $29,000 per month, (about ten times what it is worth on the open market), from developers who are in other ventures partners of [redacted] who is in partnerships with Mark Begich and Ted Stevens in yet other ventures. b6 b7C

- Note: Ted Stevens laid the groundwork for Alaska Native Corporations (ANCs) to receive billions of dollars from the Federal government in non-competitive bid contracts - commonly known as sole source 8(a) contracts. Federal 8(a) contracts are small contracts available only to minority contractors. However, Senator Ted Stevens exempted Alaska Native Corporations from the upper limits of 8(a) contract that all other minority contractors have to abide by. Consequently, by joint venturing with an Alaska Native Corporation, companies like Halliburton or Bechtel can secure huge federal contracts without competitive bid. Hence the news about Alaska Native Corporations having multibillion dollar contracts to clean up New Orleans or provide services in Iraq. One Alaska Native Corporation benefiting from such contracts is now occupying a high rise office building [redacted] Ted Stevens' business partner, [redacted] The lease rate paid to [redacted] for the right to occupy the building Ted Stevens co-owned is the highest lease rate I know of currently being paid for similar space in Anchorage. Another building is now under construction, to be occupied under similar circumstances by another Alaska Native Corporation.

- In the case of the Arctic Slope Regional Corporation, Ted Stevens also arranged for the ASRC to own the known oil deposits in ANWR – the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge. Senator Stevens helped arrange for that ownership to be exempt from a provision of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act of 1971 (ANCSA) that requires all 13 native corporations to share 70% of their net profits from mineral production with the other native corporations, potentially dividing over $200 billion in resource wealth amongst about 20,000 shareholders of the Artic Slope Regional Corporation. That's about ten million dollars per person - the bounty of a resource widely known as Alaska's next Prudhoe Bay that most Alaskans have been misled to believe is a Public resource.

Timeline: The events below demonstrate how the above eight properties were used in an elaborate "you do this for me and I'll do that for you, if you will do that for my friend over there," game of good old boys trading favors.

?/?/1997 Sometime during 1997, Ted Stevens invested $50,000 in a real estate development company [redacted] Seven years later, in 2004, Ted's $50,000 investment would be bought out by [redacted] and/or [redacted] for $1.038 million. Their buyout occurred the same year that [redacted] and partners pocketed a $2.025 million profit flipping an 8 acre lot to the federal government for over twice what they had paid for it just one year earlier. Ted Stevens arranged for the federal appropriations that bought out [redacted] interest and the federal government's 8 acre buyout occurred almost simultaneous with [redacted] buyout of Ted's interest.

03/31/1998 With Mark Begich sitting as Anchorage Assembly Chair and voting with the majority, Begich openly opposed a rezoning and repeatedly voted to postpone its consideration. Somehow he now claims insulation from culpability by saying he was off the Assembly when the Assembly voted to "postpone indefinitely" which is the method by which the Assembly denied the former owners their rezone request. Mark Begich latter supported the rezone request but not until after his business partner [redacted] owned that property and Ted Stevens had earmarked money - to purchase the property for over two times what [redacted] had paid for it one year earlier. Today he runs for cover by saying he supported the park owners who changed their minds after [redacted] bribed them with the promise of $400,000 of the profits he would get from the federal government if they would just go along. (Begich doesn't seem to be able to hear the neighbors next door to the Wal-Mart proposal in Muldoon. Title 21 is fraught with smoke and mirrors and a thousand and one ways to arrange for plausible deniability as politicians and bureaucrats apply the law one way for a "Good Old Boy" and completely different for some one who is not. The non-related applicants who were denied rezoning consisted of a group of about 70 mostly retired school teachers, known as the 40th Street Investors. They had purchased the property as an investment.

Begich offered the following in explanation of his initial opposition:

First Public Hearing March 31, 1998 AO-98-48 Rezone (Planning Director at that time was Sheila Selkregg-she felt the plan of rezoning was inadequate, Also P/Z recommendation was against the re-zone, Spenard Community Council was against it)49 people testified, Almost all against it, the Assembly postponed action until July 21, 1998.

Second Public Hearing July 21, 1998, (MARK BEGICH No longer on the Assembly-term limited out).

Third Public Hearing, August 25, 1998, No action by Assembly. Postponed until December 8, 1998.

Fourth Public Hearing, December 8, 1998
12 more people testified Assembly Postpones until January 26, 1999.

Fifth Public Hearing, January 26, 1999, Assembly takes no action Postponed until March 23, 1999.

Sixth Public Hearing, March 23, 1999, Assembly Postpones Indefinitely (Mark Begich still not Assembly).

3/25/99 The Anchorage press features an article about the property the National Archives would later buy from [redacted] (in 2004) for over twice what he paid for it in 2003, when he purchased it from a group of retired teachers who owned it at the time the press article written here was written. Mayor Rick Mystrom at the time had a vision of "40th Avenue as a 2-lane meandering street cutting through a D.C.-styled quadrangle, with the post office and library to the north and other federal buildings to the south." Mystrom also said he was working with Sen. Ted Stevens in Washington to secure money to acquire the land. The above referenced press article is relevant because it demonstrates that Ted Stevens was aware of the availability of the property, and anticipated its use for a federal building of some kind, long before his business partner owned it and long before he made over six million dollars available for it's purchase.

2001, '02, '03 George Weurch, Mayor of Anchorage 2001-02; Mark Begich elected in 2003. Municipal Board of Equalization (BOE) began questioning the Anchorage property tax appraisal department's valuations of private Leasehold interests on public properties, (airports, port, Railroad property, privately owned housing located on land leased from the military, etc.) known as "Possessory Interest". The Cities valuation methods had resulted in extremely low valuations. BOE was also preparing to look into concerns about other numerous tax exemptions that several board members had suggested may be unwarranted.

2002 With help of the Assembly, BOE caused the MOA (Municipality of Anchorage) auditor to audit exempt tax rolls. The audit validated BOE's concerns, stating that numerous exemptions were not justified or documented, and BOE recommended immediate action.

2002 Board of Equalization (BOE) repeatedly requested information on valuation of new base housing. No response from the MOA.

05/21/2002 According to [redacted] JL Properties, JL Properties entered into agreement with 40th Street Investors to purchase their 8 acre site. Later, transfers interest to Eagle River Center LLC.

06/19/02 [redacted] formed a limited liability shell company that appears to never have been used for any purpose other than to acquire, hold and resell 8 acres as the future sight of the National Archives. The company formed on June 19, 2002 was the Eagle River Center LLC. It was formed 22 days before Ted Stevens had gotten the Senate subcommittee of the full Appropriations Committee to make its first recommendation for the appropriation that would eventually purchase these 8 acres from his business partner

[redacted] (So, Stevens' proposed federal appropriation was to purchase property from [redacted] did not even own yet.)

07/11/02 The FIRST mention of the recommendation to appropriate funds to purchase the land that [redacted] had not yet purchased very likely came in the original bill reported from the Appropriations subcommittee in their report to the full committee. The subcommittee markup was held on July 11, 2002, and was approved by a voice vote. (In review [redacted] purchased the property eleven months after the first proposal for the appropriation. The appropriation proposed was $3.75 million for NARA to purchase property for a new facility in Anchorage. That federal appropriation was used to buy the property from [redacted] 23 months after the appropriation was first proposed, which was also one year and six days following [redacted] purchase. Just enough time to avoid short term gain taxes.) Why didn't the federal government simply advise the 40th Street Investors of their interest in the property and agree to purchase the property, subject to finalization of appropriation, for $1.55 million from the retired teachers that owned it at the time? I think I know why, do you?

7/11/2002, It was just six weeks after [redacted] tied up the 8 acre property that the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on Treasury and General Government passed by voice vote a fiscal 2003 spending measure that included a $3.75 million earmark for NARA to purchase property for a new facility in Anchorage.

8/12/02 To satisfy an appropriation earmark arranged by Ted Stevens [redacted] close on purchase property at 240 W. 5th Ave on which they plan to build the National Park Service Building. Begich received a large real estate commission from the transaction [redacted] recorded a $2,000,000 dead of trust against the property at closing.

b6

- The $2,000,000 figure is probably the purchase price.
- Begich and [redacted] both said the commission was less but neither were willing to disclose the amount until much public pressure was brought. Begich has since shed some light but his explanation has been about as clear as mud.

According to real estate agents and others familiar with the transaction, Mark Begich had little or no involvement in the transaction, and [redacted] bid was lowered by removing the requirement to provide parking. [redacted] was allowed to meet the parking requirements by entering into a long term lease to lease parking spaces from a city owned parking garage next door – a garage which belongs to the Municipality of Anchorage and was paid for with tax free municipal bonds. To the best of my knowledge, the other bidders were not afforded the same opportunity to eliminate parking from their bids One of those bidders is named [redacted] His phone numbers are [redacted] A review the assembly record reveals that it was Assemblypersons Anna Fairclough and Dick Traini who sponsored the ordinance authorizing [redacted] to use the parking. The same two who led the charge to give [redacted] a tax break on his base housing also tried to get tax exemptions for [redacted] Parks Building. The Parks Building was to be a privately owned "build to suit" on a long term lease. Tax free municipal bonds are, by law, not allowed to be used as a means of supplying dedicated parking for a private investor.

11/14/2002 [redacted] transfers ownership of property for Parks Building to 5th Avenue Development LLC on November 14, 2002.

12/9/2003 Accuval-Resco Appraisal (a Seattle co.) issues an appraisal, appraising the site destined for the National Archives at $2,900,000.

12/31/2003 A second appraisal is issued by Black-Smith & Richards, Inc., appraising the property at $1,955,00 as is, however the majority of the appraisal was in defense of a non existent "hypothetical" value of $4,497,000, based on the prospect that the property might be rezoned from R-3, (high density residential,) to B-3SL, Anchorage's highest density business zoning classification, (general business with "special limitations").

Analogous to an alchemist painting a lead brick with gold paint and selling it to an unwary buyer on the prospect it may turn to gold before the unwary buyer notices the deceit beneath the veneer, my suspicion is that the second appraisal was ordered and paid for by [redacted] when the first appraisal ordered by the Federal Government failed to stack up to his desires.

If correct, [redacted] appraiser went to great lengths to distance himself from the conclusions of his own appraisal. (Wanting to keep his appraiser's license may have had something to do with that.)

In an appraisal dated December 31, 2003, apparently written by [redacted] and delivered under the cover letter of [redacted] of Black-Smith and Richards Appraisal Company, the appraisal bares all the markings of an appraisal done by a subordinate shoved into a corner to do something he really didn't want to do by a boss who, in responding to pressure from a high volume client to produce an MAI appraisal, packed with attempts to legitimize a non-existent value, the appraiser included the following language on a page containing no information to the contrary, that could be easily clipped for inclusion in a summary intended to mislead, and from the content of a historical summary of events, published by the National Archives and Records Administration, that appears to be exactly what has happened.

b6

Language reading as follows can be found on page 52 of [redacted] appraisal:

- The subject consists of an B-3SL zoned parcel containing an area of 391,034 square feet (8.977 acres), located at the southwest corner of Denali Street and East 40th Avenue. The property has paved access; all public utilities are available and has average to marginal soils. The parcel could be developed with any legal use permitted under the B-3SL zoning classification and not otherwise restricted.

The language is consistent with several comments throughout the appraisal that characterize B-3SL zoning and value as an existing fact or a certainty of things to come.

The appraiser then insulates himself from the culpability one might gather from his assertions of certainty by using the term "Extraordinary assumption" 11 times to qualify his conflicting suggestions of an existing value of $4,497,000 as an absurdity.

[redacted] it is my opinion that [redacted] appraisal was designed to endorse a non-existent value, while avoiding culpability in a fraud by quietly mentioning the real value of appraisal of $1,955,00 and loudly defending a nonexistent value of $4,497,000.

While "as is appraisals," accompanied by an "as proposed appraisals" are commonplace and necessary when perusing bank loans for remodels or construction projects; the concept being that to secure a loan, one must demonstrate that the land and/or property acquisition costs, plus the costs of the proposed improvements must be less than the sales value after completion [redacted] I have never seen an appraisal hypothesized in the way that [redacted] did in this instance.

After formulating and defending an extensive argument to hypothesize a non-existent value, and expressing it many times as though it was an existing circumstance of fact, Appraiser [redacted] in my opinion, attempts to make such assertions while simultaneously distancing himself from the claim, by inserting a letter in the appraisal that reads as follows:

Subject: NARA Sites in Anchorage

12-19-03

Tract B, Cook

There are several potential appraisal problems involving this property. Each of the following scenarios represents a different question requiring a different approach.

The "as-is" value of the subject (whole property)
In this scenario, the property is appraised according to its current R-3 zoning. The probability of a rezone can be given no weight based on the historic facts:

- A lengthy market exposure period;
- Previous attempts to rezone the property;
- The apparent current position of Municipality of Anchorage (MOA);
- The purchase price by the developer – the recent price paid by developer recognizes the previous history and the probability of a rezone.

The "as-is" value of the subject (whole property) according to the hypothetical condition[1] that property has been rezoned to B-3SL as proposed.
In this scenario, the whole property is appraised (in it's as-is condition) as a general commercial site as of the date of inspection/valuation.

Presumably, GSA needs a value estimate of the site they will occupy rather than an estimate of the larger parcel "as-is".

The "prospective" value of a select site to be created from the larger parcel according to the extraordinary assumption(2] that the B-3SL rezone and replat will be permitted as proposed

In this scenario, the as-is condition (size, shape, zoning, etc.) is of no consequence. The site to be developed/occupied for NARA, is appraised as of a specific future date. This scenario describes that site as proposed in terms of the net area and any platting requirements imposed by MOA. These could include improvements and/or modifications to the infrastructure (e.g. the extensions of roads and utility lines, street lighting).

If this is the case – there are two sub-scenarios:

- The "prospective" value of the selected site, re-platted as proposed with all of the off-site requirements completed the native soils a[illegible] this scenario, the soils are inadequate.

- The "prospective value of the selected site, re-platted as proposed with all of the off-site requirements completed – and build ready – in other words, the peat is removed and the site is prepared for construction. In this scenario, the soils are good.

A prospective date of value allows for current values to be trended forward to a future date of completion. The date of valuation is a future date. This can be limited if the instruction is to estimate the value as proposed according to the hypothetical condition that the site is rezoned, re-platted, and developed as described – as of the date of inspection. The date of valuation is the date of inspection.

Summary:

One of the following needs to be incorporated into the appraisal instructions.

- The "as-is" value of the subject, (whole property) zoned R-3.
- The "as-is- value (whole property) according to the hypothetical condition that the subject is zoned B3SL.
- The "prospective' value of a select site to be created from the larger parcel according to the extraordinary assumption (31 that the B-381, rezone and replat will be permitted as proposed.
- The "prospective" market value of the selected site as of a future date, re-platted as proposed with according to the extraordinary assumption1.41 that the B-3SL rezone and replat will be permitted as proposed and all of the off-site requirements are completed – the native soils are in place.

[end of clipping from letter in appraisal by [redacted]

Comment on Letter:

The above letter reaffirms that the property is appraised according to its current R-3 zoning. In other words, the value at the time of the appraisal and at the time of NARA's review and at the time of NARA's purchase of the property, the value of the property was $1,955,000. The appraiser also makes clear that reliance on the probability of a rezone has no basis in determining value.

By quietly mentioning the real appraisal value of $1,955,000, while loudly defending a nonexistent value of $4,497,000, the appraiser attempts a shell game with the value, and what the appraisal really says the value is. He has used the term "Extraordinary Assumption" 11 times, thereby clouding culpability in the anticipatable fraudulent use of his appraisal.

The 'Shell Game' Worked:

Someone at the GSA either knowingly adopted the fantasy value as fact, with the belief that plausible deniability of "misread the appraisal" had been established, or someone at GSA was successfully duped into unknowingly passing to his or her superiors that the property was zoned B-3SL and had been appraised "as is" at $4,497,000.

The following is a clip from the historical "Executive Summary of Events," prepared and distributed by staff at the National Archives:

- In January 2004, the site selection recommendation report was provided from the site selection committee to NARA for approval. The site recommended for purchase was the site at 40th Avenue and Denali Street.

- The original offer from Eagle River Center, LLC was for a purchase price of $4,880,000 ($14/SF). GSA had obtained the two appraisals — one for $2,900,000 and the second for $4,497,000. On January 21, 2004, GSA and NARA met with the offeror and GSA presented a purchase contract in the amount of $2,900,000. This was not accepted by the offeror.

    - *(The above stated conclusion by NARA staff is false: the appraised value on January 21, 2004 was $1,955,000. In NARA's pre-selection "Side By Side Comparison of Sites;" the comparison information prepared and presented to decision makers prior to the January 21, 2004 initiation of offers, NARA staff falsely described the property as having "No rezoning issues. Current zoning B-3")

- On March 1, 2004, the offeror submitted a counter offer in the amount of $3,525,000. This purchase price was accepted by GSA/NARA. Closing on the purchase of the property occurred on June 7, 2004.

End of clip from GSA "Executive Summary of Events," above.

[redacted] GSA's appraisal reviewer made the following comment: The appraisers present two separate values, one for the property with its current multi-residential zoning ($1.955.000) and one for the property with the applied-for coma-goal zoning ($4,497,000). They do not attempt to estimate the probability of the zoning change being granted. I have some personal misgivings about the location of some of the comparables used and the applicability of a 1% per month time adjustment, especially as applied to the commercial/industrial sales, However. based on the information provided within the appraisal report and given the scope of the work applicable in the assignment. it is my opinion that the analyses, opinions and conclusions are reasonable and appropriate.

- A few questions directed to appraisal reviewer [redacted] would also seem appropriate. Beginning with "did he know the deal closed before the zoning occurred and how many of GSA's buying guidelines were broken when they paid

01/03 Mark Begich announced his plan to run for mayor of Anchorage.

03/17/2003 First Alaska Senate hearing on SB 136, the Bill that would later be amended to exempt [redacted] base housing (the military housing that Ted gave him) from the State Statute requiring it to be assessed at its realistic value and to be taxed at the same mil rate (dollars per thousand of assessed value) as for the properties of all other city property owners.

04/01/03 Mark Begich is elected mayor of Anchorage. Swearing-in ceremony to occur in June.

04/02/03 Second Alaska Senate hearing on the Bill eventually used to exempt [redacted] property from being assessed and taxed like other people's property.

04/10/03 The third Alaska Senate hearing on the Bill to exempt [redacted] property from being assessed and taxed like other people's property.

?/03 At some time during 2003, Mark Begich acquired a 1.5% interest in [redacted] Calais Office Towers for an unknown amount, and does not report his ownership to the political watchdogs, as and when required by law, until two years later.

05/05/2003 According to [redacted] Eagle River Center LLC submitted its 8 acre site that they had not yet finished purchasing, to NARA (National Archives and Records Administration) as part of site selection process for new archives facility.

06/02/03 [redacted] of JL Properties) purchased the 8 acres in mid town near the Anchorage Municipal Library, which is zoned for residential use. The company he used to buy that property is named EAGLE RIVER CENTER LLC [redacted] immediately made application to the Anchorage Planning Commission to rezone the property as General Business, a zoning designation that would nearly triple the appraisal value of the eight acres. See record of deed below. [redacted] said he purchased it 5/21/02. Not true, see deed below. 5/21/02 may have been when they entered into an agreement purchase [redacted] said they submitted it to NARA 5/5/03. That would have been one month before they actually owned it.

- Note: [redacted] intended to sell the property to the US government. The US government does as it pleases with the property it owns, with no deference to local zoning laws. The only reason for rezoning was to justify the increase of its appraisal. The people [redacted] purchased the property from had attempted to rezone the property for business development in 1998. Their application was denied.

- Mark Begich was the chairman of the Anchorage Assembly at the time and instrumental in orchestrating the denial of that first rezone request. But Ted Stevens had initiated the appropriation for the Federal Government to purchase the property from his partner [redacted] before [redacted] purchased the property. As soon as [redacted] acquired the property, Mayor Begich, also partners with [redacted] at that time, reversed his position concerning the zoning of the property, issuing a letter on the letterhead of the Mayor's office urging the Planning Commission's support for [redacted] rezone request.

Note: At the time of the first rezone request, local government had expressed in interest in buying it to be used as a park. One of the arguments made for denying the rezone at the time was that rezoning would increase the price local government would have to pay for the property.

06/24/2003 Begich sworn as Mayor in on June 24th 2003.

- On or about this time, Mark Begich announced his support for exempting [redacted] military housing from taxation and State of Alaska Representative Mike Chenault, the suspected founder of the 'Corrupt Bastards Club', introduced a companion Bill in the House of Representatives, to do the same thing. (The information concerning Mayor Begich's support came from the Bill's prime sponsor, State Senator Tom Wagoner. Senator Ben Stevens added the [redacted] exemption language to Senator Wagoner's Bill and pushed it through.) (Begich's support was conditional on the payment of some token amount in lieu of taxes. When the negotiations were finished, it was token indeed.)

06/24/03 Shortly after his election, Begich also pushed an ordinance eliminating the Board of Equalization (BOE), thereby eliminating further oversight or opposition to such tax exemptions from within the city government.

10/03 The State of Alaska's Assessor threatened MOA (Mayor Begich) with declaration of "major error" in regard to low valuations of possessory interest and a penalty of $400,000. To explain the penalty, the State of Alaska abides by strict formulas for revenue sharing that subsidizes local taxation in payment for local education funding needs. If a community fails to tax local taxpayers in an equitable way, requiring all tax payers to pay their fair share for education, the state will not make up the difference. Alternatively, the state penalizes negligent communities by holding back funds, as necessary to prompt community leaders to require ALL of their citizens to pay their fair share.

12/17/03 Members of the city's Board of Equalization, which hears challenges to tax assessments, resign one day after the Anchorage Assembly approved an ordinance that restructured the board and redefined their authority. [redacted] for the board, said she received notice Wednesday that the entire board -- seven members and 12 alternate members -- was resigning, effective immediately. According to former BOE chair, this mass resignation was largely in response to the Mayor's treatment of the Base Housing issue.

1/15/04 New property assessment valuations are mailed out except for possessory interest properties, including base housing. Assessor stated that Mayor Begich was involved in the valuation decision for base housing.

01/21/2004 According to [redacted] NARA informs Eagle River Center LLC. that its 8 acre site has been selected.

'03 & '04 Begich has, in violation of disclosure requirements, failed to disclose his ownership interest in the Calais Office Towers, an ownership he shares with [redacted] of JL Properties. (Not disclosed until 02/05)

02/02/04 Begich sent a letter to his Director of Planning to approve [redacted] application to rezone the 8 acres and in that letter acknowledged that he was aware that the Federal government was preparing to purchase the property. Mayor Begich is a knowledgeable developer and fully aware that the only reason to rezone the property is to enable the business partner (that he shared with US Senator Ted Stevens) to obtain a higher appraisal and thereby gain justification to secure a higher purchase price from the Federal Government. The statements of the Planning Commission also make clear that they were aware of the fact that the Federal Government had no reason to desire a rezone and that the only effect that a rezone might have would be to cause the Federal Government to pay - or in this case would justify having paid - a higher price than the property could have commanded as previously zoned.

02/09/04 The Planning Commission reversed its prior refusal to rezone the property for the former owner stating that "this owner is much more likely to bring quality development to the area." It's a classic case of WRONG OWNER: as the prior owner hadn't been admitted to the good-old-boy-club and had not "paid-to-play."

02/09/2004 According to [redacted] planning and zoning commission approved the rezone of the 8 acre site. Not true. See the mayor's letter and planning letter.

02/23/2004 According to [redacted] GSA sent letter justifying value and supplied GSA purchase and sale agreement template to Eagle River Center LLC.

03/02/2004 Mayor Begich pushed a new ordinance through the Municipal Assembly (OA. NO. 2004-45) waving [redacted] obligation to comply with several provisions of Title 7 "PURCHASING AND CONTRACTS AND PROFESSIONAL SERVICES" of the Anchorage Municipal Code. (Note [redacted] Excepting the two additional and later occurrences of Begich's intervention on behalf of [redacted] I know of no other occurrence where the laws have been waved to accommodate a real estate developer.)

- Note: I have no doubt that the above ordinance will be defended with the argument that it was passed to facilitate and expedite the construction of a facility needed for the betterment of the future Anchorage. In response, I would argue that the New Seward Highway and all of its overpasses were also needed to for the betterment of the Anchorage's future. However I doubt anyone could make a defensible argument for the waver of the safety and quality controls for its construction. If such a practice is not brought to a halt, future contractor friends of future mayors will enjoy a competitive edge over all "non contributors" in that they will be able to secure an after bid reduction in building costs that their competitors could not rely on in the preparation of their bids.

4/04 Valuation of $40 million placed on base housing even though just the construction loan for approximately 412 units had been reported to be $110 million, the land on which they were built was delivered for, and there were several hundred existing units also delivered for free. (Clearly, that's several hundred million dollars worth of real estate.)

- (JL Properties, Ted Stevens' [redacted] et al, a six percent owner of the base housing) complained and appealed the Assessor's decision to tax them based upon a value of $40 million and soon thereafter, on 04/27/2004, came the fourth Alaska Senate hearing on the bill that would exempt [redacted] property from being assessed and taxed like other people's property; and I suspect this was the hearing during which [redacted] exemptions were added to the bill.

5/04 [redacted] met with Assessor after public information request. Assessor had attorney present, provided no written information, but disclosed that JL Properties refused to provide any information and threatened to get property exempted at State Level. Assessor later reported that JL Properties had obtained exemption through legislation pushed through the Alaska Legislature by Ben Stevens. However, a payment in lieu of property taxes would have to be negotiated with the Municipality of Anchorage.

05/05/04 Alaska State Senate Bill 136, the bill to exemp [redacted] property from being assessed and taxed like other people's property, received final passage from the Legislature. The final version of the Bill required [redacted] to work out an agreement to pay something in lieu of taxes, which will require an agreement and a Municipal Ordinance agreeing to the amount of the payment in lieu.

06/08/04 [redacted] sells his not yet rezoned 8 acres to the Federal Government and collects $3,525,000, after holding the property for only one year and six days. Precisely six days longer than required to avoid the short term capital gains tax. See deed below.

7/20/2004 Meeting of the Anchorage Assembly – [redacted] Dowl Engineers had addressed the community councils and the Planning and Zoning Commission prior to meeting with the Assembly. At those meetings, [redacted] explained that the National Archives had acquired the property as R-3, with the anticipation that it might be rezoned to B-3.

My suspicion is that [redacted] remarks were an attempt to justify - after the fact - an appraisal that may have been fraudulently done and presented to the Federal Government based on a zoning that had not yet been approved. When the resolution to rezone land was approved July 20, 2004, the sale to the Federal Government had already been completed six weeks earlier.

- Note: Convicted lobbyist [redacted] a close friend of Mayor Begich, very likely represented JL Properties in these matters as well. [redacted] was on retainer by JL Properties at the time.

7/04 Two months before the Governor had signed the bill to exempt [redacted] property from taxes, Mayor Begich sent the Assembly a memorandum regarding the payment in lieu, suggesting the settlement was based on ½ of the '02 and '03 tax bills. Begich did not explain what the actual valuations and tax bills would have been if its assessment were calculated the same as all other possessory interest properties. The "settlement," (pushed through by Assemblywoman Anna Fairclough who now sits in the State Legislature) was for a reported $140,000, when a tax bill could have been approx. $3.5 million, increasing to above $5 million per year with project completion.

b7C

- Note: [redacted] advised Anna Fairclough that he would likely sue the State and the Municipality of Anchorage if her proposed agreement were passed. Unfortunately Anna had seen a rich source of contributions addressing the Assembly from the far side of the podium in the Assembly chambers, and she nearly set a world's record for speed and distance as she leaped from her lofty perch in front of the Assembly and into the pocket of [redacted] (See her reported list of contributors employed by JL Properties for confirmation.) Anchorage Assembly Chairman Dick Traini (AKA Tax Break Traini) came in a close second in his attempt to provide tax exemptions for Rubini's building now occupied by the Federal Park Service.

09/07/04 SB136, the bill to exempt [redacted] property from being assessed and taxed like other people's property is signed into law, chapter 140, SLA 04.

- Note: In hindsight it would appear that extreme measures were taken (1) to protect base housing from proper valuation, (2) obtain special interest legislation to exempt them all together, and (3) hide the relations involved. Ben Stevens obtained the exemptions for his father's partners and his [redacted] without disclosure. Mark Begich negotiated the ordinances with the assistance of Anna Fairclough and hindered proper assessment prior to the passage of the statute and agreement to taxes in lieu. The legislation is very likely a violation of Alaska's Constitution which prohibits "Special Legislation" passed for the benefit of one person.

2004 Sometime in 2004, the U.S. Minerals Management Service, moved their regional office from VECO's building at 949 E. 36th Ave, into the property Ted Stevens invested in with [redacted] at 3801 Centerpoint. Minerals Management Service now occupies the fifth floor at that location. [redacted] was the [redacted] at the time. the phone number to the regional director's office is [redacted]

- Just a reminder, Flight Standards was moved from the airport, into the strip mall next door. [redacted] bought the strip mall from the same owner he bought the property he built Centerpoint [redacted] he strip mall with Ted's [redacted] [redacted] 2004 Sometime during 2004 Mark Begich is bought out (probably by [redacted] [redacted] of his 1.5% interest in the Calais Office Towers for an unknown amount. As you ponder what it may have been, remember that Ted Stevens bought into [redacted] property for $50,000 in 1997 and was bought out in 2004 for $1.038 million.

Estimated Giveaways:

A guess of what they gave away to partners in just the military housing: based on what little I have been able to glean from information those involved don't want me to have:

1. Four hundred and ten (410) built 1400 square foot units with two car garages valued at $200,000 each = $82,000,000.
2. Eight hundred and fifty (828) older units averaging 1200 sq. ft. each, some with one car garages, at an average value of $153,000 each = $127,000,000.
3. Estimated total value of existing property at $209 Million taxed at 17 mils, equals an average annual revenue loss of $3,553,000.
4. Phase Two, consisting of four hundred and ten (410) not yet built 1400 sf units with two car garages valued at $200,000 each = $82,000,000. Future tax value = $1,394,000, increasing the Municipal annual revenue loss to an estimated total of $4,947,000.

One of the arguments [redacted] made was that the project would not float without the tax break and that the tax breaks were for the benefit of the troops. Prior to [redacted] gift rental units on Elmendorf were rented to the troops at rent rates substantially below the local market. When the existing properties were given to [redacted] for a nominal fee, the government gave away the benefit of receiving a comparatively nominal rent, and the rent for the troops was raised by [redacted] to match competitive market rents. [redacted] then started receiving a cash inflow at the expense of the troops: one that I suspect amounts to somewhere in the neighborhood of $18 million per year. No wonder some people love 'Uncle Ted' so much.

I believe that the above information demonstrates how less than honorable people rise to the top. Convinced that no one will question their actions when the appearance of fraud is shared with large numbers of the powerful, persons with only a little bit of larceny in their blood find themselves willing to do their small part, or simply look the other way, in exchange for money or power. Swept up into a culture of corruption, they share an unfairly acquired leg-up on their competition; and as a group, they come to dominate the political process.

I believe the above demonstrates a willingness of local, state and federal officials to work together in a conspiracy to defraud the federal government of millions of dollars if they believe a portion the booty will directly or indirectly eventually find its way into their pockets. I believe the above lays out information sufficient to warrant an investigation as to whether or not crimes were committed with the direct participation or complicity of dozens of people. Whether guilty of a crime or not, I find it implausible to believe that anyone named in this article is unaware of the role they've played in perpetuating a culture where bribery is an accepted way of business. Whether guilty of a crime or not, their indifference to what I suspect anyone involved very likely knew or suspected is deplorable.

b6

In speculation, what did they want and what did they get? What kind of appraiser might be willing to represent a property to be zoned business when it was not? Could it be one who was a little bit crooked and knew how lucrative it might be to have [redacted] future business?

When [redacted] Dowl Engineers summarized for the Assembly that the National Archives had acquired the property as R-3, with the anticipation that it might be rezoned to B-3, could he possibly not have suspected that there may have been a little bit of fraud going on in the midst of the deal he was helping to consummate?

[redacted] client no longer even owned the property. Could he really have believed that the decision makers at the National Archives wanted the property to be rezoned in a manner that could only cost more money? Even if those at the Archives had said they wanted the property re-zoned B-3, wouldn't it be obvious to any casual observer that any buyer in the position of the Archives would only make such a statement under duress? Wouldn't it be obvious to any casual observer that the only reason those at National Archives might have issued such a letter could only have been in response to pressure from above? Pressure brought from above because someone down below refused to do their part without a little additional something to cover their ass?

And what about the Assembly members who voted for it? Both they, and the planning commission members who serve at the pleasure of the mayor, did so with the full knowledge that the only reason they were being asked to do so was to justify the fact that Jon Rubini had already succeeded in getting the government to pay him nearly three times as much as his residentially zoned property was worth at the time he closed the sale. At the very least, this knowledge alone should have been the equivalent of a red flag on the field to everyone in the room; an omen to the smell of fraud in the air. Mark Begich is a real estate professional who knows full well that if the federal government had already closed on [redacted] property, some rules were probably broken and some fraud probably occurred. At the very least he should have called a timeout and checked.

> According to KTUU Wednesday August 1, 2007 newscast, [redacted] used an age old time tested mechanism for quelling the opposition to his requested rezone. He bribed them. Mayor Mark Begich told KTUU that he removed his opposition and issued a letter in support of [redacted] requested to rezone his property after [redacted] had won the support of the trustees in charge of the neighboring park land.
> And just how did [redacted] win the support of his surrounding land owners? He promised them 20% of the $ 2.025 million he expected to be able to fleece the federal government for if he could just get his rezone. He explained that supporting his rezone would enable a higher appraisal to present to the federal government and that the he would pay them $440,000 of the $2.2 million in profits the government would pay him if they would just stop opposing his rezone.

FBI - Stevens-4441

b6
b7C

Begich, says the higher price your government had to pay [redacted] because of the rezone he helped [redacted] get and described the bribe [redacted] paid his neighbors to get their cooperation as a "Win-Win" for everybody. I think were in real trouble if paying off your neighbor becomes a standard for people seeking permission for a change of use for their property.

- Note: In all cases of the above mentioned properties which are partially owned by Ted Stevens' [redacted] and attorney [redacted] owns 6%. Alaska law allows attorneys to act in the capacity of a real estate broker once a year. Six percent is a common amount charged by real estate brokers. I therefore suspect it possible that [redacted] was "cut in to the deal without investment," under the false pretense that he had provided [redacted] with a brokerage service.

?/?/2004 Sometime in 2004, Ted Stevens made a change that hid many of his assets. He sold some or all of his interests in [redacted] properties and along with other assets and proceeds from the sale of assets, placed most of his wealth in a blind trust. The scanty disclosure requirements of the U.S. Senate lead us to believe his trust is worth between $1 million and $5 million.

07/26/2005 Mayor Begich pushed a new ordinance through the Municipal Assembly (OA. NO. 2005-91) waving [redacted] obligation to comply with twelve of Anchorage's laws in Title 21, the portion of Anchorage's Municipal Code that sets out the planning and zoning requirements that all competing developers now are, and will be in the future, required to comply with.

- Note: I believe the above referenced ordinances exempting [redacted] from regulation violate Alaska's constitutional prohibition barring the passage of laws designed just for the benefit of one person. I also believe that of the tax exemption Ben Stevens (Ted's son) pushed through the Alaska Legislature, exempting [redacted] and his partners [redacted] and [redacted] from Municipal Property Tax.

  Reminder: [redacted] is Ted Stevens' [redacted]"

- As I have done many times in the past, in the public's interest I would bring suit in Alaska's Courts to overturn the passage of such unconstitutional laws, but former Governor Murkowski, with the help of former Senator Ben Stevens, pushed legislation through Alaska's Legislature that changed the laws on what is known as "Public Litigation." Prior to the change in the law, "Public Litigants" were protected from being shackled with the State's attorneys' fees and the attorney fees incurred by Public Litigants for having brought such suits would be paid by the State if "The litigant had gone to the trouble of enforcing Alaska's constitution without anticipation of financial reward for having done so."

FBI - Stevens-4812

- Although I won in the arena of Alaska's public opinion, I lost to Ben Stevens and the State of Alaska in Alaska's Courts. Had it not been for the intervention of the FBI, I might have lost the whole war and Ben might still be in power. In either case, intervening on the public's behalf to protect them from those who would eviscerate their Constitution has become a far more risky business than it used to be. Following Ben Stevens' victory in the State Courts, a victory that still stands, Ben attempted to use his new law to collect $56,000 from me for trying to recall him from office. Had it not been for a technicality in my favor, he could have collected.
- The new law on Public Litigation, as well as several other laws Ben Stevens and Frank Murkowski pushed through, was pushed through at the behest of those who were bribing Ben. As it becomes increasingly clear that the Murkowski Administration and his Department of Law (including APOC – the Alaska Public Offices Commission) were doing everything in their power to assist Ben Stevens in concealing his fraud, including pushing for the passage of such laws, the need for reviewing and repealing laws pushed through by Ben Stevens becomes increasingly obvious.

January 21, 2006 ADN ARTICLE: City officials and four developers have signed an agreement for construction of a new, $103 million Convention Center in downtown Anchorage, and a bond sale to finance the project is set for next week. About $70.5 million of the total will go toward building the 215,000 square-foot center, a marginal $1.1 million increase from an estimate presented to the Anchorage Assembly last month. The developers —[redacted]— have agreed to contribute up to $2 million each if overruns exceed more than $6 million in contingency funds set aside for extra costs,[redacted] said. If money is left after completion, up to $2.5 million extra could go to the group, he said. Note: As near as I am able to tell, the developers had initally proposed a development concept in 2004, about the same time Mayor Begich began pushing ordinances through the Municipal Assembly waving the "would be developers" obligation to comply with provisions of Title 7 and title 21.

April 7, 2007 Anchorage developers[redacted] and contractor[redacted] (developers who are also partners of[redacted]who is in partnerships with Mark Begich and Ted Stevens) announced that they bought two downtown building lots and planned to pave them, put in 75 parking spaces and temporarily rent them to the city of Anchorage for $29,000 per month. (A lease amount that this[redacted] the author of this timeline, insistently recognized as about 10 times any realistic lease value for the property.) The eventually completed parking lot held 67 parking spots, is tented by the hour and has since the city began paying $29,000 per month to the business partner of the Mayor's business partner, the lot has experienced about a 15% occupancy and after management and lease payment costs are deducted, the lot is costing the city about $25,000 more per month than it generates. An appraisal demonstrating the actual lease monthly lease value to be approximately $3,639 per month is available on request. FBI - Stevens-4443

FBI investigating Stevens' fishing bills

By MATT APUZZO, Associated Press Writer
Tue Oct 30, 4:53 PM ET

WASHINGTON - Federal authorities investigating Sen. Ted Stevens are trolling the Alaska fishing industry for evidence of whether the powerful Republican pushed seafood legislation that benefited his lobbyist son.

So far, the most public aspect of the investigation was the FBI raid on Stevens' home in July, with agents seeking evidence of the senator's relationship with a corrupt Alaska oil contractor.

But authorities have also quietly amassed evidence about fishing.

After serving subpoenas throughout the industry last year, investigators recently returned to Seattle, home to many of the boats and processors that bring Alaska's seafood to market.

Industry officials and attorneys involved in the case, who spoke on condition of anonymity because authorities have told them not to discuss the probe, said investigators are asking about federal legislation that directly or indirectly aided the senator's son, Ben, who is a state lobbyist and politician.

The legislation was passed as earmarks, brief spending items that lawmakers tack onto bills to steer federal money to pet projects. Ted Stevens, an unapologetic user of earmarks, is the biggest champion for Alaska's $2 billion-a-year seafood industry.

Stevens has said he won't discuss the investigation so it won't look like he's trying to influence it. His spokesman, Aaron Saunders had no comment and Ben Stevens' attorney did not respond to messages.

Among the pieces of Stevens-sponsored legislation being eyed:

_A $100 million federal loan program approved in 2000 to buy out Alaska crab boats, trim the size of the fleet and boost prices. The Bering Sea Crab Effort Reduction Fund, an industry group that supported the buyout program, hired Ben Stevens' company, Advance North, as a consultant.

_A $30 million earmark Ted Stevens used to create the Alaska Fisheries Marketing Board, which provided federal money to promote Alaska seafood. Ben Stevens was the board's first chairman and approved grants to companies including those paying him consulting fees, state financial disclosure reports show.

_A $50 million loan program, like the crab buyback, seeking to trim the Alaska salmon fleet in 2004. The Southeast Alaska Seiners Association, a salmon fishing organization, hired Advance North to help push the deal. Ben Stevens is not a federal lobbyist and the salmon fishing group said his business partner, Trevor McCabe, did the lobbying.

But Victor Smith, a fisherman and critic of Ben Stevens, gave the FBI a taped phone conversation that he said proves otherwise. In the 2005 conversation, Smith called the seiners group's board member Bryan Benkman to discuss why funding was stuck in the federal bureaucracy even after the earmark passed.

Both men expressed disappointment in Ben Stevens and Smith asked why he was hired. Benkman replied that the younger Stevens recalled his success getting the crab buyback passed and pitched himself as a conduit to his father.

"He said, 'Hey, see I've got a program. You know, I've got this one to my credit. Hire me, you know, I'll get Dad to fund you guys, too," Benkman said.

_A 2003 earmark that gave exclusive pollock fishing rights to Alaska natives in the far-flung Aleutian community of Adak. That meant millions of dollars for Adak Fisheries to manage the catch of pollock, the lucrative whitefish commonly used in fishsticks and fish sandwiches.

The company paid Ben Stevens $295,000 between 2000 and 2004, according to state financial disclosure reports. When the earmark went through, Ben Stevens also secretly held an option to buy into Adak Fisheries.

Questioned by the Anchorage Daily News in 2003, Ted Stevens dismissed any connection between the legislation and his son's consulting business.

"Neither one of us is getting rich. That's for damn sure," the senator said. "And we're doing what we think is right."

When the stock option surfaced in a lawsuit in 2005, the senator said he had never discussed the pollock bill with his son.

"I have all kinds of ownership in stock and real estate that my father doesn't have a clue about," Ben Stevens said at the time. "You don't tell your father every time you make a decision. I'm 46 years old."

Documents related to the earmarks were among those subpoenaed by authorities last year. At the time, however, Ted Stevens was not known to be a focus of the investigation. He has denied any wrongdoing and has not been charged with any crime.

Despite the criminal investigation, he remains extremely popular in his home state, where he has been a political figure since before statehood. Ted Stevens is up for re-election next year and has more than $1 million in campaign cash. His most recent fundraising quarter was strong and included tens of thousands of dollars from funds controlled by his fellow GOP lawmakers.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS TOLLING AGREEMENT

1. This tolling agreement is made and entered into by and between the United States Department of Justice, Criminal Division, Public Integrity Section ("United States"), myself, Theodore F. Stevens, and my attorney [redacted] b6 b7C

2. I, Theodore F. Stevens, have been advised by my attorney [redacted] that the United States is investigating my alleged involvement with [redacted] VECO Corporation, and others, in a scheme to violate federal criminal laws, including but not limited to financial benefits allegedly received by me in exchange for official acts that benefited [redacted] and VECO Corporation's business interests, as well as my failure to disclose these alleged financial benefits on certain of my United States Senate financial disclosure forms. As my attorneys have advised me, the United States contends that this conduct may give rise to a number of violations of federal criminal law, including but not limited to Title 18, United States Code, Sections 2 (aiding and abetting), 201 (bribery and illegal gratuity), 371 (conspiracy), 1001 (false statements), 1341 (mail fraud), 1343 (wire fraud), and 1346 (honest services fraud).

3. I have been advised by my attorneys and understand that the government states that under federal law, as set forth in Title 18, United States Code, Section 3282, the statute of limitations for most federal criminal offenses, including the above-referenced sections, is five years from the date on which the final act in furtherance of the crimes was committed. I further understand that, upon the expiration of the applicable limitations period and absent an agreement on my part, I could not be prosecuted for a time-barred federal criminal offense.

4. I agree to a tolling of any applicable statute of limitations regarding the above-referenced conduct from May 9, 2007 until March 31, 2008. I understand that, in exchange, the United States agrees to extend the time in which I may present evidence and arguments to the United States concerning the contemplated charges.

5. Nothing in this agreement is intended to limit the ability of the United States to bring criminal charges prior to the expiration of this tolling agreement.

6. I understand that by agreeing to toll, and thus not to assert, the claim of statute of limitations, I am giving up any rights I may have under the federal statute of limitations provisions regarding charges that may result from the investigation described in this document provided that such charges are brought on or before March 31, 2008.

7. Notwithstanding any other provisions of this Agreement, I understand that nothing herein has the effect of extending or reviving any limitations period that has already expired prior to May 9, 2007. b6 b7C

8. I have discussed this matter with my attorneys, and they and I fully understand the consequences of this tolling agreement. No promises, representations, or inducements of any kind other than those set forth herein have been made to me in connection with this tolling agreement.

Signed this 16th day of November, 2007.

FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

Date of transcription 11/30/2007

[redacted] was advised of the identity of the interviewing agents and the purpose of the interview. He advised the following:

He was the [redacted] for a [redacted] with the Alaska Shipyard System for Education and Training. He was involved in an employment grant through the Department of Labor (DOL) related to the shipyard for approximately three years, and noticed discrepancies regarding the way in which the earmarked grant funds were dispersed.

[redacted] explained the project received earmarked federal grant money set aside by US Senator TED STEVENS for the training of new employees for the Alaska Ship and Dry Dock, located in Ketchikan, Alaska. He explained the difference between earmarked federal grant money and receiving federal grants. Companies compete against each other to obtain federal grants, submitting requests for the funds. Earmarked federal grant funds are not competitive, the monies are specifically set aside for a specific purpose and once the company / business completes required paperwork, they receive the funds. In this instance, STEVENS set aside or earmarked $500,000, then $150,000 federal grant funds to the Alaska Ship and Dry Dock for training, minus approximately a .5% origination fee. The Alaska Ship and Dry Dock is the "contractor" which operates the shipyard in Ketchikan owned by the State of Alaska. The owner is the Alaska Industrial Development Association (AIDA). b6 b7C

[redacted] He believes the grant process started in 2002. The grant was specifically to be used for training employees and new employees for the Alaska Ship and Dry Dock. They currently had approximately 100 employees but estimated they would hire additional personnel, and have close to 300 employees within a few years.

UA has the approval of the State of Alaska to conduct training in various areas, to include the dock personnel, which is the reason the grant was requested through UA. [redacted] believes the grant was not used correctly. He believes the grant could have worked, but there was a problem getting the employees to actually train. The dock would list productivity needs as a priority, and training fell lower than that priority. Due to productivity demands, employees were not provided training from the grant. But the money was being "eaten up" by some training, training which [redacted] believes the employer should have paid for as it did not fall within the venue of the grant. He also said some of the money found its way into individual salaries. He believes that the UA and Alaska Ship and Dry Dock management did not want to "embarrass" STEVENS with reports of the money not being used correctly. So false reports were submitted stating individuals received training. [redacted] stated some of his reports were completely re-written [redacted] person for the ship yard. [redacted] was also [redacted] regarding UA.

[redacted] said the money was not obtained in a lump sum, that "draws" were made against the grant for the money. As long as paperwork did not list an "expense," the documents went through without incident accounting the use of the funds. There were quarterly reports written on the funds, but the "government" never checked the reports.

[redacted] the false reports and lack of training. [redacted]

[redacted] provided the names of three DOL federal officers [redacted] The first two DOL employees were located in Seattle, Washington: [redacted] (retired) and [redacted] The Seattle DOL office was closed, and [redacted] location is unknown. It is believed [redacted] may be residing in Seattle currently. The most recent officer was [redacted] telephone number [redacted] stated [redacted] visited the site prior to the grant during a site survey and wrote a "bad report" regarding the site. [redacted] believed [redacted] were no longer with DOL due to the closure of the Seattle office, but also theorized that someone could have been unhappy with [redacted] reports and coerced him to retire.

Another grant was obtained through the State of Alaska DOL in the amount of $126,000, for the same premises to provide training to the dock employees. [redacted] said they did not provide the training, but amended the grant to match what they wanted to do with the funds. [redacted] believes [redacted] wrote and submitted the grant. b6 b7C

[redacted] believed the Alaska Ship and Dry Dock was a "shaky operation." He stated the business had a long term lease of 8 years from AIDA. He did not have further details, but said AIDA, the Department of Transportation (DOT), and one or two other entities secured a $65 million grant for improvements to the shipyard. [redacted] stated President BUSH signed the grant. He said the property was approximately ten acres, between Ketchikan city limits and the Ferry, and doubted there could be any necessary or foreseeable improvements for that large amount of money. The lobbyist for the large grant is located in Washington DC, her name is [redacted]. The project is intended to be a seven year project, which has not yet been initiated. The grant was possibly obtained last year.

The Alaska Ship and Dry Dock has a reputation for being overdue and delayed with their ship repairs. [redacted] said they had one "Federal" job (agency not provided) to refurbish a military boat. The company was six months late getting the job done, and had to "re-do" the boat on occasion as the government stated the boat did not pass inspection.

[redacted] stated the Navy is in the process of obtaining a contract with the Alaska Ship and Dry Dock to build a Navy research vessel. It is known as the "Point MacKenzie Ferry," which would have the ability to transport automobiles as well as smaller ships which could be "picked up in the water" by the vessel. The dock would not directly have the contract, as they are utilizing another Navy contractor for the bid. [redacted] did not have the name of the contractor.

[redacted] of the Alaska Ship and Dry Dock. [redacted] believes both [redacted] have falsified reports regarding aforementioned grant documents. The company maintains their own accountant for the grant money. [redacted] did not know the name of the current accountant.

[redacted] did not know the involvement of SENATOR STEVENS or other politicians with regard to the earmarked grants, or if there was corruption involved. He only knew the money was earmarked by STEVENS, but had no further information concerning kickbacks or bribery. He stated the ship and dry dock had numerous politicians tour the facility. The politicians, STEVENS, LISA (MURKOWSKI), would receive hard hats with their name on it, and the tours would be open to the public to meet the politician and "have a hot dog" or something similar. [redacted] estimated the company spent "tens of thousands" entertaining politicians.

b7C

[redacted] stated he had electronic copies of the grant proposals, electronic mails regarding the grants, and background information on the Alaska Ship and Dry Dock which he would provide to the FBI. One document he received by accident, and will provide to the government, was a proposal where UA duplicated the request for the $500,000 training grant, provided it to a different agency than DOL, and received the funds. The funds are not being used for training the dock employees, but have set up "satellite learning centers" in Craig, Alaska located on Prince Wales Island; and Metlakatla Island. UA outlined the same details from the original DOL $500,000 grant for the shipyard, but are using the money elsewhere.

Title: POLAR PEN;
CSLPO

Synopsis: To request concurrence of Washington Field Office for Anchorage Division to conduct interviews in WFO territory the week of January 21, 2008 and to request assistance of one WFO Public Corruption Agent on these interviews. Anchorage intends to interview [redacted] of United States Senator Ted Stevens.

Details: The above captioned matter pertains to a widespread public corruption investigation being conducted by the Anchorage Field Office in which an oilfield services company, VECO Corporation, was providing financial benefits to state and federal legislators.

Senator Stevens has long supported the oil and resource extraction industries in Alaska, pushing for expanded development opportunities and various projects that would be in the best interest of the oil industry. VECO and former VECO [redacted] often have been at the forefront of efforts by the oil industry to lobby the Alaska State Legislature and Alaska's Congressional delegation on these issues.

b7C

While the support provided by Senator Stevens has been relatively broad in spectrum, i.e. tending to benefit the oil industry at large, there are certain instances in which VECO Corporation has been the direct beneficiary. In return, Senator Stevens received multiple benefits from [redacted] and VECO

008KLS01.EC

Corporation that were not claimed on Stevens' United States Senate financial disclosure forms. Notably absent from these forms were approximately $300,000 in materials and labor paid for by VECO for the renovation of Stevens' Girdwood residence.

Three FBI agents from Anchorage, accompanied by three Internal Revenue Service (IRS) Criminal Investigations Special Agents and one Department of Interior (DOI) Office of the Inspector General Special Agent, will travel to Washington, D.C. for the week of January 21, 2008. In Washington, D.C. the agents will conduct joint interviews with current and former members of Senator Stevens' legislative staff regarding home renovation and other issues relevant to the current investigation. Anchorage is requesting WFO provide one agent to assist with the interviews.

On 01/24/2008, interviews will be conducted of the following individuals: [redacted]. It is believed that these individuals all currently are [redacted] Senator Stevens' [redacted] in Washington, D.C. A fifth, related interview will be conducted in Anchorage on the same day. Ideally, the interviews will be conducted simultaneously prior to normal working hours at their respective residences. Anchorage understands that no contact may be made with [redacted] at their respective legislative offices. The Department of Justice Public Integrity Section concurs with the interviews and concurs with contact of these individuals without prior notification of Senate Counsel.

An additional four interviews will be arranged through Senate Counsel and conducted at a later date for the following individuals: [redacted] for Senator Stevens.

A meeting will be held on 01/22/2008 at 11:00 a.m. at the offices of the Department of Justice Public Integrity Section to coordinate the interviews. Anchorage requests that the designated WFO Agent attend this meeting. The Agent may coordinate with Special Agent [redacted] cellular telephone number [redacted] regarding the specific location of the meeting or with any other questions.

Abuse of power = loss of power

It is sad for Alaska that Ted Stevens' personal affairs have become improperly tangled with his public responsibilities, diminishing his stature and effectiveness in Congress.

When Alaskans elected Ted Stevens to represent us in Washington, we trusted him to act in our best interests.

When an elected official manipulates public laws or directs public funds to enrich himself or those close to him, he loses our trust – and the trust of other elected officials.

Embattled and under an ethical cloud, Ted can no longer be effective and Alaska suffers.

Republican Corruption Scandal Engulfs Alaska

- Ted Stevens and others are under federal investigation
- Embattled and under an ethical cloud, Ted can't deliver

Since the summer of 2006, Alaskans have been rocked by one of the biggest political earthquakes in state history. The Republican corruption scandal continues and threatens to bring down Ted Stevens and Don Young, among others known to be under federal investigation.

SCANDAL OVERVIEW

For more background about the Alaska Republican corruption scandal, see site compiled by the Anchorage Daily News that contains links to news stories about the trials, charging documents, FBI surveillance videos of conversations in Suite 604 of Juneau's Baranof Hotel, info about key players, and more. Click here.

The corruption trial of former Alaska House Speaker Pete Kott, R-Eagle River, in September, 2007 implicated Ted Stevens, his son Ben Stevens, and Alaska Congressman Don Young. Kott was convicted in September of bribery, extortion and conspiracy.

The federal investigation has brought forth criminal confessions of bribery from a long-time close associate and business partner of Ted Stevens, former VECO executive Bill Allen. Allen admitted in federal court in Kott's trial that VECO employees gave Ted Stevens free labor for his home remodel. Allen is one of the VECO officials who pled guilty to bribing Ted Stevens' son and other Alaska lawmakers.

New information about the scandal continues to emerge. News outlets across the country reported Sept. 21, 2007 that former VECO chief Bill Allen, cooperating with the FBI, secretly recorded phone conversations with Ted Stevens. A construction worker who oversaw the renovation of Stevens' home said VECO also paid him to help run fundraisers for Stevens. [source: Associated Press, 9/21/07]

The flow of unsavory news is not likely to stop soon. Two other former Alaska lawmakers - Rep. Vic Kohring and Rep. Bruce Weyhrauch - await trial on corruption charges. Ted's son Ben and others close to them are under federal investigation.

Another former Alaska legislator, Rep. Tom Anderson, has been convicted.

Meanwhile, the national earmark scandal, with Ted in the front row, has become a congressional symbol of shame. Ted Stevens has become, to his colleagues and to the nation, a symbol of waste and corruption.

The situation has gotten so bad that even prominent Republicans are calling on Ted Stevens to step down.

Embattled and under an ethical cloud, Ted can't deliver. And Alaska suffers.

At Sea: The D Dock Curse

OCTOBER 1ST, 2007, FROM THE THE NEW YORKER

There's something about politicians and boats...

But, amid the ruckus that followed the arrest of Senator Larry Craig for allegedly soliciting sex from a plainclothes officer in an airport rest room, little attention was paid to his unusual Washington, D.C., address: 1000 Water Street. There, across the Washington Channel from the Jefferson Memorial, is the Capital Yacht Club, where Craig lives on a forty-two-foot Bertram yacht called the Suz II, named for his wife, Suzanne, who stays back home in Idaho. Craig, a fastidious man who was known to pick up trash around the club, is well liked by his fellow-yachtsmen. (Explaining his behavior in the airport stall, he told the police that he had bent down to pick up a piece of paper.) "He is a creature of habit," a club member said recently. In the weeks during which Craig pleaded guilty to disorderly conduct and then started trying to withdraw the plea, the Suz II floated empty in its slip at D Dock.

Craig's boat shares D Dock with the Cw S Way, a thirty-eight-foot Chris-Craft out of Valdez, Alaska. That boat's owner is Senator Ted Stevens, the longest-serving Republican in the Senate. In July, federal agents raided Stevens's home outside Anchorage; now the F.B.I. is investigating whether he took illegal gifts from an oil-field-services company. (Stevens denies any wrongdoing.) Craig sponsored Stevens for membership in the club, describing him, on the application, as an "experienced boater, great guy, and longtime friend."

Inside The Hidden World Of Earmarks

SEPTEMBER 17TH, 2007, FROM THE BUSINESS WEEK

The sad history of earmarks features a long list of abuses: earmarks used by congressional leaders to buy votes on other legislation, earmarks sent to political donors, and earmarks used in outright bribery. Such issues continue to arise: As recently as July 30, the FBI raided the home of Senator Stevens in a probe into potential earmark-related corruption. Senator Stevens, who has not been charged with any wrongdoing, will not comment until the investigation is complete. In the face of recent earmark scandals, Congress in early August passed a reform bill aimed at reducing abuses by opening up the highly secretive process. Whether those efforts succeed won't be clear until yearend.

Exec: Workers Helped on Senator's Home

SEPTEMBER 15TH, 2007, FROM THE WASHINGTON POST

In the latest sign of corruption problems for Republicans, a corporate executive testified Friday that his employees worked for months to remodel the Alaska home of Sen. Ted Stevens.

Stevens, the longest-serving Republican senator, is under scrutiny in a corruption investigation that also is targeting Alaska state officials.

Bill Allen, former chief executive of oil services company VECO, testified that he spent more than $400,000 to bribe state legislators and for work at Stevens' house in the ski resort town of Girdwood. He said VECO also paid at least two contractors, a plumber and a carpenter, for work on the house. The project in 2000 more than doubled the size of the four-bedroom structure.

When federal agents raided the home of Ted Stevens in an Alaska ski town last week, looking for evidence in a bribery probe, they weren't just investigating the most senior member of the U.S. Senate. They were also exposing a bullying, nepotistic political culture that has flourished on the Last Frontier for decades. Despite its vastness, Alaska is home to just 670,000 people, and it's been dominated for years by a handful of players: Stevens, 83, former chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee; Don Young, the state's lone House member, and various protégés and oilmen. The federal investigation widened earlier this year when an oil-company executive pleaded guilty to bribing state lawmakers, and has now snared Stevens, Young and other lawmakers who have—until now—wheeled and dealed without consequence.

Corruption reports challenge credibility

AUGUST 5TH, 2007. FROM THE ANCHORAGE DAILY NEWS

CRITICISM: Stevens, Young shrug off questions and continue to work.

It was just two days after Monday's FBI raid on U.S. Sen. Ted Stevens' house, and his colleague, U.S. Rep. Don Young, was at a press conference to attack a Democratic energy bill. It was the first time reporters were able to ask Young any questions since the news emerged that he, too, was under federal investigation.

Legislators question FBI raid tactics

AUGUST 5TH, 2007. FROM THE FAIRBANKS NEWS-MINER

It's been a rough couple of weeks for Alaska's congressional delegation.

News that Sen. Ted Stevens and Congressman Don Young are both being investigated by the Justice Department for possible corruption, and Sen. Lisa Murkowski's Kenai land deal sparked a feeding frenzy among the national press corps and unflattering comparisons with Louisiana.

Following Monday's raid by Federal Bureau of Investigations and Internal Revenue Service agents on his Girdwood home, Stevens was featured on the cover of nearly a half dozen Capitol Hill newspapers, including a sketch of him as the angry green Hulk swatting at federal agents like King Kong in the Politico.

Boss Stevens, the GOP's new problem

AUGUST 4TH, 2007, FROM THE HERNANDO TODAY

Ted Stevens offered the FBI a house key, but agents said no thanks. They had their own ways to get into his home in Girdwood, Alaska.

No, they didn't break down the front door. They called a locksmith. And the news media.

People could see agents in business suits taking pictures of cases of wine. One agent carried to a van a garbage bag filled with heaven-knows-what.

The best reality show is still reality.

And it doesn't get much better than this. The day after FBI and IRS agents raided his home, the longest- serving Republican in Senate history threatened in a private luncheon with Republican senators to hold up the ethics bill that was rolling through the Senate. He didn't want to give up flying home with lobbyists.

FBI Probes Stevens's Earmark

AUGUST 1ST, 2007, FROM THE WASHINGTON POST

The FBI is investigating whether Sen. Ted Stevens (R-Alaska) used a $1.6 million congressional appropriation to help an Alaska marine center purchase property from a business partner of the senator's son, said sources familiar with the probe.

That investigation comes amid a widening federal grand-jury probe into Stevens's connections to an energy services company. The FBI and the Interior Department's inspector general are also jointly examining a series of budgetary earmarks endorsed by Stevens in recent years for the Alaska SeaLife Center in Seward, said sources familiar with the probe who spoke about it on the condition of anonymity.

Investigators are particularly interested in how those earmarks may have helped the marine center buy land from Trevor McCabe, a former Stevens aide who was also a business partner of Stevens's son, Ben, according to sources and news reports. Ted Stevens has wielded enormous clout as a senior member of the Appropriations Committee, which he chaired for six years, regularly steering hundreds of millions of dollars a year in earmarks for his home state.

Tonight, Senator Stevens is in the spotlight for something else, though. The FBI raided his house in Alaska in a corruption investigation. Here's Sharyl Attkisson.

Foreman: Stevens remodel figure is way off

By Tony Hopfinger
Special to The Seattle Times

Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, is under federal investigation.

An oilfield-services company provided more than $150,000 worth of labor renovating the home of U.S. Sen. Ted Stevens, according to a project foreman who is cooperating in a federal investigation of Alaska's senior member of Congress.

Employees of VECO Corp., the oil contractor, provided months of work during the 2000 remodeling, which roughly doubled the size of the senator's home in Girdwood, Alaska, said David Anderson, who supervised the job.

Anderson, who said he testified before a federal grand jury about the remodeling, is a former employee and nephew of VECO founder Bill Allen.

Anderson's labor estimate is of interest to federal investigators as they examine the relationship between Allen and Stevens, who for years has ranked as one of the most powerful members of the U.S. Senate.

AL GRILLO / AP

FBI agents searched Stevens' renovated Alaska home in July for evidence in the federal investigation.

The remodeling involved VECO labor, materials, subcontractors and other expenses. For federal investigators, key questions are the total cost of the project, and whether VECO picked up part of the tab as Allen sought to gain favor with Stevens.

At the time of the work, Stevens was at the peak of his political power, chairing the Senate Appropriations Committee in a Republican-controlled Senate and directing billions of dollars of federal spending. He also has helped shape energy, fisheries, telecommunications and other federal policies of major importance to the Pacific Northwest.

Unusual search

In late July, FBI agents took the extraordinary action of removing the lock to search Stevens' Alaska home, and spent much of the day taking measurements and gathering other evidence. The raid thrust the Justice Department investigation into the public spotlight and has ramped up pressure on Stevens.

FBI - Stevens-4536

Stevens, 84, told reporters last summer that he and his wife paid all the remodeling bills that were passed onto them. In a letter to a supporter, he put that amount at "more than $130,000."

"While I ... would like to discuss these issues in great detail, the interests of justice and our state are best served if I make my comments after federal officials complete their work," Stevens said in a statement released to The Seattle Times.

Anderson, 48, said the total remodeling cost, including materials and subcontractors, was way above $130,000.

"We did all kinds of stuff, so it's ludicrous to think that it's only $130,000," Anderson said in a November interview. "Labor alone was more than that."

Anderson said he cannot provide a full account of all the costs because he never received a project budget from Allen and did not review all the expenses. Also, he said Stevens never asked for an estimate.

Stevens and his wife, Cathy, were in Washington, D.C., during much of the renovation, but they did visit the home several times during the work, with Cathy taking an interest in choosing the final interior touches, Anderson said. Otherwise, he said, the couple seemed "nonchalant" about the remodeling.

A bitter feud

Anderson said he has been told by FBI agents that he could be called to testify should Stevens be indicted and charged with a crime. Anderson said he worked for VECO for 25 years and helped in other political tasks, including the welding of a pork rotisserie used at annual campaign fundraisers hosted by Allen for U.S. Rep. Don Young, Alaska's lone House member.

Anderson does have detractors.

They include his uncle, Allen, the VECO founder who in May pleaded guilty to bribing state legislators and is cooperating with federal investigators. In 2004, Allen fired Anderson, and the men have since been locked in a bitter feud, according to Anderson. Anderson agreed to his first interview with a reporter because he is upset with Allen's public statements, which include allegations of blackmailing against Anderson.

A VECO subcontractor on the Stevens remodeling, who has testified before the federal grand jury, also takes issue with Anderson. That subcontractor, Augie Paone, was an important part of the renovation as he framed the first-floor addition and finished the interior.

In a November interview, Paone said Stevens wrote him checks totaling about $100,000 for the work. Paone believes the remodeling could have cost — if all the work was done more efficiently — around $130,000 to $150,000. That is close to the figure Stevens cited earlier this year.

Paone contends that, while he was working in Girdwood, VECO did not contribute much to the job, and Anderson's presence was mostly to keep Allen informed of progress.

"His impact was minimal because no matter what, he had to go through Bill [Allen] for everything, and if he wasn't there, I would have gone through Bill to get things done," Paone said. "He didn't really speed up the job."

Anderson said Paone is wrong: "I busted my ass on Ted's house." He said VECO's labor costs were high because its workers were paid by the biggest oil contractor in the state.

Paone was hired halfway into the project, Anderson said, because VECO's expertise was mainly in the oil industry and commercial projects — not residential construction.

During the renovation, Anderson said, he helped move a water line, build two decks and custom-weld a metal staircase, as well as carry out other tasks ranging from stringing Christmas lights to delivering a new queen-size bed to the senator's house.

Project's beginning

Allen, 70, founded Anchorage-based VECO in 1968 and built it into a worldwide oil contractor with nearly $1 billion in annual revenue. He became a campaign contributor and friend of Stevens'. The two men even shared ownership in a racehorse.

In spring 2000, Anderson said he was sent to clear brush at the small house in Girdwood. Shortly thereafter, Allen summoned Anderson to a penthouse suite at Alyeska Resort to brainstorm how to expand the house.

"Once Bill had his mind set on the job, it was almost as though you couldn't stop him," Anderson said.

For Allen, this past year has been an abrupt descent. He resigned from VECO, which was then sold to a Colorado company. He faces prison time as a result of his May plea agreement and he has served as a government witness in federal bribery trials of two former state legislators.

This fall, during cross-examination in one of those trials, Allen testified that VECO provided materials and several employees to work on Stevens' house. When asked in another trial a few weeks later by a defense attorney if the remodeling was a "gift" to the senator, Allen answered, "No."

Others who knew Allen personally said it is possible Allen failed to forward Stevens every bill. Former state Sen. Rick Halford said that when he was serving in the Alaska Legislature in the late 1990s, Allen had Anderson work on his floatplane dock and other VECO workers spray-insulate his airplane hangar.

Halford said Allen, his friend at the time, never sent him a bill, so he wrote VECO a check for what he believed was a full reimbursement.

"I was making sure I covered myself because when Bill helped you out, you sometimes had a hard time trying to find out what to pay for," said Halford, who has not been contacted by the FBI.

Allen's attorney did not return calls seeking comment for this story.

Anderson, who now lives in a cabin by a remote Alaska lake, said he has not been charged with any crime. He said his career with VECO abruptly ended when he began dating his uncle's former girlfriend.

Anderson said Allen was furious and threatened to harm him.

While testifying in the bribery trial of a former Alaska legislator, Allen accused Anderson of blackmailing him over the Stevens remodeling. Anderson denies the blackmail allegation and said the dispute was over the girlfriend.

Relations were so bad between the two that Allen's lawyer at the time drafted a 10-page settlement in which Anderson and Allen agreed to never contact each other again. In return for signing the contract, Anderson said, he received $30,000 from the firm of Allen's lawyer.

The dark side to Alaska's political corruption scandal

How an oil executive allegedly provided more than $150,000 in labor to renovate Sen. Ted Stevens' house, then threatened to kill his own nephew over 'some hillbilly shit'

When a key government witness testified in federal court this past fall, he hinted at a darker side to the political corruption scandal sweeping the Last Frontier — one with alleged blackmail and murder threats. The witness is Bill Allen, founder of oil contractor VECO Corp., who has pleaded guilty to federal bribery and conspiracy charges and is cooperating with the government. While testifying at the recent trials of two former state representatives he admitted to bribing, Allen accused his nephew — and former employee — of blackmailing him over VECO's remodeling of U.S. Sen. Ted Stevens' home in 2000, also the subject of a federal investigation.

The nephew is Dave Anderson, a stocky man with a voice as rough as the Arctic oil fields where he once welded pipelines. As project foreman, Anderson has detailed knowledge of the senator's home renovation, including that VECO provided tens of thousands of dollars in labor. This raises questions about whether Stevens was billed by VECO and paid for all of the work. In his first interview with a reporter, Anderson denies he blackmailed Allen and claims their dispute was over a woman. In 2004, he took up a relationship with Allen's former girlfriend, who has asked not to be named in this story. The uncle was so angered that he fired his nephew, destroyed his Anchorage mobile home and threatened to kill him, according to Anderson and a series of letters he provided that document the feud. For the past year, Anderson said, he's lived in a remote Alaska cabin, at times fearful for his life.

"This is some hillbilly shit," he says.

In fall 2005, Anderson and Allen tried to bury the hatchet, drafting an agreement in which they vowed never speak to one another again — and never discuss their VECO work with any federal or state authorities. But the settlement never stuck, Anderson said, and he went into hiding two years ago. Then the feds knocked on his door in September 2006. They wanted to know what he knew about Allen's dealings with Stevens, the longest-serving Republican in the Senate.

Anderson says he is now a government witness in the FBI's investigation into Stevens' ties to Allen and the remodel of the senator's home. Key questions are the total cost of the project, and whether VECO picked up part of the tab as Allen sought to gain favor with the 84-year-old senator. In late July, FBI agents took the extraordinary step of searching Stevens' home, and spent much of the day taking measurements and gathering other evidence. The raid thrust the Justice Department investigation into the public spotlight and ramped up pressure on the senator. The project was unusual because VECO — sold in September to Denver-based CH2M Hill — was in the oil business, not residential construction.

"Morally it wasn't right," Anderson says of his work on Stevens' home. "But I work for a living. I draw a paycheck. It's not my place to judge. If Bill says, 'Work on the senator's house,' OK, not a problem. What do you need done?"

Anderson, 48, describes himself as an "oil-fielder." He grew up in Farmington, New Mexico, a rolling stretch of desert dotted with oil and gas wells. He moved to Alaska in 1975 and several years later went to work for VECO. Anderson specialized in welding and worked at Kuparuk and other North Slope oil fields. Then, in the late 1990s, he said, his uncle put him charge of running his political jobs.

Among Anderson's assignments:

• He donated $9,000 to state lawmakers and their campaigns, $2,000 to Stevens, and $1,000 to U.S. Rep. Don Young, according to state and federal elections filings. He says Allen reimbursed him in cash for the donations.

• He says he welded a pork rotisserie used at campaign fundraisers for Young, a gruff politician often deemed one of Congress' biggest porkers. These annual events drew hundreds of the most prominent business people in Alaska — bankers, developers, lawyers, politicians, oil executives and lobbyists. Anderson says he also oversaw the logistics, such as parking and the sound system, at the fundraisers.

• In the late 1990s, he helped build a floatplane dock for then-state Sen. Rick Halford, who lives in Eagle River. He also says he did work on the home of Ramona Barnes, the first woman speaker of the Alaska House. She died in 2003.

FBI - Stevens-4540

But of all the projects Anderson took on for his uncle, the Stevens' home remodel would turn out to be the largest and most controversial.

He says VECO workers provided more than $150,000 in labor to the project. That's on top of at least $100,000 in subcontracting bills, according to a carpenter whose crew was hired by Allen. This raises the project's total cost to more than $250,000 and appears to conflict with statements Stevens made last year after the investigation became public. Stevens told reporters last summer that he and his wife paid all the remodeling bills that were passed on to them. In a letter last year to Wev Shea, a former U.S. Attorney for Alaska, Stevens said he and his wife, Cathy, "personally paid over $130,000 for the improvements to our chalet," as first reported in The Seattle Times. "This is a sad portion of my life — it will take time to explain," Stevens added in his letter.

Anderson says he cannot provide a full account of all the costs because he never received a project budget from Allen and did not review all the expenses. Also, he said Stevens never asked for an estimate. But he is convinced the cost was way above Stevens' figure: "We did all kinds of stuff, so it's ludicrous to think that it's only $130,000. Labor alone was more than that."

Bob Bundy, Allen's attorney, did not return calls seeking comment for this story. A statement released by Stevens' office said that the senator will not comment on the house remodel until the investigation is completed.

Anderson says it was his impression that Allen was renovating Stevens' home both as a friend and to "keep him in his pocket," although Anderson couldn't point to any specific favor the senator had done for Allen before or after the remodel. At the time of the work, Stevens was at the peak of his political power, chairing the Senate Appropriations Committee in a Republican-controlled Senate and directing billions of dollars of federal spending. He'd served in the Senate since 1968 and would later hold the title of President Pro Tempore, from 2003 to last January, making him third in line to the presidency.

"He was the fourth most powerful person in the United States," Anderson said. "Wouldn't you want him in your pocket?"

Bill Allen, 70, wielded power, too. For more than a quarter-century, he was one of the most influential businessmen in Alaska history, a foul-mouthed oilman who'd cut his teeth in the dusty gas fields of New Mexico. He founded VECO in 1968 and grew it into the largest Alaska-based oilfield services business. VECO eventually became a $1 billion, worldwide operation, with oil and construction contracts in Russia, Abu Dhabi, Syria, Sudan, Barbados and other countries. VECO contracted with some of the world's largest oil producers: ExxonMobil, BP and ConocoPhillips — the "three big boys," as Allen often referred to them.

Allen briefly owned the Anchorage Times before selling it in 1992 to the Anchorage Daily News, the state's largest newspaper. After folding the paper, Allen funded a staff of conservative writers and a half-page of editorial space in the Daily News, offering up a daily dose of columns that routinely promoted industry and the Republican Party. And he was heavily involved in politics himself, contributing hundreds of thousands of dollars to Alaska lawmakers sympathetic to his industry. He was so well-connected that he even co-chaired the Alaska finance committee for the Bush-Cheney 2000 election campaign.

But for all his business savvy, he didn't always play by the rules. As Allen worked tirelessly trying to keep lawmakers aligned with industry's interests, he sometimes broke the law. In 2006, while the Alaska Legislature was debating raising taxes on the oil industry for the first time since 1989, the practice caught up with him. The FBI secretly documented Allen as he bribed key lawmakers in a scheme to influence the vote and keep the tax hike to a minimum. He has since said that he was trying to look out for his clients — the oil producers — which VECO depended on for contracts.

Last May, Allen pleaded guilty in federal court to bribing state lawmakers during the heated oil tax vote. He also said in his plea agreement that he paid Stevens' son, Ben Stevens, $243,000 in phony consulting fees while Ben served in the Alaska Senate. The younger Stevens has not been charged with a crime and has denied any wrongdoing. Under his plea deal, Allen agreed to cooperate with the feds in return for a possibly reduced prison sentence and the promise that his children will not be charged with crimes arising from the corruption investigation.

During the recent bribery trials of former Reps. Vic Kohring and Pete Kott, Allen offered details on the witness stand about his role in the Stevens' home renovation. While under cross-examination at Kott's trial, Allen testified that VECO provided materials and several employees to work on the house. Yet, when asked by a defense attorney at Kohring's trial if the remodeling was a "gift" to the senator, Allen answered, "No."

Stevens and Allen had been friends for years — well before the senator became the appropriations chairman — even owning a racehorse together. According to several people who have known Allen personally, he liked to do favors for his buddies. He bought them dinner. He took them on trips. He worked on their property. "That was who Bill was. He liked to help people," said Halford, the former state senator.

In the late 1990s, Allen offered to have Anderson work on Halford's floatplane dock and two other VECO workers spray-insulate his hangar. Halford said Allen never sent him a bill, so he wrote VECO a check for what he believed was a full reimbursement. "I was making sure I covered myself because when Bill helped you out, you sometimes had a hard time trying to find out what to pay for," Halford said.

FBI - Stevens-4541

Allen first sent Anderson to Stevens' property in Girdwood to clear brush in spring 2000. Allen later drove down to the small town, rented a penthouse suite at the Alyeska Resort and called Anderson and another VECO worker to a meeting to brainstorm how they could remodel and expand Stevens' house. Soon, they were talking about jacking up the small house (it was known to friends as "Ted's cabin") and adding a floor below, which would roughly double its 1,200 square feet.

Allen approached the Stevens' and "worked on Cathy (the senator's wife) more than he did on Ted," Anderson recalls. "He said, 'Let me help you out here... We can expand the house and this is how we can do it.'" Anderson adds: "Bill started getting excited about the project. He started adding on shit, and pretty soon we were talking about fire escapes and balconies and decks."

During the first couple months of the renovation, Anderson says, he and a small crew of VECO workers spent several days a week, on average, working on Stevens' home. They brought in a subcontractor to dig a trench for a waterline, but they moved the line themselves, he says. Another contractor was hired to raise the house and set it on stilts. Anderson estimates that VECO workers supplied more than $150,000 in labor on the renovation and odd jobs at the senator's property. Anderson says his salary alone was about $100,000 a year and he spent months on the job.

Allen regularly spoke to Anderson about how the work was progressing. One time the oil executive became concerned rumors might start flying about VECO trucks and equipment sporting the firm's black and red logo parked at Stevens' home. Anderson says his uncle told him "Get the goddamn VECO stuff out of there. Get it out."

By August 2000, Anderson says, it became apparent that VECO needed help finishing the project. VECO workers were trained to work on oil modules and pipelines and giant commercial projects. "We weren't residential construction guys," he says. "We did big projects, and we needed to bring in some expertise."

In addition, VECO's labor costs were running high because the company's workers were paid top wages by Alaska's largest oil contractor. Residential carpenters could get the job done less expensively and more efficiently. So Allen subcontracted Augie Paone, an Anchorage residential contractor, to frame the first-floor addition, add a garage and finish much of the interior. Paone says he has also testified before a federal grand jury about the renovation.

When many home owners undertake major renovations, they usually solicit competitive estimates and closely track material and labor costs. That apparently didn't happen on the Stevens job. Ted and Cathy were in Washington, D.C., during most of the renovation. Anderson says he met several times with the couple when they were in town and that they seemed "nonchalant" about the project. He says they never provided him with a project budget. Paone's experience was similar. He says that neither Allen nor Stevens requested estimates from him. "The way most remodels work is that there is usually an estimate on the job, but there was no estimate because the plans were changing as we went," Paone says.

Stevens wrote him checks for the work, Paone says, totaling about $100,000. He believes the remodeling could have cost — if all the work was done efficiently — around $130,000 to $150,000, close to the figure Stevens cited last year. That's because Paone contends that, while he was working in Girdwood, VECO workers did not contribute much to the job, and Anderson's presence was mostly to keep Allen informed of progress.

"His impact was minimal because no matter what, he had to go through Bill [Allen] for everything, and if he wasn't there, I would have gone through Bill to get things done," Paone says. "He didn't really speed up the job."

But Anderson says Paone is wrong: "I busted my ass on Ted's house." FBI - Stevens-4542

Anderson says he helped build two decks, custom-weld a metal staircase and complete other parts of the remodel, as well as carry out a host of other tasks ranging from tidying up the grounds to stringing Christmas lights on the senator's property. Anderson says he delivered a new queen-size bed to Stevens' house. He took the old bed to Ben Stevens' home in Anchorage.

Dave Anderson says he was once his uncle's "right hand man," a trusted employee, and heavily involved in Allen's pet political projects. But in mid-2004, he suddenly fell out of favor with his uncle. The issue was personal — Allen's girlfriend left him and started dating Anderson. Allen's pride was wounded, Anderson claims, and his uncle fired him and ordered him to leave Alaska.

Anderson says that except for a brief trip to New Mexico, he stayed in Anchorage as Allen continued to threaten him and his girlfriend. In late 2004, an Anchorage Police officer responded to a call made by the girlfriend, who said Allen, allegedly drunk, was threatening to come to her house where Anderson was staying, according to the officer's report. No charges were filed. A series of letters and other correspondence provided by Anderson show the dispute reaching a boil in fall 2005. The documents also reveal that at least Anderson thought the Stevens project and other work he did for his uncle might raise questions and should be kept quiet. Anderson claims he never blackmailed Allen about such issues. He was seeking only a "proper severance" for his 25 years at VECO, he says.

In an Oct. 3, 2005, letter to his uncle's then-lawyer, Jack Miller, Anderson wrote that he was worried for his life (Miller declined to comment for this story):

> Before I was fired from VECO Bill spent months threatening me with physical harm and beyond... I was told by Bill personally and repeatedly that I was not allowed to live in Alaska. And if I was in Alaska –anywhere in Alaska – he would 'stomp me into a mud hole.'

Anderson continued:

> My house was packed up in August of last year by VECO employees. Bill personally oversaw the project. People took my personal property and rummaged through my home. He 'allowed' me to come to Alaska just to pick my things up and to head back out to New Mexico... About two weeks ago I drove by my home which I lived in and paid on for fifteen years and guess what? VECO employees demolished my home and removed it.

According to the Anchorage Building Department, VECO was granted a permit to demolish a mobile home at Anderson's former Anchorage address in August 2005. In the same letter, Anderson tells Allen's lawyer that he'd been a loyal employee who managed many of his uncle's inside political jobs.

> As you may or may not be aware of, Bill had me doing a lot of different work for VECO and yes it is true I worked on Senator Stevens' house in Girdwood and other peoples' personal projects as well. I made political contributions on behalf of Bill by him giving me the cash, me depositing it and then (me) writing a check...I never once have disclosed ANY ... sensitive information I have....political, business or personal...although of course, as you know, I have been accused of doing just that.

On Oct. 18, 2005, Anderson again wrote Miller, asking Allen's lawyer to bring the dispute to an end:

FBI - Stevens-4543

> Bill has completely exhausted all of my patience with threats of death and violence or (me) not being able to work in or live in Alaska. I am completely through tolerating that. This so-called FAMILY FEUD is non-existent. This is between Bill, VECO and me.

As in the Oct. 3 letter, Anderson reminded Miller of the projects he'd done for Allen, including "working on various politicians' houses and projects for politicians as my supervisor saw fit, of course, processing the labor and supplies through VECO for payment."

A few days later, Allen's lawyer drafted a 10-page "Settlement Agreement and Release of All Claims." Allen and Anderson vowed to neither speak to one another ever again nor discuss their VECO work with any federal, state or local government authorities, including the Internal Revenue Service, Alaska Public Offices Commission and the Federal Election Commission, according to an unsigned draft of the settlement dated Oct. 21, 2005. For signing the document, Anderson says, he was paid $30,000 by Allen's law office. Allen's alleged threats toward Anderson and the $30,000 payout are detailed in a sealed FBI affidavit filed in federal court, according to a lawyer who has seen it.

In September 2006, FBI agents investigating corruption in Alaska approached Allen and Anderson separately and both men broke their contract. Anderson says he is not charged with a crime, and that an FBI agent he's in contact with has told him he may be called to testify in federal court, should Stevens be indicted.

Meantime, Anderson passes his time with his girlfriend at a cabin up north. He's had trouble finding work because, he claims, his uncle has blackballed him in the oil industry. So Anderson chops wood, runs into town for groceries, and plays games on the computer, waiting to restart his life.

"We're just real people caught in a world of shit," he said.

Bottom, Exterior Deck

[redacted] At the same time that construction was occurring on the bottom deck, Replacement Glass was replacing all of the windows in the front upper levels of the house. The "bubble" kept the work area warm for the workers. There was snow on the ground so it occurred either late fall or early winter.

Source estimated the cost of the bottom deck to be approximately $30,000 to $50,000. If the cost was approximately $35,000, Source estimated $20,000 would be labor and $15,000 materials. The bottom deck work included pouring concrete, the river-rock inlay, poured steps, custom handrails that mirrored the upper deck handrails, treated wood, and additional treatment of the wood. [redacted] either SENATOR STEVENS or [redacted] or both. [redacted] could not recall which person it was but advised the memo was provided according to a chain of command request within SENATOR STEVENS' office. recalled that the ASLC has requested funding a number of times over the years and has generally received funding through a number of legislative bills.

She met various council members as well as They discussed appropriations and the language revolving around the appropriations which mentioned the purchase of properties which the National Park Service (NPS) declined to purchase. advised that when most of the language was written she was not have been involved.

At one particular meeting with the Seward delegation in July 2005, SENATOR STEVENS advised the original legislative language was wrote for the NPS. SENATOR STEVENS did not think there would be any left-over funds to appropriate because within the language NPS was supposed to purchase seven (7) parcels which would utilize all of the appropriated funding. Attending this meeting with the SENATOR were [redacted] During the meetinig, the City of Seward expressed concern regarding the legislative language asking that Washington Street be vacated. [redacted] there were no price tags on the properties so the city should not have expected too much in additional funds. [redacted] got the impression that the mayor wanted additional money.

[redacted] and filled him in on the Seward delegation's position. [redacted]

b7C

After the meeting with the Seward delegation, [redacted] advised that he may have included a purchase price but she would have taken it out of the language because SENATOR STEVENS would not allow it in the bill.

[redacted] recalled thinking that the City of Seward was never going to buy property and [redacted] to determine whether or not the ASLC would be willing to purchase [redacted] advised they would as long as the ASLC board of directors would agree to it as well. [redacted] advised that the ASLC wanted to expand the center and with the additional property they would be able to do so in the future.

[redacted] regarding the 2004 language which mandated the NPS to purchase a number of parcels. [redacted] did have limited communications with NPS but could not recall with whom. She recalled the communications were centered around the status of the negotiations to purchase the parcels. [redacted] did receive emails containing estimates and offers on the properties.

While communicating with NPS, [redacted] NPS had also been in contact with [redacted] At one point, [redacted] saw a draft letter from the NPS contact in Washington DC advising SENATOR STEVENS that NPS did not want to purchase all of the mandated parcels. In general, [redacted] believed the NPS contacts in Washington DC were not supportive of the parcel purchases but the Alaskan NPS contacts were very supportive. [redacted] advised she kept copies of these emails and communications and gave them to SENATOR STEVENS' chief of staff [redacted]

While the legislative language was being completed, [redacted] SENATOR STEVENS regarding the appropriations. SENATOR STEVENS became more involved after the meeting with the City of Seward delegation, when he learned that all of the properties had not been purchased as originally thought. This spawned further conversation regarding the vacation of Washington Street in Seward and whether or not the City of Seward could actually get it done. It was also discussed whether or not the City of Seward should receive compensation for vacating Washington Street. SENATOR STEVENS office went back to NPS to see if they needed to purchase the remaining three properties (which included [redacted]) but NPS said no and that they did not need those properties for the multi-agency complex. NPS had enough property for the complex.

At this point, SENATOR STEVENS wanted to write something into law with NPS in order to keep the money from being rescinded. The push/rush for legislation was a result of a fear that the money would expire and be returned to the Department of Interior instead of remaining within the community.

[redacted] did not want to just appropriate the money to the City of Seward because SENATOR STEVENS' office did not feel that the city would be able to vacate Washington Street. [redacted] inquiring if the City of Seward or ASLC would be more likely to purchase the Arcade property if given the left-over NPS land acquisition funds. She further acknowledged that this conversation took place after the SENATOR's office confirmed that NPS did not need to buy the Arcade property to proceed with the multi-agency facility project.

When asked why there was such a push for the purchase of [redacted] properties when NPS had already said they did not need the additional properties, [redacted] answered that she just did not know how to answer the question.

According to [redacted] in the end SENATOR STEVENS had final approval on the language and the week after they had the meeting with the City of Seward delegation, it was an on-going conversation between SENATOR STEVENS and staffers. [redacted] advised that SENATOR STEVENS drafted and approved to move the left-over NPS land acquisition money from the City of Seward even though they were aware of the potential scrutiny being that [redacted] was a former staffer for SENATOR STEVENS. [redacted] advised SENATOR STEVENS was comfortable with the ASLC receiving the funding because the final decisions would be made by the ASLC Board of Directors. [redacted] also advised that they had not put in any language mandating that the ASLC purchase the properties. The reason they did not put a mandate in the legislation was concern over the appearance of impropriety due to [redacted] the Arcade property. [redacted] recalled a conversation with SENATOR STEVENS where they discussed the potential scrutiny and that the SENATOR was aware that [redacted] the Arcade property.

Subject VECO- NSF investigation suggestion

I read the recent article in the ADN that you were investigating the VECO Arctic support contract with the National Science Foundation. I have not personally witnessed any illegality but there have certainly been enough irregularities to make me wonder. I know before the first competition [redacted] of NSF made at least one visit to [redacted] house in Colorado to prior to the award.

b6

You should ask for an explanation of the office [redacted] constructed on her property in [redacted] I believe the government paid for some aspects of the facility which was only occupied briefly. It is my understanding that [redacted] now runs his business out of the building. One word of caution: I do not have personal knowledge of the transactions, they may be entirely innocent and above board. As a taxpayer I believe they merit investigation if what I have heard is true. It should be easy enough to see if government invested in the facility or paid more than fair market value.

I have no doubt that [redacted] steered the work to his friends at Polar Field Services (the subcontractor to VECO). I also have no doubt that [redacted] behaved unethically since she and her associates were bidding the job for VECO while employed by Antarctic Support Associates whose parent company was also bidding the work. Based on this behavior I believe other unethical behavior was quite likely. I also bet the tracks are well covered.

[redacted] was asked about STEVENS' Annual Financial Disclosure Forms. In the past, [redacted] STEVENS in completing his Annual Financial Disclosure Forms. They would work with STEVENS and [redacted] in gathering all the necessary records and documents to complete the form. After the Financial Disclosure Form was completed, the form would be sent to [redacted] he was one of the last stops before the form was submitted to the Senator for signature. The Senator would then review, sign and date the form, and it would be forwarded to the Office of Public Records for filing. [redacted] he was unaware of how involved STEVENS was in the process of completing and reviewing the Annual Financial Disclosure Form.

[redacted] Financial Disclosure Forms filed by STEVENS, which included the years [redacted] did not review any of STEVENS Annual Financial Disclosure Forms when [redacted] the office. [redacted] was unaware of the types of documents that were used to support and complete STEVENS' Annual Financial Disclosure Forms. [redacted] assumes that there would be e-mails regarding the completion of the forms. Pursuant to the request from DOJ, STEVENS' office is searching for documents relating to the Annual Financial Disclosure Forms. [redacted] a meeting with STEVENS' attorneys regarding the document retrieval for these records. The meeting took place in the last month.

[redacted] four to five meetings regarding the retrieval of documents pursuant to attorney requests. [redacted] These requests came up when an issue would arise. [redacted] explained that when [redacted] was named in a criminal probe, STEVENS asked [redacted] was held after the search warrant was executed on STEVENS' home in July 2007. STEVENS told the staff to cooperate and tell the truth if questioned by investigators.

[redacted] advised that they conducted document retrieval in May 2007, pursuant to a request from DOJ regarding renovations to STEVENS' Girdwood residence in Alaska. They ran electronic searches for the search terms that were requested by DOJ, which included the "Chalet", [redacted] the "Chair", and "Christmas Tree Lights". [redacted] after the document retrieval, for relevancy, and weeded out the e-mails that were completely irrelevant. [redacted] The relevant documents were put into a binder and several copies were made. One of the copies was provided to STEVENS, and another copy was filed in the back office. [redacted] does not know if STEVENS gave the binder of documents to his attorneys.

There were later searches conducted after May 2007. Copies of the documents pulled were provided to the Senator. If the documents were original copies, a copy of the document was made, and the original was placed back into the file where it originated. When the documents were collated, they were put into chronological order by the date of the e-mails. [redacted] [redacted] that were involved in the document retrieval. [redacted] retrieval of documents from the office [redacted] which include [redacted] spent a couple of hours a day for a couple of days looking for documents. [redacted] estimated that he spent approximately two weeks of time on document retrieval and review. [redacted] estimates that [redacted] spent more on time on document retrieval than he did.

[redacted] was asked about STEVENS' handwritten notes. STEVENS' handwritten notes for official correspondence are filed with the original correspondence letters. [redacted] did not know if there were any handwritten notes for STEVENS pertaining to his residence. [redacted] did not recall STEVENS ever saying that he (STEVENS) couldn't find his handwritten notes for terms that DOJ was seeking in their letters of request.

[redacted] was asked about STEVENS' daily routine. At the end of each day, STEVENS' briefcase is prepared for the night. Newspapers, documents to be reviewed, and letters to be signed are placed in his briefcase. STEVENS brings the briefcase home, and the next morning, when STEVENS brings the briefcase back to the office, staff takes the items out of his briefcase. If there are handwritten notes on letters or documents, they are copies and placed into a file.

STEVENS' personal financial matters, which require a minimal amount of time, [redacted] some of STEVENS' bills from his checking account and [redacted] STEVENS' personal matters. If other staff performs work for STEVENS' personally, they are compensated as well. [redacted] did not know how much the staff is compensated for their time, as [redacted] did not pay close attention to it. [redacted] believes that [redacted] a file for STEVENS' personal items in the back office.

[redacted]

[redacted] was asked about the "Chair". [redacted] located one e-mail between STEVENS and [redacted] regarding the delivery of the chair. [redacted] did not recall any more details regarding the e-mail, except that it involved the delivery of the chair. [redacted] did not recall the e-mail discussing payment of the "Chair". [redacted] STEVENS residence in Washington, D.C., [redacted] a dark brown massage chair in the residence. [redacted] did not know if anybody contacted [redacted] regarding the "Chair".

HOME RENOVATIONS

[redacted] was aware that STEVENS renovated his residence in Alaska, but [redacted] thought that the renovations were complete [redacted] did not pay much attention to the house renovation, and he did not recall STEVENS talking about the renovations when they were being done.

[redacted] At the time, the residence was a one story house, with the bottom level unfinished. When [redacted] returned to visit the house in the [redacted] time frame, the residence was already renovated, as it was changed to a two story residence, as the lower level was finished. That configuration is the same that exists today. [redacted] did not recall construction ongoing on the residence when he visited in [redacted] Decks were also added to the first and second story of the residence. [redacted]

b7C

[redacted] did not recall STEVENS telling him that VECO Corporation performed the renovations on the Alaska residence, but [redacted] said that STEVENS could have. [redacted] is not aware of STEVENS telling any other staffer that the renovations were done and paid for by VECO. [redacted] never attended an event where he heard STEVENS thank [redacted] for the renovations to the residence. LOWE is aware that [redacted] and STEVENS knew each other, but [redacted] did not know the extent of their relationship. In [redacted] did not have a lot of interaction with [redacted]

[redacted] was asked about [redacted] knows [redacted] but never had any conversations with [redacted] about the actual renovations to the residence. [redacted] has spoke with [redacted] about the investigation regarding the renovations, but just in general aspects. [redacted] commented that "I can't believe this is happening".

[redacted] advised that there is a folder/file maintained in the back-office (general area) in STEVENS' office, that is titled "House Renovations". [redacted] has seen the file/folder, but does not know what the file consists of as he has never gone through it. [redacted] believes that there are checks to companies for work performed on the house, but [redacted] does not know the specifics of the checks. [redacted] on STEVENS' behalf. [redacted] does not know if STEVENS turned the folder over to his attorneys. [redacted] recalled that [redacted]

[redacted] was asked if he has ever seen checks from STEVENS to VECO. [redacted] is unaware of any checks from STEVENS to VECO. STEVENS has advised that he paid for every bill he received as it pertained to renovations on his residence, and has records for work performed on the house. STEVENS comments were very general based, and STEVENS never made any comments about VECO or [redacted] doing construction on the residence. b6 b7C

[redacted] did not recall any conversations with STEVENS or [redacted] regarding re-modeling of the Alaska residence. STEVENS did say that [redacted] set up a separate checking account to pay the bills for the renovation.

KENAI RIVER CLASSIC

[redacted] STEVENS to the Kenai River Classic [redacted] believes if he went to the Kenai River Classic in [redacted] When [redacted] went to the Kenai River Classic, he typically lodged at RW's or SMOKIN JOE'S. [redacted] would fish either one or two days during the event, but never fished with STEVENS. [redacted] would also attend the auction, at which, [redacted] would personally purchase items, to include [redacted] The auction was held at the SOLDOTNA SPORTS CENTER, and there were approximately 1,000 people at the auction. [redacted] did not sit at STEVENS' table, as STEVENS was seated with the VIPs, which included [redacted] and executives from the Kenai River Classic.

[redacted] was asked about a firearm that STEVENS received at the Kenai Classic. [redacted] advised that in the years 2002, 2003, 2005, and 2006, STEVENS was presented on stage with a firearm from the NATIONAL SPORTSMEN FOUNDATION (NSF) during the award presentation. The award presentation took place during the auction event. Because the NSF was a 501(c)(3) non-profit organization, when [redacted], he was under the impression that STEVENS did not have to report awards for service and recognition. [redacted] the firearm was a public service award and did not have to be reported on the form. When [redacted] learned that their interpretation was incorrect, they amended STEVENS' Annual Financial Disclosure Forms and reported the receipt of the firearms as a gift. [redacted] called it a "staff error" on their part. The firearms are located at STEVENS residence in Alaska.

[redacted] was asked, hypothetically, if STEVENS had reported gifts from 501 (c)(3) non-profit organizations on Financial Disclosure Forms in the past, if STEVENS would have been aware that gifts from charities that exceeded a certain value would have been required to be reported. [redacted] believes that STEVENS would have been aware of the rules regarding gifts from charities if he disclosed them on past Annual Financial Disclosure Forms.

[redacted] was asked when they decided to amend STEVENS' Annual Financial Disclosure Forms. [redacted] believes last year, around the time of the filing of the last Annual Financial Disclosure Form (2006), there was a press inquiry or a letter from DOJ regarding the firearm. [redacted] the Senate Disclosure Rules, [redacted] and the Senate Ethics Committee regarding the firearms. After they determined that the firearms should have been reported, [redacted] staff amend the Annual Financial Disclosure Forms and report the firearms. [redacted] did not know the value of the firearms, but just knew they were valued more than the allowable gift rule amount. They did not list the value of the firearms on the forms.

[redacted] advised that STEVENS had received a sword from the U.S. MARINES, which is displayed in the front-office. However, [redacted] did not think the sword needed to be reported as it was a gift from another federal agency.

[redacted] recalled that STEVENS bid on two Alaskan sled dogs during the auction at the Kenai River Classic. [redacted] did not know if STEVENS won the sled dogs, but STEVENS did have sled dogs at his Washington, D.C. residence for a period of time. [redacted] believes that the dogs were shipped to Washington, D.C. from Alaska, but [redacted] did not know who paid the shipping costs. Staffers would sometimes house sit the dogs when STEVENS was out of town. This included [redacted] STEVENS would reimburse the staffers for their services. The dogs only stayed in Washington, D.C. for one year when they were returned to Alaska.

[redacted] was asked about the gift bags that were provided to the participants of the Kenai River Classic. [redacted] advised that all participants were given gift bags at the Kenai River Classic, and when [redacted] he spoke with the Senate Ethics Committee regarding the receipt of gift bags from a 501(c)(3) non-profit organization as [redacted] wanted to comply with the gift rules. The guidance [redacted] received was that Members of Congress could not receive a gift bag, in which the contents, in aggregate, did not exceed $50 in value. [redacted] made Members of Congress that attended the Kenai River Classic aware of the gift rules, and told them to check the gift bag before accepting them. [redacted] also spoke with the NSF about the gift bags, and told them that they needed to make Members of Congress aware of the value of the gift bags. [redacted] does not ever recall being told the value of the gift bags.

b7C

[redacted] was asked if [redacted] attended the Kenai River Classic. [redacted] did not have a lot of participation at the Kenai River Classic.

SALMON BRONZE SCULPTURE

[redacted] advised that STEVENS has a three prong Salmon Bronze Sculpture displayed outside of his house in Alaska. The sculpture was a donation from the NSF to the TED STEVENS FOUNDATION, and when the building for the foundation is built, the sculpture will be placed there. All of STEVENS' Senate Archives will be housed at the foundation. [redacted] does not know when the building will be built or where it will be built, but believes the foundation has a Board of Directors, [redacted]

[redacted] believes the foundation was formed eight years ago, and that they have raised money for the building. [redacted] has not seen any plans for the building.

CHRISTMAS TREE LIGHTS

[redacted] has seen the lights on the trees outside the STEVENS' residence in Alaska. After the search warrant was executed in July 2007, STEVENS [redacted] hired someone to take down the lights and put them in the garage right before the search warrant was executed in July 2007 because the trees were dying because of the lights. STEVENS expressed frustration because he (STEVENS) believed that the taking down of the lights led to the search warrant of the house. STEVENS reiterated that he had nothing to hide and would have freely allowed investigators to search his residence if they had asked for consent.

When asked, [redacted] advised that STEVENS never stated that investigators had asked him (STEVENS) for consent to search his residence.

VEHICLES

[redacted] was asked about a Ford Mustang that STEVENS owned. STEVENS told [redacted] after the search warrants of VECO in 2006, that he (STEVENS) [redacted]

[redacted] is very involved in the

Kenai River Classic and the [redacted] would occasionally receive phone calls from [redacted] but most of the time, [redacted] dealt with [redacted] who handled [redacted] in STEVENS' office. [redacted] never heard that STEVENS was involved or picked out the design of the stained glass artwork.

[redacted] was asked about the access to the back-office in STEVENS Senate Office. [redacted] advised that the back office is in a general area and is accessible by all personnel. The back-office is just beyond STEVENS' office, and there are four desks there. The Scheduler and Staff Assistant sit in the back office. There are file cabinets in the back office, but they are kept unlocked.

[redacted] was asked about [redacted]

[redacted] asked about the ALASKA SEA LIFE CENTER. [redacted] advised that the staff compiled information regarding the ALASKA SEA LIFE CENTER after there was a media story about the Center.

[redacted]

[redacted] has interacted with [redacted] began in STEVENS office in [redacted] and maintains a friendly relationship with him. The investigation of [redacted] upsets STEVENS greatly, and he (STEVENS) believes that [redacted]

PRESS INQUIRIES

[redacted] recalled an incident when STEVENS was being questioned by the media regarding a fishery issue. STEVENS became frustrated with the press and told them that they could review his memo if they wanted. The ALASKA DAILY NEWS (AND) took STEVENS' up on his offer and asked for the memo. [redacted] not provide the memo because there were confidential internal comments in the memo that [redacted]

[redacted] was asked who dealt with the press when they inquired about VECO and the renovations to the house. [redacted] dealt with the media inquiries, as [redacted] does not know what statements STEVENS made to the press, but believes that materials were provided to the press.

[redacted] did not have a clear memory of the second story deck and associated lights and staining work. [redacted] recalled something about two different decks and that [redacted] recalled there was fiberglass installed on the bottom of the second story deck to stop rain from coming down on the first story deck first by indicating he knew that the deck was there, then stating he thought the deck was there. [redacted] did not recall the circumstances of the decks, but does recall a conversation about water leaking, though it was a vague memory. [redacted] had no distinct memory of the lights, deck, or stain but had a vague memory regarding the ice melt system. [redacted] did not recall anything specific about the ice melt system other than it created a problem. [redacted] wished he could remember and indicated he believed his memory problem was related to his age. [redacted] indicated he would rather get a root canal and did not want to be doing this interview.

[redacted] did not recall any conversations with Senator Stevens regarding the Christmas lights. [redacted] believed that [redacted] was doing all this. [redacted] knew that VECO was involved because of [redacted] brought up the phone call played for him regarding Chugach Sewer and Drain. [redacted] recalled that it was shocking when he heard himself on that tape. [redacted] exclaimed that he does not remember stuff from last week, and even has a hard time remembering his anniversary. [redacted] thought remembering a conversation from five years ago would be difficult because at the time it was not important. b6 b7C

[redacted] disagreed that he ever said he did not know that [redacted] and Rocky Williams were there. [redacted] indicated [redacted] and Rocky Williams were always there.

[redacted] initially stated he believed the house was not designed well because the ice slid off the roof and cracked the sheetrock in the garage. [redacted] does not, in general, think of houses as being "well built". [redacted] believes "tightly built" indicates the house is tight on ventilation, easy to heat which is different than being well built. [redacted] was surprised to hear that he described the house that Rocky built as "like a fine cabinet," but agrees he could have, although that was likely before the problems showed up, like the sheetrock cracking in the garage.

[redacted] identified [redacted] as the individual to whom he would speak when he needed [redacted] for the Senator. [redacted] agreed he had correspondence, calls and letters with [redacted] thought he talked with [redacted] only occasionally. B. The United States Senate's Financial Disclosure Forms

8. Recognizing that public office is a public trust, Congress enacted the Ethics in Government Act of 1978 ("EIGA") in part to restore public confidence in its institutions. EIGA requires all members of the United States Senate to file a form by May of the following year, detailing specified financial transactions that the Member engaged in during the prior calendar year (hereinafter a "Financial Disclosure Form"). These Financial Disclosure Forms were documents required to be submitted to and filed with the Secretary of the United States Senate (hereinafter "Secretary of the Senate"), an office within the Legislative Branch, and were available to the public.

9. A primary purpose of the yearly Financial Disclosure Forms is to disclose, monitor and deter conflicts of interest, thereby maintaining public confidence in the integrity of the United States Senate and its Members. Because the yearly Financial Disclosure Forms require public disclosure of financial information by each Member of the United States Senate, such as income, assets, gifts, financial interests, and liabilities, the Forms provide the public at large, including the voters of a particular state, with the information necessary to allow the public to evaluate and consider official conduct by a Member of the United States Senate in light of that Member's private finances.

10. The Secretary of the Senate was an office or agency of the United States Congress that was responsible for receiving the Financial Disclosure Forms filed by, or on behalf of, each United States Senator, and for providing accurate information to the public about the financial disclosures filed by, or on behalf of, each United States Senator. The Financial Disclosure Forms were subject to further review and possible investigation by the United States Senate Select Committee on Ethics.

11. For calendar years 1999 through 2006, the Financial Disclosure Forms contained a section that read as follows: "Any individual who knowingly and willfully falsifies . . . this report may be subject to civil and criminal sanctions. (See 5 U.S.C. app. 6, 104, and 18 U.S.C. 1001.)" This section was located next to the signature block on the first page of each Financial Disclosure Form.

12. For calendar years 1999 through 2006, the Financial Disclosure Forms required the filer to disclose certain particular information concerning income, assets, liabilities, and outside positions either held or obtained by himself, his spouse, and any dependent children during that calendar year.

13. With respect to liabilities, the Financial Disclosure Forms required the filer to disclose the amount of liabilities in excess of $10,000 that were owed at any point in time during that calendar year by the filer, the filer's spouse, or any dependent child, as well as the identity of the individual or entity to whom each debt was owed.

14. With respect to gifts, the Financial Disclosure Forms also required the filer to disclose gifts received by himself, his spouse, and any dependent children during that calendar year. Each Form required the disclosure of gifts from a single source if the aggregate value of the items received in that year was greater than a particular dollar value. For calendar years 1999 through 2002, that dollar value was $260; for calendar year 2003, it was $285; for calendar years 2004 through 2006, it was $305.

II. STEVENS' Scheme To Conceal His Receipt of Things of Value From ALLEN and VECO.

15. Beginning in or about May 1999, and continuing to in or about August, 2007, in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, in a matter within the jurisdiction of the legislative branch of the United States Government and subject to the legislative function exception, STEVENS, while a sitting United States Senator, knowingly and willfully engaged in a scheme to conceal a material fact, that is, his continuing receipt of hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of things of value from a private corporation and its chief executive officer by, among other things, failing to report them, as was required, on STEVENS' required yearly Financial Disclosure Forms. These things of value provided by ALLEN and VECO to STEVENS included, among other things: home improvements to the Girdwood Residence, such as the creation of a new first floor, a new garage, a new first- and second-story wraparound deck, new plumbing, new electrical wiring, and other such additions and improvements; automobile exchanges in which STEVENS received new vehicles worth far more than the used vehicles STEVENS provided in exchange; other household goods, such as furniture, a new, permanently-attached professional Viking gas grill, and a new multi-drawer, stationary tool storage cabinet with new tools. The aggregate value of these things of value that STEVENS accepted was greater than $250,000.

16. It was a further part of the scheme that STEVENS took multiple steps to conceal his continued receipt of things of value from ALLEN and VECO. During the nearly seven-year period in which STEVENS received multiple things of value from ALLEN and VECO, STEVENS filed and caused to be filed false annual Financial Disclosure Forms for the years 1999 to 2006 that did not report STEVENS' receipt of any thing of value from ALLEN and VECO, either as gifts or as liabilities, as required. STEVENS also made and caused to be made multiple false representations to his friends, his staff, and the media concerning the improvements at the Girdwood Residence and STEVENS' receipt of things of value from ALLEN and VECO.

17. It was a part of the scheme that STEVENS, while during that same time period that he was concealing his continuing receipt of things of value from ALLEN and VECO from 1999 to 2006, received and accepted solicitations for multiple official actions from ALLEN and other VECO employees, and knowing that STEVENS could and did use his official position and his office on behalf of VECO during that same time period. These solicitations for official action, some of which were made directly to STEVENS, included the following topics: (a) funding requests and other assistance with certain international VECO projects and partnerships, including those in Pakistan and Russia; (b) requests for multiple federal grants and contracts to benefit VECO, its subsidiaries, and its business partners, including grants from the National Science Foundation to a VECO subsidiary; and (c) assistance on both federal and state issues in connection with the effort to construct a natural gas pipeline from Alaska's North Slope Region.

A. Things of Value from ALLEN and VECO to Benefit STEVENS

1999: A New 1999 Land Rover Discovery

18. In or about the spring of 1999, STEVENS and ALLEN discussed the fact that STEVENS wished to obtain a new car for his dependent child. Thereafter, in or about June, 1999, ALLEN transferred a new 1999 Land Rover Discovery, which ALLEN had purchased new for approximately $44,000, to STEVENS in exchange for STEVENS' 1964½ Ford Mustang and $5,000. At the time ALLEN transferred the 1999 Land Rover Discovery to STEVENS, the 1964½ Ford Mustang was worth less than $20,000.

2000-2006: Improvements to the Girdwood Residence by VECO

19. Beginning in the spring and summer of 2000, STEVENS and ALLEN discussed whether VECO could renovate the Girdwood Residence. After that conversation, spanning over the next approximately six years, STEVENS accepted from ALLEN and VECO more than $250,000 in free labor, materials, and other things of value in connection with the substantial renovation, improvement, repair and maintenance to the Girdwood Residence. STEVENS never paid ALLEN or VECO anything for these expenses, and STEVENS never listed his receipt of these things of value on any of his yearly Financial Disclosure Forms, all the while sitting as one of Alaska's United States Senators.

2000-2001: Improvements to the Girdwood Residence

20. In or about the spring and summer of 2000, after STEVENS and ALLEN discussed whether VECO could perform renovations on the Girdwood Residence, STEVENS and ALLEN met with an architect employed by VECO to discuss the renovations of the Girdwood Residence. Over the remainder of 2000, STEVENS expanded the scope of the project so that the project eventually became a full basement, first-floor addition with multiple bedrooms and a bathroom. The VECO architect prepared drawings for the proposed renovations and discussed the drawings with STEVENS.

21. In or about the fall of 2000, VECO and STEVENS hired Construction Firm A to perform a portion of the renovations at the Girdwood Residence. Construction Firm A's invoices were sent to STEVENS, which STEVENS paid by personal check. Construction Firm A's invoices, however, did not include the labor costs of VECO employees and contractors and did not include the costs of materials provided by VECO.

22. Because VECO and STEVENS hired Construction Firm A to focus on the carpentry and finish work of the renovations at the Girdwood Residence, VECO employees and contractors performed a significant portion of the remaining renovations. ALLEN and others at VECO directed VECO employees and contractors to perform the renovation tasks on the Girdwood Residence.

23. From in or about June 2000 to in or about April 2001, multiple VECO employees and contractors participated in renovating the Girdwood Residence. That renovation work included jacking up and resting the house on stilts, building a new first-floor with two bedrooms and a bathroom, renovating the existing residence, and adding a garage with workshop and a second-story wraparound deck. Among other tasks, VECO employees and contractors also installed electrical, plumbing, framing, heating, and flooring materials in the Girdwood Residence. VECO employees and contractors also purchased and installed certain fixtures and appliances.

24. From in or about the summer of 2000 to on or about December 31, 2001, VECO incurred over $200,000 in materials, labor and other costs in connection with the work that VECO employees and contractors performed at the Girdwood Residence. These costs included, but were not limited to, approximately $81,775.18 in materials, labor, architectural design and services, and other costs from approximately June 2000 to December 31, 2000, and approximately $110,153.64 in the first three and a half months of 2001 alone.

25. STEVENS knew that VECO employees and contractors performed significant portions of the Girdwood Residence renovations during calendar years 2000 and 2001. Nonetheless, STEVENS never paid or reimbursed VECO at any time for the cost of materials provided and labor performed by VECO and its employees and contractors on the Girdwood Residence renovations during 2000 or 2001.

2002: Improvements to the Girdwood Residence by VECO

26. From in or about January 2002 to in or about December 2002, multiple VECO employees and contractors continued to be involved in renovating, repairing, and improving the Girdwood Residence. During calendar year 2002, the work performed by VECO employees and contractors at the Girdwood Residence included, among other projects, the installation of a first-floor wraparound deck, a plastic roof between the first- and second-floors, a heat tape system on the roof of the Girdwood Residence, and the installation and partial removal of rope lighting on multiple portions of the property. These projects cost VECO approximately $55,000.

27. STEVENS knew that VECO employees and contractors performed significant renovation tasks on the Girdwood Residence during calendar year 2002. Nonetheless, STEVENS never paid or reimbursed VECO at any time for the cost of materials provided and labor performed by VECO and its employees on the Girdwood Residence during calendar year 2002.

2004-2005: Improvements to the Girdwood Residence by VECO

28. From in or about July 2004 to on or about December 31, 2004, STEVENS contacted ALLEN and VECO employees multiple times to request that VECO employees or contractors perform additional tasks at the Girdwood Residence. These tasks included, without limitation, the installation of multiple kitchen appliances and maintenance on the heat tape system on the roof of the Girdwood Residence.

29. From in or about January 2005 to in or about December 2005, STEVENS contacted ALLEN and VECO employees multiple times to request that VECO employees or contractors perform additional tasks at the Girdwood Residence. These tasks included, without limitation, roof and gutter repairs, electrical wiring, and the replacement of sensors.

30. STEVENS knew that VECO employees and contractors performed tasks at his request on the Girdwood Residence during calendar years 2004 and 2005. STEVENS, however, never paid or reimbursed VECO at any time for the cost of materials provided and labor performed by VECO and its employees at the Girdwood Residence during those times.

31. The repairs performed by VECO employees or contractors at the Girdwood

FBI-Stevens-4631

Residence in each of the calendar years 2004 and 2005 had a combined value of greater than $305 for each of those two years.

2006: Improvements to the Girdwood Residence by VECO

32. In or about January, 2006, STEVENS contacted ALLEN to request that VECO employees or contractors inspect and repair the boiler and heating system at the Girdwood Residence.

33. On or about January 10, 2006, ALLEN contacted a VECO employee by telephone and directed the VECO employee to travel to the Girdwood Residence to inspect and repair the boiler and heating system. When the VECO employee arrived at the Girdwood Residence, both STEVENS and ALLEN were there. Over the course of the next several days, the VECO employee and an outside contractor performed the repairs to the boiler and heating system that had been originally identified by STEVENS.

34. On or about January 25, 2006, ALLEN contacted the outside contractor referenced in Paragraph 33 and directed him to split the repair costs into two invoices – one for materials and one for labor – and to send the invoice for materials to STEVENS and the invoice for labor to ALLEN. Each of those invoices was for an amount greater than $1,000. The invoice for materials in fact was addressed to STEVENS in Washington, D.C., and was paid by STEVENS, and the invoice for labor was addressed to ALLEN in Alaska and paid by ALLEN.

35. On or about February 16, 2006, after becoming aware that ALLEN had paid for the labor costs for the boiler and heating system repairs at the Girdwood Residence, STEVENS sent ALLEN an e-mail concerning the boiler and heating system repairs. Although STEVENS now knew that ALLEN paid for the labor costs, and now knew the name and contact information of the outside contractor who had performed the work, STEVENS asked ALLEN to have the outside contractor send STEVENS an invoice for the labor costs.

36. Despite this knowledge, STEVENS never reimbursed ALLEN for the labor costs paid by ALLEN. STEVENS also never paid the outside contractor directly for the labor costs paid by ALLEN.

B. STEVENS' Involvement in the Renovations

37. During the approximate six-year period in which VECO employees and contractors were performing improvements and repairs to the Girdwood Residence, STEVENS had repeated involvement and contact with the work being done by VECO. STEVENS' involvement included, but was not limited to, the following:

a. STEVENS had multiple conversations and correspondence with ALLEN in which the two discussed, among other things, the work of VECO employees and contractors on the renovation project;

b. STEVENS interacted, in person and by telephone, with VECO employees and contractors in both the planning and construction phases of the improvements to the Girdwood Residence;

c. STEVENS was present at the Girdwood Residence when VECO employees and contractors performed improvements and repairs to the Girdwood Residence;

d. STEVENS reviewed and commented upon plans drawn by a VECO employee, surveyed the work done by VECO employees and contractors during the renovations, and at various times suggested additional improvements be done by VECO employees and contractors;

e. STEVENS also thanked ALLEN multiple times for the work that VECO and its employees and contractors had performed, and were performing, in connection with the renovation of the Girdwood Residence.

38. For instance, on or about September 24, 2000, STEVENS sent an electronic mail

("e-mail") to ALLEN that stated: "we've never worked with a man so easy to get along with as [name of a VECO employee]. Plus, everyone who's seen the place wants to know who has done the things he's done. . . . You and [PERSON A] have been the spark plugs and we are really pleased with all you have done. hope to see you and the chalet soon. best teds."

39. From in or about June 2000 to on or about August 30, 2006, PERSON A monitored the work being done at the Girdwood Residence, and provided STEVENS with periodic updates by e-mail on the renovations. In some of these communications, PERSON A specifically noted that certain renovations were being done by VECO employees and contractors at the direction of ALLEN.

40. For example, on or about October 7, 2002, PERSON A sent STEVENS an email captioned "The House" in which PERSON A reported, among other things, that he "went by the house [Girdwood Residence] on Friday and all is well, the downstairs deck w/cover is in place, has been painted and looks great . . . We have a system for the de-icer that can't be mistaken . . . Spoke to Bill about your concerns and all is well."

41. From in or about June 2000 to in or about February 2006, STEVENS was present at the Girdwood Residence on multiple different occasions in which VECO employees and contractors were performing renovation, repair or maintenance tasks at the Girdwood Residence. On those occasions, STEVENS interacted with the VECO employees and contractors who performed work at the Girdwood Residence.

42. STEVENS also thanked VECO employees and contractors who performed tasks at the Girdwood Residence. STEVENS did this through correspondence and conversations with ALLEN, with PERSON A, and with multiple VECO employees and contractors.

FBI - Stevens 4634

43. As an example, on or about November 11, 2004, STEVENS sent a handwritten letter addressed to a VECO electrician at VECO's corporate address in which STEVENS stated, "Thanks for fixing the heat tape. It seems to be working ok now."

44. In or about the summer of 2001, ALLEN gave STEVENS other items of value, including new and used furniture, a new stationary tool storage cabinet with new tools, and a new professional Viking gas grill. Each of these things of value was worth greater than $260.00.

45. For calendar years 1999 through 2006, STEVENS filed and caused to be filed with the Secretary of the Senate a yearly Financial Disclosure Form. For calendar years 1999 through 2006, each year's Financial Disclosure Form required STEVENS to report the things of value he received that have been described at Paragraphs 18 through 44 herein.

46. STEVENS knew the requirements of the Financial Disclosure Forms, and knowingly and intentionally sought to conceal and cover up his receipt of things of value by filing Financial Disclosure Forms that contained false statements and omissions concerning STEVENS' receipt of these things of value.

All in violation of Title 18, United States Code, Section 1001(a)(1) and (c)(1) and (2).

RE: U.S. Senator Ted Stevens

Dear Chief Morris:

The Anchorage Division of the Federal Bureau of Investigation is conducting an investigation into gifts received by United States Senator Ted Stevens that were not reported on his Senate financial disclosure forms for the time period of 1999 and continuing through 2006, all in violation of 18 U.S.C. §1001. It is our understanding that Senator Stevens had a protection detail assigned to him during at least part of that time period.

We are requesting the identity of the members of his protection team during the above time period and dates of their service. We would like an opportunity to interview members of the protection team regarding their potential knowledge of the renovations to Sen. Stevens' Girdwood residence and gifts the Senator may have received.

Should you have any questions please do not hesitate to contact me at the above number or you may contact our case agent, Special Agent [redacted] at [redacted] [redacted] Thank you for your cooperation in this matter.

Sincerely,

KF 8/7

FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

Date of transcription 08/19/2008

[redacted] was interviewed at the offices of the Public Integrity Section of the Department of Justice. Also present during the interview were [redacted] Assistant United States Attorneys [redacted] and trial attorneys NICHOLAS MARSH and [redacted] provided the following information:

[redacted] was employed by VECO CORPORATION. [redacted] began his employment with UNITED STATES SENATOR TED STEVENS in [redacted] In the Spring of [redacted] had his first encounter with [redacted] in regard to a project involving VECO CORPORATION on Sakhalin Island, Russia. STEVENS was preparing for a trip to Sakhalin [redacted] and [redacted]. VECO was partnered with PEAK OILFIELD and NATCHIQ CORPORATION on a project to train Russian workers. Exxon was notoriously hard to work with and Exxon was potentially interested in starting projects in Sakhalin that VECO wanted to see occur. [redacted] wanted to convince the oil companies that Russian workers could be subcontracted to do part of the work. If VECO was successful, then it was more probable that VECO would obtain work from Exxon in Sakhalin. [redacted] from NATCHIQ and PEAK OILFIELD which was a subsidiary of the Cook Inlet Regional Corporation (CIRI). The meeting with [redacted] occurred before the September 1999 trip to Sakhalin. [redacted] was a part of the discussions to get US companies involved in the Russian work. The Wall Street Journal, the Washington Post and the New York Times wrote an article on the Senate appropriation to train Russian workers in Alaska.

The Russians identified people who could function as project managers and brought them to the University of Alaska to train them on American equipment and techniques. The companies would allow the Russians to learn the skills while working on projects. The Alaska companies wanted money to cover the expenses related to training the Russians. VECO believed that if they could satisfy American investors then Exxon and other oil companies would be more willing to invest in Russian projects. There were several meetings with [redacted] and [redacted] of the American Russian Program at the University of Alaska. [redacted] was also strongly encouraging the project. [redacted] recalled that [redacted] also spoke about the project. [redacted] the appropriations and defense appropriations sub committee, along with [redacted] Sakhalin with STEVENS. [redacted] did not end up going on the trip. VECO CORPORATION arranged the travel and meetings for the trip. [redacted] doesn't know who paid for the travel, but that the flight was probably on a commercial airline. VECO was a much larger company than PEAK OILFIELD and NATCHIQ which may have explained why VECO made all of the arrangements.

[redacted] was not aware of the free trade zone for Kenai or anything regarding a battle with NATCHIQ. [redacted] did not recall STEVENS' response to the Sakhalin trip nor does he recall Russians visiting STEVENS after the trip. [redacted] knew that STEVENS and [redacted] were "buddies" for over 20 years; therefore, he was not surprised that he was not included in most of their conversations. STEVENS attended the Paris Air Show on a yearly basis which may have been a result of his work on the defense appropriations sub committee which STEVENS chaired. STEVENS also vacationed in Mexico and visited US troops. [redacted] for STEVENS during the course of [redacted] was not in a position to judge whether STEVENS' trip to Sakhalin was out of the ordinary. [redacted] basically never traveled.

b7C

[redacted] was shown a letter dated September 29, 1999 to STEVENS from VECO asking about the status of funding. [redacted] doesn't recall the Sakhalin Equipment Supply study; however, he knew there was some discussion regarding equipment in Sakhalin. One question that was asked would have been regarding the sustain ability of the project and whether there was a private source of money. There were typically briefing books prepared that may have been archived by the office, although there was no formal filing method. STEVENS' office used the congressional archive service to store records. Usually, files were inherited from a predecessor. A study like the one mentioned above could have been generated by private industry or from public entities. In October 1999, an appropriation related to the Sakhalin project was approved. [redacted] spoke with [redacted] at fund raising events but in no other setting. [redacted] work in STEVENS' office. In [redacted]

[redacted] was shown a letter dated [redacted] that was addressed to him from [redacted] thought the letter was leading up to the appropriation.

[redacted] was shown an email dated [redacted] from [redacted] The email contained a body of a memo from [redacted] to STEVENS. [redacted] said the wording of the memo was not his and that is was probably written by [redacted] They routinely had meetings and updated STEVENS on the matter. [redacted] was not sure who emailed the memo to [redacted] It was not a regular occurrence to forward such a memo to a constituent. [redacted] did not think that VECO, PEAK OILFIELD or NATCHIQ would directly benefit from the appropriation in the short term, but that they could ultimately benefit if the oil industry did invest in Russia. Because there were three companies involved, the appropriation was more likely to be approved since it was not to the benefit of a single company. This earmark did not go to the entities requesting the money but went to the University of Alaska to be administered.

[redacted] was shown an email date February 11, 2000 from VECO to STEVENS containing information about a waterflood project. [redacted] doesn't recall if the waterflood project went through. The email lays out three options for the RFP. [redacted] suspects that [redacted] mentioned in the email is an Exxon employee.

[redacted] was shown a letter dated January 13, 2005 from [redacted] from the Alaska Export Assistance Center, US Department of Commerce to Alaska State Department of Commerce, Community and Economic Development which discussed USAID grants for training Russian workers in welding. [redacted] was not familiar with the USAID grants.

[redacted] recalled an earmark for the National Science Foundation (NSF) [redacted] was shown a letter dated April 23, 1999 to STEVENS from [redacted] regarding the NSF's Relocatable Atmospheric Observatory project and VECO's involvement. The $40 million figure mentioned in the letter was familiar to [redacted] however, [redacted] did not recall working on this issue. [redacted] believed that either [redacted] STEVENS was working on this prior to [redacted] employment and part of this was to get an independent third party review to help the efforts to open ANWR. [redacted] was not familiar with SRI International or VECO Polar Research.

[redacted] was shown an email dated [redacted] from [redacted] regarding the Alaska BAT Program. [redacted] did not recall this email and thought that he might have given this matter to [redacted] to handle. [redacted] This topic area was not something that [redacted] typically handled. [redacted] was confident that [redacted] knew [redacted] because next to STEVENS, [redacted] b6 b7C

AHTNA was one of three Alaskan native corporations with whom STEVENS worked closely. Native corporations are considered 8A corporations and are therefore entitled to sole source contracts with unlimited dollar amounts. [redacted] AHTNA, was the only individual that [redacted] knew at AHTNA. [redacted] was shown an email dated [redacted] from [redacted] that had a letter from AHTNA attached which recommended [redacted] doesn't think that [redacted] got the position and that STEVENS nominated [redacted] doesn't recall [redacted] worked for the Vice President.

[redacted] was shown a document that was entitled "Moad Atlas Mine Tailing Project Meeting Sole-Source Effort." At the bottom of the document is a handwritten note that says 1 [redacted] recalled that there was a DOE clean up project and that AHTNA/VECO were putting together a deal to get the contract. [redacted] doesn't recall if STEVENS provided any assistance on this project. [redacted] on this project.

[redacted] was shown a handwritten note which said at the top of the page "Thurs + Fri. (4/27 +4/28). On the note was the word STEVENS underlined, under which was written '[redacted]." According to [redacted] was Congressman DON YOUNG's [redacted] for many years who later left to begin a lobbying career. [redacted] said that when you hire [redacted] in YOUNG's office because [redacted] had relationships with STEVENS. [redacted] described [redacted] as bringing in shady work. [redacted] described a deal that [redacted] had brokered for TDX Corporation involving a dry dock that somehow negatively impacted Hawaii. STEVENS and the HAWAIIAN senator were close friends and STEVENS got angry at [redacted] said that CONOCO PHILLIPS was pushing hard for the gas line, EXXON was the least involved and BRITISH PETROLEUM was in the middle. VECO'S mantra was "Got to get the gas line going." VECO was worried if the gas line didn't move forward that their contracts would reduce.

[redacted] was shown an email dated September 10, 2003 from [redacted] about a white paper on the gas line. Between 2002-2004, there was heavy lobbying on the gas line. ~~FRANK MURKOWSKI~~ ran for governor in 2002 and pushed the gas line project. VECO was working on projects all over the world. [redacted] didn't recall a project with ASIA PETROLEUM. [redacted] was aware of an issue VECO was having with a pipeline project in Asia, but [redacted] was not involved in fixing the problem. [redacted] was aware that VECO wanted STEVENS to apply pressure on the ambassador or some other appropriate person to facilitate the payment to VECO that was being stymied. [redacted] met with STEVENS on this issue.

[redacted] was shown handwritten notes dated August 20, 1999 that said a staffer needed to be assigned to the IMF and World Bank issues. [redacted] had contact with the World Bank on behalf of STEVENS but he doesn't recall the name of who he contacted. In a letter to STEVENS dated August 23, 1999 referencing the Asia Petroleum project, [redacted] requested STEVENS assistance in getting the World Bank to persuade the Government of Pakistan to sign an implementation agreement. [redacted] believes he would have given this letter to [redacted] and that [redacted] would have met with VECO to address this issue. [redacted] had a good working relationship. STEVENS may have called the ambassador or prime minister to address this issue.

[redacted] was shown a fax from [redacted] dated September 22, 1999 with a letter attached regarding the Pakistani Pipeline. [redacted] thinks the letter may have come from [redacted] but that the letter doesn't have the standard tag line. [redacted] doesn't know if the World Bank took action based on the letter. It was not unusual for STEVENS to pick up the phone and make a call to get someone to take action. [redacted] had no contact with [redacted] on this issue.

[redacted] has been to STEVENS' residence in Girdwood both [redacted] meeting in the residence after the renovations. STEVENS told [redacted] that he wanted to renovate and expand his Girdwood residence. STEVENS said that he was taking out a mortgage because the interest rates were good. [redacted] interpreted this to mean that STEVENS was paying for the renovations with the loan proceeds. STEVENS also said that VECO was working up the plans, involved with the lifting of the house and performing some of the work on it. [redacted] knew that VECO also did work on [redacted] residence and that [redacted] was upset about the costs. [redacted] knew that VECO was not generally in the business of home renovations. The vehicle in question, an older Ford Mustang convertible, was covered with a blue car cover. [redacted] advised it was a 1965 model. The paint scheme was solid yellow. An Alaskan license plate "DJY 108" with a "Sep 99" registration sticker was affixed to the rear of the car. The interior was black and the seats were covered in a material similar to leather, which was in excellent condition. The odometer indicated "55,768" and six tenths. The radio antenna on the front passenger side fender had become detached from its mount and was lying flat on top of the fender. The Vehicle Warranty number on the driver's side door was "5FO8A346323", which appeared to match the number in the engine compartment, although those markings were quite faded and difficult to read.

The keys to the vehicle were not available, therefore the engine was not started nor was the trunk accessed. [redacted] took numerous photographs of the vehicle and used a magnet to check for repair locations on the body of the car. [redacted] noted that the passenger door latch was sticking, making it difficult to close.

[redacted] made the comments that "this car doesn't look like it has been used much" and also that the car was a "pretty clean unit".

[redacted] and replaced the car cover. The garage door was closed and the opener was returned [redacted] advised that STEVENS had three vehicles that he was aware of including a Minivan, Ford Explorer sports utility vehicle (SUV), and Mustang. The Minivan was primarily used as STEVENS' daily transport vehicle and the Ford SUV was [redacted] The Mustang was rarely used and kept in a garage located at the Senate building. Parking slots in the Senate garage were based on seniority, so STEVENS had several slots assigned to his office. STEVENS parked his Mustang in this garage and still had a parking slot for his Minivan. STEVENS only occasionally took the Mustang out for a drive during the summer months. The Mustang was canary yellow and often referred to as the "Banana Shake." It was supposed to be given to STEVENS' [redacted] advised he took the vehicle in for a number of repairs, all of which STEVENS paid for. [redacted] advised that STEVENS was aware that [redacted] took care of STEVENS' [redacted] but he did not receive his instructions directly from STEVENS. [redacted] advised that part of his job was taking care of certain tasks, so that STEVENS was free to do his legislative work. STEVENS had a demanding schedule and worked very long hours. [redacted] advised that he knew of at least six congressional staffers for other legislators who performed duties similar to those he performed for STEVENS. This was not an unusual practice given the demanding schedules of the legislators.

[redacted] advised that STEVENS' congressional staff received yearly bonuses. [redacted] was unaware of the parameters used to determine the amount of the bonuses, but all staff members received them. Bonuses were paid out through increases in salary over the last four pay periods of the year, and were subject to taxes as well. [redacted] recalled that the [redacted] would decide on the individual bonus amounts for each staff member, and then STEVENS would have final approval over the bonuses provided. [redacted] stated that the main goals and objectives of programs provided by the UAA Russian Center were designed to promote and sustain democracy in Russia by helping to create a sustainable middle class. This was to be accomplished through the education of many different individuals involved in Russian government and private industry.

b7C

[redacted] is familiar with a federal grant in the amount of 2.1 million to 2.2 million dollars which was received by UAA from the Department of Labor (DOL) in 2000-2001. This grant was ostensibly obtained for the purpose of creating an educational program whereby Russian citizens involved in the Russian oil industry would be educated in the manner and methods utilized by Western oil services companies. [redacted] stated that this grant was an earmark from SENATOR STEVENS and occurred approximately one year after [redacted] SENATOR THEODORE STEVENS, [redacted] and other individuals in the Alaska oil industry traveled to Russia to visit with members of the Russian oil industry.

At the time this grant was received, UAA employee [redacted] was assigned as the [redacted] Upon assuming authority [redacted] determined that [redacted] did not maintain many records and conducted a lot of his business via the telephone. Thus, when she [redacted] over this grant it was difficult to determine what had been done. [redacted] stated that she had been reluctant from the start to [redacted] and felt that the program was a waste of taxpayer money that was created to benefit the oil field services company VECO.

[redacted] stated that in her experience it was very unusual for the DOL to be involved in a project that was not focused on the domestic work force. [redacted] stated that in discussions and meetings with DOL representatives it was clear that they had not dealt with a program like this and did not seem to know what to do.

[redacted] stated that based upon numerous conversations and meetings with [redacted] it was clear to her that VECO was involved in the "Program Design Phase" and the "Program Implementation Phase" of this program as well as maintaining a continuing involvement in the process. [redacted] stated that although [redacted] had said this program could benefit many oil services companies the only one ever mentioned by [redacted] was VECO. [redacted] made it clear that at no time while [redacted] did she ever speak with any employees of VECO and that all the conversations were had between [redacted] and employees of VECO. [redacted] could not provide the names of any individuals that [redacted] may have spoken with.

[redacted] stated that during the duration of the project eight Russian citizens went through this program and obtained Masters Degrees. [redacted] believes that several had later returned to Russia and several had gotten married and stayed in the United States. [redacted] stated that these individuals did not become involved in the oil industry, but rather, became Academics. [redacted] stated that along with paying for the education, all travel and lodgings expenses were paid through the grant. Additionally, the salaries of employees working on this project were paid through the grant. This included, among others, [redacted] salaries. [redacted] also stated that UAA obtained visas for the individuals entered in the program.

[redacted] stated that by the UAA Russian Center handling this program, VECO or any other private firm that might be involved in the process could save a tremendous amount of money, in several different ways.

The UAA Russian Center employees were all bilingual thus it would not be necessary for a private company to obtain and pay linguists. A private company would have to pay for travel and lodging expenses and the cost of instruction, whereas the instruction was provided through UAA at no expense to a private company, and all travel and lodging was paid through the grant. Additionally, it would have been extremely difficult for a private firm to obtain the necessary visas, which was made far less difficult because a University was involved.

It is [redacted] understanding, that at the time this program was in effect that the Russian Government required that seventy percent of the employees working for a private company in the Russian oil industry had to be from Russia. Thus, [redacted] believes that it would be very beneficial for a private company to have it's upper echelon employees trained in the manner and methods of Western oil services companies and to have that cost born by a entity other than the company itself. b6 b7C

[redacted] stated that [redacted] at the UAA Russian Center and that [redacted] had gotten rid of all the employees when the "age of earmarks" ended a couple of years ago. [redacted] stated that [redacted] relied heavily on SENATOR STEVENS to obtain funding for the Russian Center.

[redacted] stated that she had recently found out that [redacted] in SENATOR STEVENS' trial and she was hoping that he would be completely forthcoming about this grant. [redacted] believes that [redacted] has been able to justify in his mind that there was nothing wrong with this program since none of the eight participants of the program went to work for VECO. [redacted] believes that these individuals did not go to work for VECO because in 2006 VECO was laying people off. [redacted]

At the conclusion of this interview, [redacted] was provided with a trial subpoena issued by the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, a copy of which is attached hereto.

UNITED STATES' RESPONSE TO DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR DISCOVERY AND FOR AN EVIDENTIARY HEARING

The United States hereby submits this Response to defendant's Motion for Discovery and for an Evidentiary Hearing Concerning David Anderson. Anderson's allegations are factually incorrect, fraudulently presented, and designed to help exculpate from criminal prosecution an individual wholly unrelated to the Stevens trial. Because Anderson's contentions are patently false and are contradicted by logic, circumstance, and the attached affidavits submitted herewith, this Court should deny defendant's Motion for Discovery and for an Evidentiary Hearing.

I. Family Member A's Involvement in the March Affidavit and the November 15 Letter

On March 25, 2008, David Anderson signed an affidavit in which he claimed that in August 2006, the United States provided immunity to himself and thirteen of his relatives (the "March Affidavit"), including immunity to Family Member A, a person Anderson considers to be a member of his family. The March Affidavit was, in fact, not prepared by Anderson. Instead, Family Member A substantially prepared the March Affidavit, approximately two weeks after Family Member A learned that he was being investigated by the FBI for public corruption offenses. Family Member A further prepared the March Affidavit approximately ten days after Anderson asked the FBI – twice – to give immunity to Family Member A. Although signed in late March 2008, the affidavit did not get transmitted to the government until August 13, 2008 – the day after a public development occurred in the government's investigation of Family Member A.[1]

As set forth herein, there is substantial evidence that the letter purportedly sent by Anderson on November 15, 2008 (the "November Letter") was similarly orchestrated by Family Member A for his benefit. Anderson's public repudiation of the March Affidavit at the Stevens trial on October 9, 2008, seriously damaged Family Member A's ability to rely on the false affidavit for a claim of personal immunity. On November 12, 2008, Family Member A's co-conspirator was sentenced as a result of his guilty plea to a public corruption charge. Two days later – on November 14, 2008 – Family Member A met with the government to discuss his status. The meeting lasted less than five minutes. No progress was made toward a resolution of Family Member A's criminal exposure, and significantly Family Member A was notified by the government of a change in his status and his criminal exposure. The very next day, Anderson's letter was signed and transmitted to the FBI. Moreover, as described below, the FBI has obtained video surveillance that confirms that Family Member A, not Anderson, physically transmitted the November 15 letter to the FBI, and that Family Member A's daughter, not Anderson, physically transmitted the November 16 letter to defense counsel.

[1] A redacted copy of the March Affidavit is attached hereto as Exhibit 1, and was provided to defense counsel prior to Anderson's trial testimony in the Stevens case. The government further notes that although Anderson claimed his meeting with the government occurred in or around August 2006, it actually occurred on September 3, 2006.

A. David Anderson Becomes a FBI Cooperating Witness.

Anderson has been a cooperating witness for the FBI since the fall of 2006. At that time, two FBI agents approached Anderson and asked him to provide information on a variety of topics relating to an ongoing public corruption investigation. At no time during that meeting did the FBI promise Anderson immunity, much less promise immunity to thirteen specified members of Anderson's family. See Ex. 2 (Affidavit from Eric Gonzales).

Between September 2006 and early March 2008, Anderson had periodic contact with the government, including discussions and debriefing sessions with FBI agents. In December 2006, Anderson further testified before a grand jury in the District of Alaska. In none of those multiple conversations, discussions, or meetings with government personnel between September 2006 and early March 2008 did Anderson ever express an understanding that he had been promised immunity by the FBI, much less promised immunity by the FBI on behalf of thirteen specified family members for a ten-year period.

B. March 2008: Family Member A Learns He Is Under Investigation.

In 2004, during a state investigation unrelated to (and, in fact, preceding) the Stevens investigation, the government obtained substantial evidence that Family Member A was involved in a conspiracy to violate federal law. One of the other co-conspirators in that scheme will be described herein as Conspirator C.

On March 13, 2008, the FBI contacted Conspirator C and told him that he was being investigated by the FBI for, among other things, Conspirator C's relationship with Family Member A. On March 14, 2008, the day after the FBI's approach to Conspirator C, Anderson contacted the FBI on behalf of Family Member A. According to Anderson, Family Member A told Anderson that he (Family Member A) was also being investigated by the FBI relating to Conspirator C. Anderson told the FBI that he was concerned about Family Member A and his criminal exposure. At no point in that conversation did Anderson express a belief that, in September 2006, the FBI had agreed to immunize Family Member A for all criminal acts in a ten-year period. A redacted copy of the FBI memorandum reflecting this conversation is attached hereto as Exhibit 3, and the government provided this FBI 302 to defense counsel prior to Anderson's trial testimony in the Stevens case.

On March 16, 2008 – two days later – Anderson again contacted the FBI to reiterate Anderson's concern about Family Member A. Anderson indicated he had provided Family Member A with contact information for the FBI, should Family Member A be interested in meeting with the FBI. Again, at no point in this March 16, 2008, conversation did Anderson express his belief that the FBI had already immunized Family Member A, through Anderson, back in September 2006.[2]

On March 17, 2008, Anderson again contacted the FBI and indicated he and Family Member A wanted to meet with the FBI at Family Member A's residence. The purpose of this meeting was purportedly to discuss Family Member A's criminal exposure. The meeting, however, did not occur. Again, at no point in the March 17, 2008, contact with the FBI did Anderson state that he had a belief that Family Member A had in fact been granted immunity by the FBI in September 2006.[3]

On March 18, 2008, Anderson again contacted the FBI about Family Member A. In this conversation, Anderson explicitly told the FBI that Family Member A wanted immunity from the government. Anderson further explained that, in his view, although Family Member A may have screwed up a few times, he was a good man and now was having financial problems. Had Anderson truly believed that the FBI had promised to immunize Family Member A back in 2006, Anderson would have had no reason to request immunity for Family Member A on March 18, 2008.[4]

Later on March 18, 2008, Anderson contacted the FBI again, this time along with the daughter of Family Member A. Together, they told the FBI that Family Member A had done nothing wrong, and that after further consideration, a meeting would be a waste of time. Anderson and Family Member A's daughter then told the FBI that the only way Family Member A would cooperate would be if he were granted immunity.[5] Again, had anyone – including Anderson – actually believed that Family Member A had been granted immunity by two FBI agents in September 2006, there would have been no reason whatsoever for Anderson to repeatedly request immunity for Family Member A in March 2008.

[3] A redacted copy of the FBI memorandum reflecting this conversation is also attached hereto as Exhibit 3, and the government provided this FBI 302 to defense counsel prior to Anderson's trial testimony in the Stevens case.

[4] A redacted copy of the FBI memorandum reflecting this conversation is also attached hereto as Exhibit 3, and the government provided this FBI 302 to defense counsel prior to Anderson's trial testimony in the Stevens case.

[5] A redacted copy of the FBI memorandum reflecting this conversation is also attached hereto as Exhibit 3, and the government provided this FBI 302 to defense counsel prior to Anderson's trial testimony in the Stevens case.

Despite these multiple requests by Anderson, the government never responded to his March 2008 requests to provide immunity to Family Member A. The government further refused to condition any meeting with Family Member A upon a contingent grant of immunity.

On March 25, 2008 – two weeks after Family Member A learned he was under investigation, and one week after the March 18, 2008, requests by Anderson for the FBI to provide immunity to Family Member A, Anderson signed an affidavit claiming that in August 2006 the FBI and the Treasury Department provided immunity – for all conduct within a ten-year period – to Anderson and thirteen of his family members. One of these family members was Family Member A. Another person was Family Member A's daughter, who at all times relevant hereto has been Anderson's significant other. Although Anderson signed this affidavit on March 25, 2008, the government did not learn of the March Affidavit until August 13, 2008.

C. August 2008: Family Member A Learns More About His Investigation.

On August 12, 2008, Conspirator C publicly entered a guilty plea in federal court. Part of Conspirator C's factual basis related to Conspirator C's prior activities and relationship with Family Member A. On August 13, 2008, the day after Conspirator C's plea, the FBI was contacted by an attorney representing Family Member A. The attorney told the FBI that Anderson had signed an affidavit stating the FBI had told Anderson that the United States government had agreed to provide immunity to Anderson and thirteen members of Anderson's extended family, and that one of the individuals listed in Anderson's affidavit was Family Member A. This immunity was to cover any actions in a ten-year period. The attorney subsequently faxed a copy of the March Affidavit to the FBI. This was the first time that the government became aware of the March Affidavit.

D. August 13, 2008: Anderson Immediately Repudiated the Affidavit

The same day – August 13, 2008 – two FBI agents met with Anderson in Wasilla, Alaska to discuss the March Affidavit. In the August 13, 2008, meeting with the FBI, Anderson immediately acknowledged that he knew the March Affidavit was not accurate, and contained information in it that was untrue. Anderson told the FBI agents that there had been no agreement by the FBI to provide immunity to any individual, including himself. Anderson further stated that Family Member A had drafted much of the March Affidavit, including the list of names of the individuals who had putatively been immunized by name by the FBI in September 2006. Anderson further told the FBI that he felt pressured to sign the March Affidavit by both Family Member A and Family Member A's daughter. Of the thirteen individuals listed in the March Affidavit, only one – Family Member A – was the subject of an active federal public corruption investigation.[6]

Notably, the government produced the foregoing information concerning Anderson to defendant during the Stevens litigation. Moreover, during trial, Anderson specifically testified under oath that the March Affidavit was inaccurate, and that the government had not made promises of immunity to Anderson or to any of Anderson's relatives:

> Q. Okay. Mr. Anderson, let me ask you about something that occurred earlier this year. Did you sign an affidavit that wasn't completely accurate?
>
> A. Yes, I did.
>
> Q. Tell the jury about that.

[6] A redacted copy of the FBI memorandum reflecting this conversation is attached hereto as Exhibit 4, and the government provided this FBI 302 to defense counsel prior to Anderson's trial testimony in the Stevens case.

A. Okay. We drafted, basically I tried to keep like my loved ones protected in the best way that I can through all this. It's been a long road. I mean, it's been a long, hard road, so, you know, I tried to keep them protected as much as I can, you know, through all this, because it has been a long road.

Q. All right. Did you sign an affidavit that said that a number of people had been given immunity by the United States government from criminal prosecution?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Do you know that that was not true?

A. Yes. That was never said. It was kind of a gentlemen's agreement, you know. You know, that's what I work off of.

Q. All right.

A. A handshake, you know, so, you know, I take it as an immunity, but it was never -- that was never said.

Q. Did you draft that affidavit?

A. I didn't draft it, but I signed it.

Q. Did you know that it wasn't true when you signed it?

A. Yes.

10/9/08 Tr. (A.M.) at 80-81. Despite having the March Affidavit, Anderson's grand jury testimony, and multiple FBI interview reports relating not only to Anderson's knowledge of the Girdwood Renovations but also to Anderson's repudiation of the contents of the March Affidavit, defense counsel elected not to cross-examine Mr. Anderson on these, or any other, issues. See 10/9/08 Tr. (A.M.) at 83.

E. November 2008: Conspirator C's Sentencing and Contact by Family Member A

On November 12, 2008, approximately two weeks after the guilty verdicts in the Stevens case, Conspirator C was sentenced by a federal judge. That afternoon, the government received a telephone call from Family Member A's attorney, requesting an opportunity to meet with the government. The attorney represented to the government that Family Member A was in his office at that time, and that Family Member A wanted to come in and talk to the government. The government agreed to meet with Family Member A and his attorney, and scheduled a meeting for the afternoon of Friday, November 14, 2008, in Anchorage.

F. November 14, 2008: Anderson Contacts the Government to "Help" Family Member A; Family Member A Meets with the Government

As Family Member A's planned meeting approached, the government received a number of contacts from Anderson. At approximately 9:00 a.m. on Friday, November 14, Anderson left a voicemail for AUSA Bottini in Anchorage. In the voicemail, Anderson requested the opportunity to meet with Bottini before the meeting with Family Member A, with a view to "getting some things straight" and trying to "smooth things out" for Family Member A. Bottini did not respond, but referred the message to FBI. A transcript of the telephone message left by Anderson is attached hereto as Exhibit 5.

Also on November 14, 2008, the FBI received two voice messages from Anderson. In each, Anderson indicated he was in town to help "smooth things over" for the meeting the government was going to have that day with Family Member A. Shortly thereafter, two FBI agents contacted Anderson in response to Anderson's messages. In that conversation, Anderson stated that he wanted to show his support of Family Member A and wanted Family Member A to work things out with the government. Anderson believed it was important for Family Member A to come to the table with the government to get things ironed out. Anderson further commented that Family Member A was an integral part of the family and if anything happened to him the family would fall apart. Again, at no point during these discussions with the FBI did Anderson reference, much less attempt to resurrect, the debunked notion that Family Member A had been immunized by the FBI in September 2006. Rather, Anderson's repeated contacts with the FBI in advance of Family Member A's meeting were focused on trying to help the parties resolve Family Member A's exposure.[7]

G. Family Member A Informed of Target Status on November 14, 2008.

On November 14, 2008, the government met with Family Member A and Family Member A's attorney in Anchorage. The meeting lasted approximately five minutes, and ended abruptly when Family Member A (through his attorney) indicated that neither were willing to provide any information to the government, but were only interested in learning what the government's evidence was against Family Member A. At the very end of that meeting, the government informed Family Member A of the status, and in particular a change in the status, of his criminal liability in the federal criminal investigation. The parties did not discuss any additional meetings, and Family Member A and his attorney left the room.

H. November 15, 2008: Anderson's Letter to the FBI and Defense Counsel.

On November 15, 2008 – the day after Family Member A's failed meeting with the government, and the day after Anderson repeatedly requested an opportunity to "help" Family Member A – Anderson contacted the FBI to advise that he was sending a letter to the attorney of Senator Ted Stevens and Judge Sullivan. Anderson said he also would provide a copy to the government. Anderson would not discuss the contents of the letter but told the FBI that the contents of the letter were accurate. Anderson subsequently provided a copy of the letter, via facsimile, to the FBI.

I. Family Member A's Involvement With the November 15, 2008 Letter

The FBI received its copy of the November 15, 2008, letter by facsimile at 9:17 p.m., Alaska Standard Time, on November 15. The facsimile was determined to have been sent from a FedEx Kinko's store in the Anchorage area. On November 21, 2008, FBI personnel went to the FedEx Kinko's store believed to be associated with the facsimile number, and requested to view the security video from the evening of November 15. A FedEx Kinko's employee retrieved the video and allowed a FBI agent to review the videotape. A redacted version of the Form 302 from the FBI review is attached hereto as Exhibit 7.

A review of the videotape showed that approximately 9:12 p.m., two individuals entered the FedEx Kinko's store. The FBI agent recognized these individuals to be David Anderson and Family Member A. The agent saw that Family Member A, not Anderson, was carrying what appeared to be a sheaf of papers. The videotape then showed that Family Member A handed Anderson a piece of paper whereupon Anderson began to write on the paper. Anderson then handed the piece of paper back to Family Member A.

Around the same time, Family Member A approached the counter and handed the clerk what appeared to be some sort of a card. From an interview with that clerk, the FBI learned that the item in Family Member A's possession was likely a self-service, pre-paid card for use within the store. The clerk further stated that, although she had no specific memory of this transaction, based on her review of the videotape, it appeared that Family Member A was checking the balance on the card.

At approximately 9:17 p.m., Family Member A went to the self-service fax machine. The videotape showed that Family Member A, not Anderson, sent a facsimile from that location. In the videotape, Family Member A can be seen with a set of papers in hand, placing those papers into the facsimile machine. Family Member A then appeared to dial a number on the facsimile machine and collected the papers as they went through. Anderson was present next to Family Member A at the time, but did not operate the facsimile machine. At approximately 9:19 p.m., Family Member A and Anderson left the store. The time of the facsimile transmission made by Family Member A is consistent with the time that the FBI received a fax, purportedly from Anderson, attaching the November 15 Letter.

J. Family Member A's Daughter's Involvement with the Letter Sent to Defendant.

Based on public filings made by defendant in this matter, the government determined the time and location of the facsimile transmission of the November 15 letter to the defendant. The letter appeared to be sent in the early morning hours on November 16, and was sent by facsimile from the same FedEx Kinko's store in Anchorage described above.

The government has obtained and reviewed the videotape from the FedEx Kinko's store at and around the time of the transmission to defense counsel. A redacted version of the Form 302 from the FBI review is attached hereto as Exhibit 8. According to a review of the videotape, Dave Anderson and Family Member A's daughter arrived at the FedEx Kinko's store. The videotape showed that Family Member A's daughter had custody of multiple sheets of paper and utilized what appeared to be a facsimile machine in the store, while Anderson stood near her.

The video further appeared to show Family Member A's daughter handing a FedEx envelope to a clerk and appearing to pay for it. Although public filings in this matter have confirmed that the Court's copy of the letter was sent by FedEx envelope, the government has not been able to conclusively determine that the FedEx envelope referenced above is the one that was transmitted to the Court.

K. Conclusion

Every aspect of the March Affidavit and the November 15 Letter has directly corresponded to the publicly-disclosed progress of the federal government's investigation into Family Member A. After Family Member A learned in March 2008 that he was being investigated by the government, Family Member A attempted to use Anderson to obtain immunity for Family Member A. When those entreaties proved unsuccessful, Family Member A created a list of thirteen names, including his own, and inserted them in a fraudulent affidavit that purported to document a grant of immunity to those people back in 2006. Anderson signed the affidavit knowing that information to be untrue. When Conspirator C pled guilty, Family Member A caused the March Affidavit to be sent to the government. When Conspirator C was sentenced, Family Member A tried to meet with the government to determine what his exposure was. When Family Member A learned of the status of his criminal liability in the federal investigation, the following day Family Member A played, at a minimum, an obvious and significant role in the transmission of the November 15 letter to the Department of Justice. Finally, Family Member A is the only person who benefits from the continued viability of the March Affidavit. For these reasons alone, the contents of the November 15 letter should be rejected out of hand.

II. The Substance of Anderson's Letter

Notwithstanding the foregoing, the government further submits that the vast majority of the substantive contentions in Anderson's letter are not true. As described above, and as further described below, Anderson repeatedly acknowledged that the contents of the March Affidavit were false, and Anderson's trial testimony was absolutely consistent with those acknowledgments. The circumstances surrounding the March Affidavit – the timing between Family Member A learning of the investigation, Anderson requesting and being denied immunity for Family Member A, and the subsequent preparation of the March Affidavit by Family Member A – further corroborate the falsity of that document.

With respect to preparation sessions for Anderson's trial testimony in the Stevens litigation, the November Letter is equally fraudulent. It is true that representatives of the government met with Anderson on multiple occasions to discuss his involvement in the renovations, and that the government requested that Anderson review his earlier grand jury testimony in connection therewith. The other contentions suggested by Anderson – for instance, that he was shown a timeline of the renovations and asked to follow it, that he was given copies of highlighted and tabbed grand jury transcripts, or that he was told how to "sweep [certain facts] under the rug" – are not true. To be clear, the government firmly denies ever directing, coaching, or suggesting any aspect of Anderson's testimony at trial.

Trial Preparation in Alaska

Anderson met with prosecutors and agents in Anchorage, Alaska, on three different occasions for the purpose of reviewing his grand jury testimony and being interviewed in preparation for his possible testimony at trial. Anderson first came to the United States

Attorney's Office in Anchorage for trial preparation purposes on Friday, August 22, 2008. On that date, a prosecutor and an agent initially met with Anderson that afternoon to discuss the March Affidavit with him. See Ex. 9 (Bottini Decl.). Anderson unequivocally told the prosecutor and the agent that the affidavit was false in that no one had ever told him or suggested to him in any way that any of the people listed in the affidavit had been given immunity from prosecution. Anderson again admitted that he knew this information was not true when he signed the affidavit. Anderson said that Family Member A had drafted the affidavit and that he (Anderson) had been under a lot of pressure from Family Member A and Family Member A's daughter to sign it. Despite admitting that the affidavit was false, Anderson tried to justify signing the affidavit by claiming that he believed that there had been a "gentleman's agreement" with the F.B.I. agents who had initially interviewed him that he would not have to provide information against any family members. Anderson again admitted, however, that no one had ever told him that anyone was receiving any form of immunity. See generally Ex. 9 (Bottini Decl.).

The government told Anderson that his false affidavit would be disclosed to the defense and that the government may not be able to call him as a witness at trial as a result him signing the false affidavit. The government further told Anderson that all the government wanted was the truth from him - including his statement about how he came to sign that affidavit. Anderson advised that he had not realized that the March Affidavit was such a significant matter. Id.

Following the discussion about the affidavit, the government asked Anderson to review a transcript of his December, 2006, grand jury testimony as it was still possible that he would be called as a witness at trial.[8] Anderson was told that a transcript of his grand jury testimony would be provided to the defense before he testified and that he could be cross-examined about his prior testimony. The government repeatedly told Anderson, however, that his present recollection about the events in question controlled - even if his present recollection conflicted with what he might have said in his grand jury testimony. See Ex. 9 (Bottini Decl.). The transcript provided to Anderson was in a binder, without any highlighting or tabbing. Id. Anderson was never given access to any other witnesses transcripts or memorandums of interviews of other witnesses during this trial preparation session or during any other trial preparation session.[9]

An agent periodically checked on Anderson and found that his progress in reviewing his transcript was extremely slow. After about an hour and a half of reviewing his testimony, Anderson had only made it to approximately page 23 of the transcript. Anderson explained that he was a "slow reader." Arrangements were then made for Anderson - who lives approximately 100 miles north of Anchorage - to come back to Anchorage the following week to continue reviewing his grand jury transcript and to meet with prosecutors again.

Anderson came back to the U.S. Attorney's office on the afternoon of Monday, August 25 to continue reviewing his grand jury testimony. See Ex. 9 (Bottini Decl.); 10 (Goeke Decl.). An agent again periodically monitored his progress, which continued to be extremely slow.

[8] Anderson's grand jury transcript, which consisted of testimony before the grand jury on two separate days, totaled more than 200 pages. This was the first time that Anderson had been given access to his grand jury transcript.

[9] There may have been a trial cart in the room in which Anderson was reviewing his grand jury transcript which included copies of photographs (in folders) that had been identified as potential trial exhibits.

Anderson continued reviewing his transcript until the office closed that evening. Id. He returned to the office the following morning and continued reviewing his grand jury testimony until later that afternoon, when he met with a group of prosecutors and agents. Again, at no time was Anderson provided a copy of his grand jury transcript that contained highlighting, tabbing, underlining, or any other similar marking.

During a meeting with prosecutors and agents on August 25, the March Affidavit was again addressed at this meeting. Anderson again admitted to all present that the affidavit contained false information. See generally Ex. 9 (Bottini Decl.); 10 (Goeke Decl.); 11 (Marsh Decl.) He expressed his belief, again, that he did not understand the impact of signing a false affidavit. He further told the prosecutors and agents that he wanted to "make it right" and do the right thing. The government unequivocally and repeatedly told Anderson in that meeting that, should he be called as a witness in the Stevens trial, Anderson must tell the truth about everything - including the truth about the March Affidavit. Anderson responded that he would do so, that he understood that the truth was that the March Affidavit contained false information, and that if he were called as a witness, he would tell the truth as to everything. Anderson was also again advised that it was not certain that he would be called as a witness by the government because of the false affidavit. See generally Ex. 9 (Bottini Decl.); 10 (Goeke Decl.); 11 (Marsh Decl.).

At the same meeting on August 25, 2008, there was some substantive trial preparation with Anderson, which involved an attorney and an agent asking him questions and showing him photographs which had been identified as potential trial exhibits. By that evening, Anderson's trial preparation had not concluded. It was also still undecided as to whether Anderson would be called as a witness at trial by the government. As Anderson's trial preparation had not yet been completed, arrangements were made for Anderson to come back to Anchorage on Wednesday, September 3, and to meet with attorneys and an agent during the morning of Thursday, September 4. Ex. 9 (Bottini Decl.).

During the trial preparation session on September 4, the entire subject matter of Anderson's anticipated trial testimony was covered in a session that lasted two to three hours. Photographs that had been identified as potential trial exhibits were again shown to Anderson during this session. At the end of this session, Anderson's March Affidavit was again addressed, and Anderson reiterated that he knew that the affidavit was false when he signed it. Ex. 9 (Bottini Decl.).

Anderson Trial Preparation in Washington, D.C.

Anderson arrived in Washington, D.C. in. Anderson came to the offices of the Public Integrity Section a number of times for the purpose of meeting with prosecutors and to continue reviewing his grand jury testimony. Ex. 9 (Bottini Decl.); 10 (Goeke Decl.).

As noted above, Anderson's review of his grand jury testimony was extremely slow and he had not completed an initial review of entire testimony prior to arriving in Washington, D.C. On several occasions Anderson came to the offices of the Public Integrity Section solely to review his grand jury testimony. Also, as in Alaska, Anderson was only asked to review his grand jury testimony in anticipation of him being subject to cross examination about his prior testimony. On these occasions, he was provided a copy of his grand jury testimony, placed in a room without any other materials related to the Stevens case, and provided time to review his testimony. Again, as in Alaska, the copy of his grand jury testimony provided by the government had not been marked in any way, whether by highlighting or tabs. At one point, Anderson himself asked for tabs for his own use in marking his grand jury testimony. See generally Ex. 9 (Bottini Decl.); 10 (Goeke Decl.).

On at least two occasions, Anderson came to the offices of the Public Integrity Section and in addition to reviewing his grand jury testimony also met with prosecutors. On these occasions, Anderson reviewed photos and other documents related to his testimony and was asked questions related to his anticipated testimony and his anticipated cross examination. Ex. 9 (Bottini Decl.); 10 (Goeke Decl.) For instance, on one occasion Anderson was specifically asked about his use of alcohol and whether he considered himself an alcoholic. Ex. 10 (Goeke Decl.). When Anderson reviewed photos, the government showed Anderson photos that related specifically to projects relating to the Girdwood residence that he had said that he had worked on or had knowledge of, such as the steel stairs. Id.

During one of the trial preparation sessions in Washington, D.C., the government again asked Anderson about the March Affidavit. Anderson expressed concern about what impact his truthful testimony about the March Affidavit would have on Family Member A. The government told Anderson that he was under an obligation to tell the truth about the March Affidavit. At that time, Anderson again affirmed that the affidavit contained information that was not true.
At no time in Washington, D.C., as in Alaska, was Anderson given any grand jury transcript to review besides his own. Each time Anderson met with prosecutors in Washington, D.C., as in Alaska, Anderson was told repeatedly that he was expected to tell the truth, no more no less. Ex. 9 (Bottini Decl.); 10 (Goeke Decl.). He reaffirmed over and over again that he was telling the truth and would continue to do so. Anderson was never instructed on how to "sugar coat" his testimony about the March Affidavit nor was he ever instructed on how to get it "swept under the rug". All Anderson was ever asked to do - on multiple occasions - was to tell the truth, whatever the truth was, about the March Affidavit. Id.

Anderson was never given access to any other witnesses' testimony or statements during trial preparation sessions or at any other time. He was provided with his own testimony to review on a number of different occasions. The transcript he was given to review was not highlighted or tabbed and he was asked to review the entire transcript. Anderson was never provided with a time line of events concerning the work done on Senator Stevens' home in Girdwood, Alaska. Anderson was shown certain documents which he had signed - such as dated receipts - to refresh his recollection as to when certain events (such as the purchase of materials) had occurred.

III. No Further Discovery or Evidentiary Hearings Are Warranted.

Generally, speaking, post-trial motions can "ordinarily be decided on the basis of affidavits without an evidentiary hearing, and a district court's decision not to hold such a hearing may be reversed only for abuse of discretion." United States v. Lam Kwong-Wah, 924 F.2d 298, 308 (D.C. Cir. 1991) (in connection with motion for a new trial, affirming district court's denial of evidentiary hearing concerning government's alleged failure to comply with Jencks Act) (internal citation omitted). See also United States v. Sensi, 879 F.2d 888, 900 n. 12 (D.C. Cir. 1989).The decision to hold an evidentiary hearing "rests within the sound discretion of the trial court." United States v. Blackburn, 9 F.3d 353, 358 (5th Cir.1993). Furthermore, "[a] motion for a new trial can ordinarily be ruled upon without conducting an evidentiary hearing." United States v. Simmons, 714 F.2d 29, 30 (5th Cir.1983). Courts further have determined that evidentiary hearings are less necessary when the deciding judge is also the trial judge: as one court recognized, "the acumen gained by the trial judge in presiding over the course of the trial makes Rule 33 motions directed to the same judge particularly suitable for ruling without a hearing. " United States v. MMR Corp., 954 F.2d 1040, 1046 (5th Cir.1992) (internal quotation omitted).

The long-standing approach regarding post-trial evidentiary hearings is especially applicable where the sought evidentiary hearing is based on a post-trial recantation by a government witness. As the District of Columbia Circuit has long recognized, "[r]ecanting affidavits and witnesses are looked upon with the utmost suspicion by the courts." United States v. Kearney, 682 F.2d 214, 219 (D.C. Cir. 1982). See also United States v. Mackin, 561 F.2d 958, 961 (D.C.Cir.1977) ("recantations by witnesses for the prosecution are viewed with suspicion ..."); Johnson v. United States, 291 F.2d 150, 154 (8th Cir.),cert. denied, 368 U.S. 880, 82 S.Ct. 130, 7 L.Ed.2d 80 (1961) (courts look upon recantation with suspicion). For that reason, where a government witness attempts to recant his or her trial testimony, "[a] motion for new trial may be decided on the basis of affidavits without an evidentiary hearing." Kearney, 682 F.2d at 219; see also United States v. Curry, 497 F.2d 99 (5th Cir. 1974) (where defendant sought evidentiary hearing to prove that a government witness lied at trial about undisclosed benefits from the government, Fifth Circuit affirmed district court's denial of evidentary hearing because "[o]ne self-serving affidavit containing hearsay allegations of matters with which the trial judge should be familiar does not necessitate an evidentiary hearing").

In United States v. Connolly, the First Circuit evaluated a district court's decision not to hold an evidentiary hearing concerning allegations that a government witness provided perjured and coached testimony at trial. 504 F.3d 206 (1st Cir. 2007). After the trial concluded, the defense moved for a new trial and an evidentiary hearing based on evidence that Salemme, a government witness, "recounted a litany of prosecutorial misconduct" after his trial testimony. Id. at 214. Among other things, Salemme alleged that the "government had shaped his narrative by asking questions such as, 'are you sure it didn't happen like this?' and then describing alternate versions of events," and that Salemme provided particular testimony because he believed it was what the government wanted him to say. Id.

After first noting that "[i]t is well established that recantations are generally viewed with considerable skepticism," 504 F.3d at 214, the First Circuit affirmed both the district court's denial of the defendant's new trial motion and the defendant's request for an evidentiary hearing concerning the allegations made by government witness Salemme. Id. at 217. Two of the bases relied upon by the First Circuit are equally compelling here. First, the Connolly panel found that certain allegations made by Salemme were, on the basis of the facts and affidavits alone, demonstrably false. In so concluding, the First Circuit stated that "[a]lthough the fact that a recantation is peppered with apparent falsehoods does not compel a court to discredit it, that fact certainly gives the court sufficient reason to invoke the hoary doctrine of falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus." Id. at 216. Connolly thus held that where one portion of a post-trial recantation is demonstrably false, "a court may reject a recantation on that basis" without more. Id.

Second, Connolly found that no additional evidentiary hearings were required because the subject matter of the allegedly-recanted testimony beared little, if any, weight on the trial testimony:

> even assuming that the recantation were true, it would not prove very much. In his musings to the CS, Salemme gave no indication that the appellant was innocent of the charged crimes. In this sense, > his recantation, if believed, would merely be impeaching and, consequently, would have a limited effect upon the outcome of a new trial in which substantial corroborating testimony existed.

Id. at 216-17.

For all of the foregoing reasons, this Court should take no further action concerning the allegations set forth in Anderson's November 15 Letter. As demonstrated in Section I, above, Anderson's claims of immunity – whether in the form of the March Affidavit or in the November 15 Letter – are patently false. The claims of immunity are contradicted by the sworn statements of an FBI agent present at the September 2006 meeting, by Anderson's sworn testimony in the Stevens trial, Anderson's repeated statements to multiple Department of Justice prosecutors who were involved in his trial preparation, and by the outrageously-important fact that in March 2008, Anderson repeatedly asked the government for the immunity that, just one week later, he claimed had instead been given in September 2006. The compelling weight of documented evidence on this point proves a significant portion of the November 15 Letter to be false. When viewed in light of the involvement of Family Member A in the transmission and likely preparation of the document, the November 15 Letter should be rejected out of hand by the Court.

Second, even assuming the truth of each allegation contained therein, Anderson's only specific claim of wrongful testimony related exclusively to whether he lied in connection with the March Affidavit – an issue that weighed on Anderson's credibility, but had no connection at all to any fact at issue in the Stevens trial. And although Anderson suggests – again, with no specificity whatsoever – that his substantive testimony was wrongfully affected by his trial preparation, there was in fact a tremendous amount of corroborating testimony in the Stevens trial to support Anderson's testimony about his involvement at the Girdwood Residence and VECO's role in doing work on it.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, the defendant's Motion for Discovery and for an Evidentiary Hearing should be denied.

INTRODUCTION

Senator Stevens was entitled to a fair trial. When the government proffers false evidence and withholds key exculpatory evidence; when improper hearsay evidence forms the linchpin of the government's case; when the indictment conceals the nature of the charges and the government then emphasizes uncharged conduct; and when jurors lie to the Court and opine that "all politicians are guilty," the defendant has not received a fair trial. Senator Stevens's trial suffered from these and many other deficiencies, which are summarized below. Alone or in combination, they warrant a new trial.

ARGUMENT

A new trial should be granted "if the interest of justice so requires." Fed. R. Crim. P. 33(a); see e.g., United States v. Alexander, 331 F.3d 116, 128 (D.C. Cir. 2003).

I. ADMISSION OF PREJUDICIAL HEARSAY EVIDENCE REQUIRES A NEW TRIAL.

The prosecution introduced four crucial pieces of inadmissible hearsay evidence over Defendant's timely objections: (1) Bill Allen's testimony that Bob Persons had told him that Senator Stevens was "just covering his ass" when he requested bills from Mr. Allen for the renovations performed on the Girdwood residence, Tr. (Oct. 1, a.m.), at 52; (2) a taped telephone conversation between Mr. Persons and Mr. Allen, in which Mr. Persons told Mr. Allen that "Catherine says . . . Ted gets hysterical when he has to spend his own money," GX 662; Tr. (Oct. 7, p.m.), at 67; (3) a different taped telephone call between Mr. Persons and Mr. Allen, discussing a bill from Chugach Sewer & Drain that Persons sent to the Senator noting "labor paid by Bill [Allen]," GX 660; Tr. (Oct. 7, p.m.), at 70; and (4) the VECO accounting records purporting to reflect the amount of labor and expenses to VECO for the Girdwood renovations, GX 177; GX 1058–GX 1093.

Each of these four pieces of evidence was hearsay for which there was no exception. The erroneous admission of any one of these statements alone warrants a new trial, and their cumulative effect was even more highly prejudicial.

A. Statements between Bill Allen and Bob Persons

1. "Ted is just covering his ass."

On direct examination of Bill Allen, counsel for the government asked Allen for Bob Persons's response to a note (GX 495) that Allen had received from the Senator, requesting a bill. Tr. (Oct. 1, a.m.), at 52. Over the Senator's objections, Allen responded that Persons had told him: "[O]h, [B]ill, don't worry about getting a bill. He said, Ted is just covering his ass." Id. The Court admitted this testimony both as evidence of Bill Allen's then-existing state of mind, see Fed. R. Evid. 803(3), and under the co-conspirator rule, Fed. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(E). Tr. (Oct. 1, a.m.), at 52–54. This statement does not meet the requirements of either rule.

Rule 803(3) is expressly limited to "[a] statement of the declarant's then existing state of mind. . . ." (emphasis added). Bob Persons, not Bill Allen, is the declarant of the statement, "Ted is just covering his ass." See Tr. (Oct. 1, a.m.), at 52. Yet, the government introduced this statement not to show Bob Persons's state of mind, but to show Bill Allen's. In addition, the government was not offering this statement to prove Bill Allen's state of mind (or Bob Persons's), but rather to prove the truth of the matter asserted: that Senator Stevens allegedly did not want to receive a bill for the renovations. The statement is therefore inadmissible hearsay. See United States v. Gomez, 927 F.2d 1530, 1536–36 (11th Cir. 1991); accord United States v. Burch, No. 93-3032, 1994 WL 546187, at *1 (D.C. Cir. July 12, 1994).

Admitting the statement under Rule 801(d)(2)(E) was also improper. Evidence is admissible under Rule 801(d)(2)(E) only after the court has made certain findings by a preponderance of the evidence. These requirements are detailed in Senator Stevens's Trial

Memorandum Concerning Fed. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(E), Dkt. 88. One of the requisite findings is that a joint venture exists. Fed. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(E). The government here alleged a "common goal . . . for Mr. Allen not to send a bill to Senator Stevens." Tr. (Oct. 1, a.m.), at 54 (emphasis added). If that is a "joint venture," then there is virtually nothing left of the hearsay rule, as the 801(d)(2)(E) exception could then extend to any circumstances where two or more persons agree about anything. We are aware of no case that reads the concept of a "joint venture" so broadly. Cf. United States v. Gewin, 471 F.3d 197, 200 (D.C. Cir. 2006) (government alleged defendant and declarant engaged in "common enterprise of stock promotion" "which in fact defendant didn't dispute"). If the "coconspirator exception" to the hearsay rule is to be read to encompass lawful combinations, it must at a minimum be limited to actual joint ventures.

In addition, the government did not offer substantial, independent evidence establishing the existence of a "joint venture" which had as its common goal Mr. Allen not sending to the Senator the bill the Senator requested. Rather, counsel for the government offered as proof of the joint venture only the statement itself. On this point, the law is clear: "The contents of the statement shall be considered but are not alone sufficient to establish . . . the existence of the conspiracy and the participation therein of the declarant and the party against whom the statement is offered under subdivision (E)." Fed. R. Evid. 801(d)(2); Gewin, 471 F.3d at 201.

Finally, the government also failed to prove by independent evidence that Senator Stevens was a party to the alleged joint venture of having Mr. Allen disregard the Senator's request to send him a bill. Rule 801(d)(2)(E) requires the government to prove that the defendant knew of the existence and objectives of the joint venture and agreed to join it. United States v. Wilson, 160 F.3d 732, 737 (D.C. Cir. 1998). But the independent evidence at trial – including Mr. Allen's – demonstrated that the Senator "wanted to pay for everything he got," Tr. (Oct. 6, p.m.), at 73, and that Mr. Allen hid bills from the Senator. Tr. (Oct. 6, a.m.), at.94.

Mr. Allen's "CYA" testimony was perhaps the single most important and explosive piece of evidence in the government's case. Because the government was unable to carry its burden under Rule 801(d)(2)(E), the statement was inadmissible and a new trial is therefore required. See United States v. Safavian, 435 F. Supp. 2d 36, 46 (D.D.C. 2006).

2. "Catherine says . . . Ted gets hysterical . . . ."

Over defense objections, the government played an audiotape telephone conversation between Bill Allen and Bob Persons, in which Mr. Persons says:

> PERSONS: Ah, as, as, ah, Catherine says, ah Ted gets hysterical when he has to spend his own money (laughs). So, so I wanna, wanna keep it down cause, and, and, you know, and the other flip side of that is he gets hysterical cause he can't really afford to pay, ah, a bunch of money I don't think. Ah, and. . .
> ALLEN: I know.

GX 662. The Court admitted this statement under Rule 801(d)(2)(E), based on the government's argument that "Mr. Allen and Mr. Persons are talking in the context of a horse partnership the senator is involved in, and they're making statements generally speaking about the senator's financial situation." Tr. (Sept. 18), at 17.

In fact, this statement is double hearsay, and there is no exception for either of the two layers of hearsay. Accordingly it should not have been admitted.

a. The primary statement by Bob Persons

The first layer of hearsay is the primary statement by Bob Persons that "Catherine says, ah, Ted gets hysterical when he has to spend his own money." The government's theory that Mr. Allen and Mr. Persons were speaking in the context of a "horse partnership" does not suffice to make this statement admissible. To admit a statement under Rule 801(d)(2)(E), the Court must find that the alleged conspiracy is "factually intertwined" with the charged offenses. See United States v. Ellis, 156 F.3d 493, 497 (3d Cir. 1998) ("[S]ome courts require that in order for a coconspirator statement to be admitted, the conspiracy during which the statements were made must be "factually intertwined" with the offenses being tried. In our view, this salutary additional requirement is essentially a restatement of ordinary relevancy principles." (quotations and citations omitted)); accord Safavian, 435 F. Supp. 2d at 47 (citing Ellis, 156 F.3d at 497; Fed. R. Evid. 403). Any "horse partnership" is not, under any stretch of the imagination, "factually intertwined" with the offenses charged, and the evidence should have been excluded for that reason alone.

But the Court should also have excluded this evidence for a second reason. Another finding that must be made under 801(d)(2)(E) is that a statement was made "in furtherance of" the conspiracy. A statement that does not advance the conspiracy and instead is merely casual chatter, as the "Ted gets hysterical" statement plainly is, cannot be deemed "in furtherance of" the horse partnership. See United States v. Tarantino, 846 F.2d 1384, 1411–12 (D.C. Cir. 1988). "[M]ere conversations or narrative declarations of past events are not in furtherance of the conspiracy." 30B Michael H. Graham, Federal Practice and Procedure § 7025, at 302 (4th interim ed. 2008); see also United States v. Urbanik, 801 F.2d 692, 698 (4th Cir. 1986) ("We think that this statement can fairly be treated only as the sort of idle conversation which though it touches upon, does not 'further,' a conspiracy, and which accordingly should not be admitted under Rule 801(d)(2)(E).").

b. The included statement by Catherine Stevens

Mr. Persons states that "Catherine says, ah Ted gets hysterical when he has to spend his own money. . . ." The statement allegedly made by Catherine Stevens is hearsay within hearsay.

Because this statement is inadmissible, the entire statement by Mr. Persons should have been excluded. 2 Kenneth S. Broun, McCormick on Evidence § 324.1 (6th ed. 2006) ("[I]f the included statement is inadmissible, [Rule 805] is not satisfied, and the statements are excluded." (citing United States v. Patrick, 959 F.2d 991, 999–1002 (D.C. Cir. 1992))).

Mrs. Stevens's statement was not admissible as a non-hearsay, co-conspirator statement under Rule 801(d)(2)(E) because the government offered no evidence that Mrs. Stevens (i) was a party to the horse partnership, (ii) made the statement in the course of the horse partnership, and (iii) made the statement in furtherance of the horse partnership. Moreover, the horse partnership is not factually intertwined with the offenses for which Senator Stevens was tried and is therefore irrelevant and inadmissible. See Ellis, 156 F.3d at 497; Fed. R. Evid. 401, 402.

This prejudicial statement is multiple hearsay. It should not have been admitted, and a new trial should be granted.

3. "Labor Paid by Bill."

The Court similarly admitted under Rule 801(d)(2)(E) the audiotape in which Mr. Allen and Mr. Persons discuss the Chugach bill (GX 660). See Tr. (Oct. 7, p.m.), at 27, 70. Mr. Allen tells Mr. Persons about an email from Senator Stevens to Mr. Allen, in which Senator Stevens informed Mr. Allen that he had received a bill for plumbing work done on his Girdwood residence and that this bill stated "labor paid by Bill." The government sought to introduce, among others, the hearsay statements that Mr. Allen received an email from the Senator concerning the bill and that Mr. Allen had already paid the bill ("Yeah, but I got a[n] email from him knowing that he's gotta talk to . . . and I've already taken care of the f bill, you know); and that Senator Stevens knew that Mr. Allen had paid the Chugach labor costs ("Well, the only person that knows be . . . between me and you and Ted is this guy at Chugach Sewer and Drain."). GX 660. Counsel for the government contended that these statements were admissible under Rule 801(d)(2)(E) because the conversation was in furtherance of a "macro and micro joint venture," Tr. (Sept. 18), at 18, amounting to the same "common goal," "to provide an improvement to the senator's house that the senator doesn't have to pay for." Id. at 19.

But there was no basis to find a "joint venture" or conspiracy from these facts. The government did not charge a conspiracy in connection with the alleged home renovations and it should not be permitted to relax its burden by proceeding under a loosely-defined "joint venture" theory. In any event, the government was unable to show by a preponderance of the evidence that Senator Stevens was a party to the alleged joint venture "to provide an improvement to the senator's house that the senator doesn't have to pay for." Id.; see United States v. Wilson, 160 F.3d 732, 737 (D.C. Cir. 1998). On the contrary, the taped conversation on its face reflects that the Senator wanted to pay the plumbing bill himself, and Mr. Allen and Mr. Persons did not want the Senator to know that Mr. Allen had paid a portion of it.

B. The VECO Accounting Records

The VECO accounting records, GX 177 and GX 1058–GX 1093, were admitted under the business records exception to the hearsay rule, Fed. R. Evid. 803(6). Tr. (Sept. 26, p.m.), at 15, 18. Rule 803(6) permits the admission of business records that satisfy certain indicia of reliability, "unless the source of information or the method or circumstances of preparation indicate lack of trustworthiness." (emphasis added). As the D.C. Circuit has held, "the essential determination on admissibility is to be made according to the character of the records and their earmarks of reliability acquired from their source and origin and the nature of their compilation." Gass v. United States, 416 F.2d 767, 772 (D.C. Cir. 1968); see also Saks Int'l, Inc. v. M/V Export Champion, 817 F.2d 1011, 1013 (2d Cir. 1987) ("The principal precondition to admission of documents as business records is that they have sufficient indicia of trustworthiness to be considered reliable."). Evidence that came to light at trial plainly showed that these records did not satisfy the reliability threshold of Rule 803(6), and they should have been stricken in their entirety. In addition, the government should not have been permitted to edit the documents through handwritten alterations.

1. The records should not have been admitted.

The government heavily emphasized the VECO accounting records in its opening statement, pointing out that they showed VECO expending some $188,000 on the Girdwood renovations. The government subsequently introduced the accounting records through Cheryl Boomershine, who testified that the records were kept in the regular course of business but that she did not have personal knowledge that they were accurate. Tr. (Sept. 29, a.m.), at 52–72. Instead, she relied upon Bill Allen's purported approval of nearly all of the invoices. Tr. (Sept. 26, p.m.), at 54–56.

Shortly after Ms. Boomershine's testimony, facts came to light showing that the records were completely unreliable. First, David Anderson and Rocky Williams, whose time makes up a substantial portion of the $188,000, did not work nearly as many hours on the Girdwood renovations as the records reflect. The Court accordingly struck those portions of the VECO accounting records reflecting Mr. Williams's and Mr. Anderson's hours. Tr. (Oct. 9, p.m.), at 62–63. Similarly, the testimony of another VECO employee, Daniel McBirney, shows that he did not work nearly the number of hours that the accounting records reflect.[1] Second, although Cheryl Boomershine testified that she had relied on Bill Allen's approval when she processed the invoices for payment, Tr. (Sept. 26, p.m.), at 54–56, Mr. Allen testified that he never even saw

[1] Compare Tr. (Sept. 26, a.m.), at 68 ("Q. Approximately how many hours do you think you were actually working down there at the home in Girdwood? A. Probably around 40 to 60."), with GX 1064 and GX 1069 (showing Mr. McBirney billing 289 hours to the Girdwood Consultants code).

FBI - Stevens-4889

the invoices that he purportedly approved, Tr. (Oct. 6, a.m.), at 92, and that VECO's records were probably inflated. See id. at 92–93; Tr. (Oct. 6, p.m.), at 74–79.

In other words, portions of the accounting records (those relating to Mr. Williams, Mr. Anderson, and Mr. McBirney) were affirmatively shown to be false. As to the remainder of the records, the only two witnesses who could testify to their source and origin and the nature of their compilation, Ms. Boomershine and Mr. Allen, conceded that they could not vouch for their reliability, and Mr. Allen went so far as to testify that the records likely were unreliable. Senator Stevens accordingly moved to have the records stricken in their entirety as hearsay, see Dkt. 171, but the Court denied the motion. See Minute Order (Oct. 19, 2008).

Admission of these exhibits was error. The jury should not have been permitted to convict on the basis of critical accounting records that did not meet the reliability requirements of the business records exception.[2]

2. The records submitted to the jury were impermissibly altered.

When it came time to redact the summary spreadsheet, GX 177, to excise the stricken portions of the accounting records reflecting Mr. Williams's and Mr. Anderson's timesheets, the government objected that deleting line items reflecting these portions would, by necessity, also redact other items the Court had not stricken. That is because GX 177 included the line-item totals of each underlying VECO invoice, GX 1058–GX 1093, and some of those invoices contained time from Mr. Anderson together with other labor and expenses. The government proposed that, instead of simply redacting the line items from GX 177 and arguing to the jury on the basis of the unredacted information in the underlying invoices, GX 177 should be altered or edited by "writing in" a new amount for each of the invoices that subtracted out the amounts attributable to Mr. Anderson's labor. The Court allowed the government to so modify the records over the Senator's objection. See Tr. (Oct. 20, p.m.), at 8–15; Tr. (Oct. 21, a.m.), at 3–4.

[2] This threshold admissibility determination is to be made by the court and not by the jury. See Fed. R. Evid. 104, 1972 proposed rules ("The applicability of a particular rule of evidence often depends upon the existence of a condition. ... Accepted practice, incorporated in the rule, places on the judge the responsibility for these determinations.").

This alteration further compounded the unreliability of the exhibits and reinforced their inadmissibility. Counsel's handwritten alteration to a document is not admissible evidence. See Meurling v. County Transp. Co., 230 F.2d 167, 168–69 (2d Cir. 1956) (striking exhibit after it was altered by plaintiff's counsel "allegedly to conform to the testimony of [a] witness"). Allowing GX 177, in its edited and inadmissible state, to be used by the jury during deliberations risked impermissible prejudice. See Holland v. United States, 348 U.S. 121, 127–28 (1954) (recognizing "great danger" in allowing the jury to renew "various charts summarizing the computations" of government counsel: "bare figures have a way of acquiring an existence of their own, independent of the evidence which gave rise to them").

Moreover, the government representative's handwritten edits to GX 177 are not reliable business records of VECO corporation. Rule 803(6) is premised on the assumption that each link of the chain in the production of business records is acting "under a duty of accuracy" and "in the regular course of business." Fed. R. Evid. 803, 1972 proposed rules (quotations omitted). When a "supplier of the information does not act in the regular course, an essential link is broken: the assurance of accuracy does not extend to the information itself and the fact that it may be recorded with scrupulous accuracy is of no avail." Id.; see also United States v. Baker, 693 F.2d 183, 188 (D.C. Cir. 1982) ("If both the source and the recorder of the information, as well as every other participant in the chain producing the record, are acting in the regular course of business, the multiple hearsay is excused by Rule 803(6)"; otherwise, it is not.). Here, neither the "source" nor the "recorder" of the information for the altered accounting records – counsel for the prosecution – acted in the regular course of VECO's business.[3]

Finally, the altered version of GX 177 left an impression that the government's handwritten numbers were credible evidence worthy of belief, not figures placed there to make the Court's punitive redaction more precise. Indeed, allowing the government to add its handwritten insertions likely suggested to the jury that the edited version of GX 177 it received was now accurate. The erroneous admission of this unreliable and prejudicial evidence warrants a new trial.

II. PREJUDICIAL JUROR MISCONDUCT REQUIRES A NEW TRIAL.

Multiple instances of juror misconduct prejudiced Senator Stevens's Fifth Amendment right to due process and Sixth Amendment right to trial by an impartial jury. The misconduct included false statements on Juror Questionnaires, juror bias, juror flight and substitution. The cumulative effect of these acts is overwhelming, and a new trial should be granted.

A. False Statements on Juror Questionnaires

The Court-ordered Juror Questionnaire inquired about the background of potential jurors. Potential jurors' responses were provided to counsel and to the Court for assistance in the jury selection process. It was obviously critical to the integrity of the voir dire process – particularly in this false statements case – that the questionnaires be answered truthfully. Since the end of [3] Other essential requirements of Rule 803(6) – for example, that the record be "made at or near the time" of the transaction and be "kept in the course of a regularly conducted business activity" – are also lacking here. See Kincaid & King Constr. Co. v. United States, 333 F.2d 561, 564 (9th Cir. 1964).

FBI - Stevens-4892

trial, however, defense counsel have identified multiple statements by two paneled jurors on their Juror Questionnaires that counsel now believe to be false.[4]

"For reversal because of a juror's failure to disclose information at voir dire, the Supreme Court requires the complaining party to show that the juror 'failed to answer honestly a material question on voir dire, and then further show that a correct response would have provided a valid basis for a challenge for cause.'" United States v. Williams-Davis, 90 F.3d 490, 503 (D.C. Cir. 1996) (quoting McDonough Power Equip., Inc. v. Greenwood, 464 U.S. 548, 556 (1984)). When the defendant presents facts sufficient to raise an inference of material false statements by a juror – as counsel has done here, see Appendix A – the Court should order an evidentiary hearing to confirm the falsity of the jurors' statements and examine potential bias. See United States v. Boney, 977 F.2d 624, 634–35 (D.C. Cir. 1992).

In Boney, a juror failed to disclose his felon status during voir dire. After the defendant was convicted, defense counsel discovered this information and requested an evidentiary hearing to determine the falsity of the juror's voir dire statements and to explore potential bias. The District Court denied the defendant's motion for an evidentiary hearing, but the D.C. Circuit remanded.

> Although the discovery of the juror's felon status does not by itself require a new trial, we think the juror's failure to disclose his status in response to the voir dire examination presents serious added concerns. After all, lying or failing to disclose relevant information during voir dire itself raises substantial questions about the juror's possible bias.

[4] An Appendix identifying statements that counsel believe to be false is attached hereto, and Senator Stevens is requesting permission to file it and its accompanying exhibits under seal. See Appendix A (under seal). These sealed exhibits include the relevant Juror Questionnaires, see Exhibit S-1 (under seal) and Exhibit S-2 (under seal), and evidence strongly suggesting that a juror's statements on the questionnaires were untrue, see Exhibit S-3 (under seal).

FBI - Stevens-4893

Id. "Because the record provides no evidence that the motivation for the lie was unrelated to bias in this case, it was an abuse of discretion under these facts for the trial judge not to have held an evidentiary hearing." Id. at 634–35 (emphasis added); see also United States v. White, 116 F.3d 903, 929 (D.C. Cir. 1997) ("If an improper private communication with a juror has occurred, a hearing ordinarily is required to determine whether the communication resulted in prejudice. The same is true when a juror is shown to have lied during voir dire." (footnote and citations omitted)).

As in Boney, an evidentiary hearing is required here to determine the falsity of the jurors' statements and the possible bias they reveal. The significance of a juror's false statements is heightened, moreover, in the context of a prosecution for false statements and should provide a valid basis for a new trial.

> Knowingly lying during the voir dire violated, inter alia, 18 U.S.C. § 1621, and subjected the juror to possible criminal contempt pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 401, as well as to possible substantial restitution claims by the government. It exhibited a personal interest in this particular case that was so powerful as to cause the juror to commit a serious crime. Such an interest not only suggests a view on the merits and/or knowledge of evidentiary facts but is also quite inconsistent with an expectation that a prospective juror will give truthful answers concerning her or his ability to weigh the evidence fairly and obey the instructions of the court.

United States v. Colombo, 869 F.2d 149, 151–52 (2d Cir. 1989) (citations and footnote omitted; emphasis added) (collecting cases).

Knowing false statements on juror questionnaires call into question the juror's ability to listen to the evidence, not consider extrinsic facts, follow the Court's instructions, and sit in judgment of the defendant's truthfulness.

> If a juror treats with contempt the court's admonition to answer voir dire questions truthfully, she can be expected to treat her responsibilities as a juror—to listen to the evidence, not to consider extrinsic facts, to follow the judge's instructions—with equal > scorn. Moreover, a juror who tells major lies creates a serious conundrum for the fact-finding process. How can someone who herself does not comply with the duty to tell the truth stand in judgment of other people's veracity? Having committed perjury, she may believe that the witnesses also feel no obligation to tell the truth and decide the case based on her prejudices rather than the testimony.

Green v. White, 232 F.3d 671, 677 (9th Cir. 2000) (emphasis added).

Furthermore, false statements about jurors' involvement with the criminal justice system raise particular concerns in this case because jurors may associate or blame their prior personal experiences on government officials, including politicians like Senator Stevens. The false statements may suggest an attempt to serve on the jury in order to vindicate prejudice toward government, politicians, or political parties.

> The possibility of prejudice [to defendants falling into certain categories] is real, and there is consequent need for a searching voir dire examination, in situations where, for example, the case carries racial overtones, or involves other matters concerning which either the local community or the population at large is commonly known to harbor strong feelings that may stop short of presumptive bias in law yet significantly skew deliberations in fact.

United States v. Robinson, 475 F.2d 376, 381 (D.C. Cir. 1973) (footnote omitted; emphasis added).

Senator Stevens requests that the Court hold an evidentiary hearing to confirm that the jurors' statements were false and to explore potential bias. If it is confirmed that a juror provided a false statement during the voir dire process or harbored bias, the Court should order a new trial.

B. Prejudicial Juror Bias

It is apparent from media reports that significant prejudicial juror bias existed within the jury panel. For example, Juror No. 4 gave the following statements to the media indicating that she believes all politicians are guilty:

> When asked what she thought about Stevens' case, she said: "He didn't do anything any other congressman or senator or governor or president has not done. He was guilty but these other ones are just as guilty if not more guilty."
>
> When asked if she thought Stevens was guilty, she replied: "I didn't say that."

Jesse J. Holland, "Missing Juror Lied About Father's Death," Associated Press, Nov. 3, 2008 (emphasis added) (attached hereto as Exhibit 1). In addition:

> [Juror No. 4] told reporters outside the courthouse that she believed Stevens was guilty "like all the other" politicians, but she declined to say whether she would have voted to convict the senator.

Del Quentin Wilber, "Stevens Juror Lied to Be Dismissed," Washington Post, Nov. 4, 2008, at A15 (emphasis added) (attached hereto as Exhibit 2). See also Exhibit S-1 (under seal).

Juror No. 4's statements demonstrate that voir dire failed and the jury was tainted by bias. At least one juror with a view that all politicians are guilty navigated voir dire, was selected as a member of the jury, attended trial daily, and participated in deliberations. While Juror No. 4 was excused from the panel prior to verdict (as a result of other misconduct described below), her predisposed views about politicians' guilt almost certainly tainted other members of the jury. At a minimum, counsel for Senator Stevens is entitled to an evidentiary hearing where juror bias can be explored and proved. "[T]he remedy for allegations of juror partiality is a hearing in which the defendant has the opportunity to prove actual bias." Smith v. Phillips, 455 U.S. 209, 215 (1982) (cited in United States v. Williams-Davis, 90 F.3d 490, 496 (D.C. Cir. 1996)).

C. Juror Flight and Substitution; Alternate Juror's Bias and False Statements.

After two days of deliberations, Juror No. 4 absconded from the Jury panel. As justification for her departure, Juror No. 4 made a series of false statements to the Court. The juror informed the Court that her father had passed away in California; that a funeral was planned for her father on October 25th or October 26th in California; that she was traveling on an emergency basis to California to attend the funeral; and that she was unsure of her date of return to Washington, D.C. These statements were knowing falsehoods: Juror No. 4's father had not died, and her trip to California was for the purpose of attending a horse race. Juror No. 4 then evaded multiple inquiries from the Court regarding her date of return.

As a result of these false statements and the Court's inability to locate Juror No. 4, the Court replaced her with an alternate juror before accurate information was known. Senator Stevens objected to substitution of an alternate juror and requested that, if Juror No. 4 could not serve, the jury continue its ongoing deliberations with eleven jurors. Over defense objection, however, the Court replaced Juror No. 4 with Juror No. 11 (Alternate No. 1). On Friday, October 24, 2008, the Court voir dired Juror No. 11 as to whether she had made a decision with respect to her view of the proper outcome of the case. Juror No. 11 indicated that she had not made such a decision.

In retrospect, this response may well have been untrue. While the jury had been deliberating for two days without a verdict prior to the juror substitution, it reached a guilty verdict only a few hours after the jury's deliberations allegedly began anew with Juror No. 11. Moreover, in the weeks following trial, Juror No. 11 has made statements in an internet blog that suggest that she was predisposed to find Senator Stevens guilty, and that she surely must have reached a view of his guilt before she was substituted as a juror. Indeed, Juror No. 11's blog indicates that she harbored a view of guilt stretching back to the first witness in the case. See Exhibit 3 ("Juror 11 Explains All" blog), at "First Witness?" (dated Nov. 17, 2008).

Moreover, after Juror No. 11 represented to the Court that she had not yet made a decision as to the proper outcome of the case, the Court asked a follow-up question: was there any reason that Juror No. 11 could not be impartial. Juror No. 11 paused, then responded that there was not. The Court followed-up: what was the reason for Juror No. 11's hesitation? Juror No. 11 explained that she was further considering the previous question.[5]

Senator Stevens was clearly prejudiced by the substitution of this alternate juror. See Colombo, 869 F.2d 151–52; see also Clark v. United States, 289 U.S. 1, 11 (1933) (Cardozo, J.) ("The judge who examines on the voir dire is engaged in the process of organizing the court. If the answers to the questions are willfully evasive or knowingly untrue, the talesman, when accepted, is a juror in name only.").

Because the above circumstances strongly suggest that the Juror made material false statements to the Court relating to her views of the proper outcome of the trial, the Court should order a new trial. At a minimum, Senator Stevens is entitled to an evidentiary hearing to explore Juror No. 11's potential false statements and bias. See Smith v. Phillips, 455 U.S. 209, 215 (1982); United States v. Williams-Davis, 90 F.3d 490, 496 (D.C. Cir. 1996).

D. Cumulative Prejudicial Effect

While any one of the above acts would be sufficient basis for a new trial, their cumulative effect unquestionably requires that remedy. See Section XVI, infra. In this case, the multiple false statements by paneled jurors on their Juror Questionnaires; the declared bias against defendant held by at least one member of the jury; a juror's false statements to the Court resulting in irregular juror substitution; and the substituted juror's bias and false statements worked cumulatively to deny Senator Stevens a fair trial.

III. THE COURT'S INSTRUCTION UPON SUBSTITUTING THE ALTERNATE JUROR WAS ERRONEOUS.

After replacing Juror No. 4 with Juror No. 11, the Court instructed the jury: "The only instruction I have is that, because one of the jurors is no longer present and you have a new juror who was not present when you started deliberations, you have to start your deliberations, and I leave it up to you to define what that means, you have to start your deliberations anew." Tr. (Oct. 27, a.m.), at 5–6. This was plain error. Both the Sixth Amendment and the Federal Rules prescribe that juries must begin deliberations anew after the seating of an alternate. See Fed. R. Crim. P. 24(c)(3); United States v. Hillard, 701 F.2d 1052, 1056–57 (2d Cir.1983) (finding "'essential feature' of the jury was preserved" when "trial judge instructed all the jurors to begin their deliberations anew, explaining that 'a jury verdict must be the product of the deliberations of all twelve people who reach that verdict'"); Claudio v. Snyder, 68 F.3d 1573, 1575 (3d Cir. 1995) ("Most of the federal courts that have addressed the issue, however, have held that when circumstances require, substitution of an alternate juror in place of a regular juror after deliberations have begun does not violate the Constitution, so long as the judge instructs the reconstituted jury to begin its deliberations anew and the defendant is not prejudiced by the substitution." (collecting cases)).

The Court's instruction that the jury was free to give any interpretation to the directive to begin its deliberations anew ran afoul of this constitutional requirement. It invited the jurors, eleven of whom had already deliberated for two days, to short-cut the process by updating the newly substituted juror on prior deliberations. That the jury accepted this invitation is apparent from the speed with which it rendered a verdict: only a few hours after supposedly "beginning anew," after a month-long trial with over fifty witnesses, the jury returned a verdict of guilty on all counts. Thus, the Court's instruction violated Senator Stevens's Sixth Amendment right to a verdict resulting from the full deliberation of each and every juror.

IV. THE JURY'S AMENDMENT OR MISCOMPREHENSION OF COUNT II OF THE INDICTMENT REQUIRES A NEW TRIAL.

During its deliberations, the jury discovered that the allegations in Count II of the indictment did not match Senator Stevens's 2001 Financial Disclosure Form. Count II alleges, in part, that Senator Stevens "falsely reported . . . that during calendar year 2001 he had received no gifts from a single source with an aggregate value of more than $260.00." As the jury's note to the Court pointed out, this charge is at odds with Senator Stevens's 2001 Financial Disclosure Form, on which the Senator had actually answered "YES" to the question whether he had received reportable gifts in that year. GX 884 at US-C-00107.

The jury asked: "What do we do?" Jury Note (Oct. 27, 2008) [Dkt. 236]. After considering the parties' competing proposals, the Court instructed the jury as follows:

> The indictment is merely a charging document, it is not evidence. You must consider all of the evidence and my instructions to determine whether the government has proven each element of an offense in the indictment beyond a reasonable doubt.

Note to Jury (Oct. 27) [Dkt. 236]. Several hours later, the jury returned a verdict of guilty on Count II.

In light of the jury's note, this verdict was logically possible only if it reached one of two conclusions. By far the most likely is that the jury, which obviously was focusing on "gifts," decided to "correct" the indictment and convict Senator Stevens of Count II on the basis that he checked the "YES" box for reportable gifts but did not disclose on the attached schedule gifts he allegedly received from Bill Allen, VECO, Robert Penney (the stained glass), and/or Robert Persons (the Brookstone chair).[6] Such a correction would be an amendment of the indictment warranting a new trial. See Gaither v. United States, 413 F.2d 1061, 1071 (D.C. Cir. 1969) ("An amendment of the indictment occurs when the charging terms of the indictment are altered, either literally or in effect, by prosecutor or court after the grand jury has last passed upon them." (footnotes omitted)); United States v. Budd, 496 F.3d 517, 521 (6th Cir. 2007) ("Both actual and constructive amendments are considered per se prejudicial and are reversible error."); United States v. Moore, 198 F.3d 793, 795 (10th Cir. 1999) ([A]n amendment involves a change, whether literal or in effect, in the terms of the indictment. . . . [A]n amendment to an indictment constitutes reversible error. . . .").

"[T]he basic protection the grand jury was designed to afford is defeated by a device or method which subjects the defendant to prosecution [for conduct] which the grand jury did not charge." Stirone v. United States, 361 U.S. 212, 217–18 (1960). In Stirone, in which the defendant was charged with interference with interstate commerce in violation of the Hobbs Act, the evidence presented at trial and the judge's instructions permitted the jury to convict the defendant for interfering with steel shipments even though the indictment only charged interference with sand shipments. Id. at 213–14. The Supreme Court concluded that "[t]he indictment here cannot fairly be read as charging interference with movements of steel . . . [,]"

[6] As argued in prior submissions, Senator Stevens should not have been convicted under this theory in any event, because his "YES" answer was literally true and because omissions are not actionable as false statements. See Bronston v. United States, 409 U.S. 352 (1973); United States v. Milton, 8 F.3d 39 (D.C. Cir. 1993); United States v. Hixon, 987 F.2d 1261, 1267 (6th Cir. 1993) ("[A]n indictment premised on a statement which on its face is not false cannot survive.") (quoting United States v. Vesaas, 586 F.2d 101, 104 (8th Cir. 1978)). When an allegation of false statements "rests only on . . . alleged omissions . . . , [it] is thus fatally deficient." United States v. Crop Growers Corp., 954 F. Supp. 335, 349 (D.D.C. 1997).

FBI - Stevens-4901

and that the "variation here destroyed defendant's substantial right to be tried only on charges presented in an indictment returned by a grand jury." Id. at 217.

The same is true in this case. The false statement that the grand jury charged in Count II was that Senator Stevens had not received any reportable gifts in 2001. But the jury convicted him for stating that he had received reportable gifts but failing to disclose some of them. The jury thus convicted Senator Stevens "'on the basis of facts not found by, and perhaps not even presented to, the grand jury which indicted him.'" United States v. Hitt, 107 F. Supp. 2d 29, 37 (D.D.C. 2000) (quoting Russell v. United States, 369 U.S. 749, 770 (1962). The Constitution does not permit such an outcome, and the Court should order a new trial.

It is also logically possible, though practically inconceivable, that the jury convicted Senator Stevens on the ground that he received a reportable "liability" in 2001. It cannot reasonably be presumed that the jury reached this result, however, because the government characterized all the alleged "things of value" purportedly charged in Count II – the Girdwood renovations, the stained glass window, and the Brookstone chair – as gifts:

> Now, you know by now, ladies and gentlemen, this is not a complicated case. It's not. It's just that it had a lot of moving parts to it. The important facts are simple and straightforward. The defendant accepted multiple gifts which were easily valued over $260 to $305. That's all we're talking about. The government's evidence proved that the defendant received extravagant gifts year after year after year and that he repeatedly failed to disclose those gifts as he knew he was . . . required to do by law.

Tr. (Oct. 21, p.m.), at 45 (emphases added); see also Tr. (Oct. 21, a.m.), at 29–30, 31–32, 38, 47. In addition, the jury did not understand the meaning of the term "liability" – which the government never explained – as its note to the Court made clear. Juror Note (Oct. 23, 2008) [Dkt. 232].[7]

Finally, even if the Court were somehow to find that the conviction under Count II rests on the "liability" component, a new trial should be ordered because the jury was presented no basis on which to conclude that Senator Stevens incurred a "liability," and the conviction would be against the weight of the evidence. See Section XV, infra. Indeed, the government in Count II emphasized two items – the Brookstone chair and the stained glass – that could not possibly support such a conviction because their value was less than $10,000.

V. THE COURT ERRED IN PERMITTING THE GOVERNMENT TO APPEAL TO CLASS PREJUDICE.

During her cross-examination of Mrs. Stevens, counsel for the government pursued a long line of questioning, the object of which can only have been to incite class prejudice against Senator and Mrs. Stevens by portraying them as wealthy, privileged individuals and to equate wealth with improper conduct:

> Q. And didn't Barbara Flanders walk your dogs?
>
> A. Walk my dogs?
>
> Q. Yes.
>
> MR. CARY: Objection, Your Honor. I don't know what the relevance is. (COURT:) I'll allow it.
>
> THE WITNESS: I don't know what you're talking about.

Q. And your other personal credit card bills like Neiman Marcus or Nordstrom's?

A. I have no idea.

Q. Did she wrap your Christmas gifts and send gifts to your husband and family?

MR. CARY: Your Honor, objection.

THE WITNESS: I have no idea.

Tr. (Oct. 16, p.m.), at 27–29. Counsel later referred again to Mrs. Stevens's charge cards with Neiman Marcus and Nordstrom, mentioned that the Senator and Mrs. Stevens have since 2000 allegedly made hundreds of thousands of dollars a year, and inferred that the Stevenses could have afforded a personal assistant (also over defense counsel's objections). Id. at 34–39.

These questions bear absolutely no relevance to the offenses with which Senator Stevens was charged. See Fed. R. Evid. 401, 402. They obviously were designed to inflame the passions and prejudices of the jury against wealthy individuals. Further exacerbating the situation, in cross-examining Senator Stevens, the government later slipped in the $1.4 million purchase price of the Stevenses' D.C. home:

> Q. Now, in purchasing that home in 2005, you purchased it for a little over $1.4 million?

FBI - Stevens-4905

Tr. (Oct. 20, a.m.), at 97–98. Though this objection (unlike the prior ones) was sustained, the damage was done, and the government's strategy was transparent.

The government pursued a similar strategy when questioning both Senator Stevens and a character witness, Donna de Varona, about the employment and income of Senator Stevens's son, Ben Stevens. Ms. de Varona was questioned about whether she knew how much Ben Stevens was paid by the Special Olympics. Tr. (Oct. 15, a.m.), at 60–61. Senator Stevens was asked, apropos of nothing, whether Ben Stevens was "the same Ben Stevens who worked for the Special Olympics and got over $715,000 in consulting fees." Tr. (Oct. 20, a.m.), at 17–18. Neither Ben Stevens's employment by the Special Olympics nor the amount of his compensation related in any way to the issues before the jury. This was nothing more than a transparent attempt to inflame class prejudice and to cast the Stevens family as avaricious.

"[A]ppeals to class prejudice are highly improper and cannot be condoned and trial courts should ever be alert to prevent them." United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 239 (1940). "[S]uch appeals . . . have no place in a courtroom. . . ." United States v. Stahl, 616 F.2d 30, 33 (2d Cir. 1980) (finding prejudicial error in prosecutor's attempts at trial to incite class prejudice against wealthy defendant and remanding for a new trial). Specifically, "prosecutorial appeals to wealth and class biases can create prejudicial error, violating a defendant's right to due process of law under Fifth Amendment. . . [I]t is illogical and improper to equate financial success and affluence with greed and corruption." United States v. Jackson-Randolph, 282 F.3d 369, 376 (6th Cir. 2002).[8]

The government's blatant appeals to class prejudice were improper, and indeed, intolerable.

VI. THE GOVERNMENT'S CLOSING ARGUMENTS IMPROPERLY INTRODUCED EXTRAJUDICIAL STATEMENTS.

During closing arguments, counsel for the prosecution improperly introduced extrajudicial statements into the proceedings by informing the jurors of the opinions of "friends" who had heard the evidence and determined that Senator Stevens's defense was not credible.

During her rebuttal closing argument, Ms. Morris over defense objection referred to a "friend" who had allegedly heard Senator Stevens's testimony, considered the evidence, and determined that the Senator was lying.

> MS. MORRIS: I spoke to another friend of mine who heard the defendant's testimony on Friday, and what he told me about the defendant's testimony was that –
>
> MR. B. SULLIVAN: Objection.
> THE COURT: This is argument. It's not evidence.

discussion of defendants' wealth."); United States v. Cassese, 290 F. Supp. 2d 443, 457 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) (granting conditional motion for new trial under Rule 29(d) where government's theory "enabled the introduction of highly prejudicial and inflammatory evidence and arguments in front of the jury regarding Cassese's wealth, salary, and stock holdings. This evidence played into a bias against people of wealth."), aff'd on other grounds, 428 F.3d 92 (2d Cir. 2005); Silbergleit v. First Interstate Bank of Fargo, 37 F.3d 394, 398 (8th Cir. 1994) ("References to Silbergleit as a millionaire and to his receipt of unemployment compensation benefits were also highly prejudicial."); Sizemore v. Fletcher, 921 F.2d 667, 671 (6th Cir. 1990) (affirming writ of habeas corpus) ("Such appeals to class prejudice must not be tolerated in the courtroom. App. 1931)); United States v. Cooper, 286 F. Supp. 2d 1283, 1291 (D. Tr. (Oct. 21, p.m.), at 52–53.

In addition, the government referred to another unnamed "friend" who mocked Senator Stevens's testimony:

> MS. MORRIS: Now, I was thinking about this for awhile because I really do believe you just got to break this stuff down to its common denominator. Break it down to what is just – on its common sensical(Phonetic) terms. And I was talking to a friend, and he was telling me that this reminds him of his little six-year-old son. He likes to play hide-and-go-seek, but what he likes to do is he likes to cover his eyes and then keep one eye open, you know, looking through his fingers, and then when you say, hey, hey, I see you, he goes, no, no, no, I don't see you. I'm not looking. You know, you tell him he's cheating and then he starts laughing.

Tr. (Oct. 21, p.m.), at 51. These extrajudicial statements were intended to convince jurors that others in the jury's position – i.e., impartial observers who have weighed the evidence – believed that Senator Stevens is guilty and disbelieved his testimony.

"[T]he burden is on defendant to show prejudice, which at the outset is to be done by examination of the alleged illicit exposure in the full context of the trial." United States v. Williams-Davis, 90 F.3d 490, 502–03 (D.C. Cir. 1996). Here, the prejudice to Senator Stevens is apparent because the extrajudicial statements purportedly came from individuals who (a) witnessed or heard about Senator Stevens's testimony, and (b) believed the Senator was guilty. Worse than the usual extrajudicial statements cases – see United States v. Greer, 620 F.2d 1383, 1385 (10th Cir. 1980) (jurors had chatted with a marshal about the defendant's possible sentencing and expungement of conviction; new trial ordered); Stockton v. Virginia, 852 F.2d 740, 743 (4th Cir. 1988) (owner of diner at which the jurors were lunching during deliberations told jurors "they ought to fry the son of a bitch"; sentence vacated) – in this case the government itself introduced the prejudicial extrajudicial statements. The government declined to identify the "friends" who made the statements, but it implied that they were impartial observers whose opinions were worthy of consideration. Finally, these extrajudicial statements occurred in the government's rebuttal closing and were among the last things the jury heard before retiring. These impermissible, prejudicial statements warrant a new trial.

VII. THE GOVERNMENT'S MULTIPLE INSTANCES OF MISCONDUCT WARRANTED A NEW TRIAL.

As the Court recognized during the trial, the government engaged in severe and intentional misconduct, including: (i) knowingly presenting false evidence to the jury in the form of VECO's accounting records; (ii) intentionally concealing critical exculpatory statements by the government's star witness, Bill Allen; and (iii) intentionally withholding critical evidence from the defense about the Mustang-Land Rover transaction and then using it to rehabilitate Mr. Allen on redirect examination. In addition, the conclusion is now unmistakable that the government (iv) elicited fabricated testimony by Mr. Allen about his alleged "CYA" conversation with Mr. Persons, which the government must have known to be false.

The Court endeavored to assure a fair and speedy trial, but defense counsel were forced nonetheless to spend hundreds of hours attempting to deal with government misconduct. As each instance of misconduct came to light, the Court attempted to deal fairly and promptly with the issues without unduly delaying the trial. It is apparent, however, that the government's repeated and intentional misconduct violated the Senator's constitutional rights and severely prejudiced him at trial. There can be no confidence in the verdict, and a new trial is warranted.[9]

The government's misconduct violated at least two separate constitutional rules, either of which requires a new trial. First, the Due Process Clause forbids the government from introducing or failing to correct testimony that it knows or reasonably should know to be false. Napue v. Illinois, 360 U.S. 264, 269 (1959) (noting "[t]he principle that a State may not knowingly use false evidence, including false testimony, to obtain a tainted conviction, implicit in any concept of ordered liberty"); Giglio v. United States, 405 U.S. 150 (1972); United States v. Iverson, 637 F.2d 799, 801 (D.C. Cir. 1980).

"Because the integrity of our justice system relies on the presentation of truthful evidence for a jury to evaluate, 'the prosecution's knowing use of false testimony entails a veritable hair trigger for setting aside the conviction.'" United States v. Quinn, 537 F. Supp. 2d 99, 120 (D.D.C. 2008) (Bates, J.) (quoting United States v. Gale, 314 F.3d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 2003)). Accordingly, "Napue sets forth a very defense-friendly standard. A defendant need only show that false testimony was presented at trial, that the government knew, or should have known, that the testimony was false, and that there is a reasonable likelihood that the false testimony could have affected the judgment of the jury." Id. See also United States v. Williams, 233 F.3d 592, 594 (D.C. Cir. 2000) ("[t]he phrases – 'reasonable likelihood,' 'could have affected' – 'mandate a virtual automatic reversal of a criminal conviction") (quotation omitted).

Second, under Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83, 87 (1963), "suppression of material evidence justifies a new trial irrespective of the good faith or bad faith of the prosecution." Giglio, 405 U.S. at 153 (internal quotations omitted)); United States v. Andrews, 532 F.3d 900, 905 (D.C. Cir. 2008) ("If the undisclosed evidence is material, a new trial is required.") (citing Kyles v. Whitley, 514 U.S. 419 (1995)); Virgin Islands v. Fahie, 419 F.3d 249, 252 (3d Cir. 2005) ("[T]he Court has assumed that Brady violations that have affected the judgment of a jury normally will be remedied by a new trial . . . ."); In re Sealed Case No. 99-3096, 185 F.3d 887, 892 (D.C. Cir. 1999) ("If the undisclosed evidence is material, a new trial is required.").

"Evidence is material if 'the undisclosed information could have substantially affected the efforts of defense counsel to impeach the witness, thereby calling into question the fairness of the ultimate verdict.'" United States v. Cuffie, 80 F.3d 514, 517 (D.C. Cir. 1996) (quoting United States v. Smith, 77 F.3d 511, 515 (D.C. Cir. 1996)). "The question is not whether the defendant would more likely than not have received a different verdict with the evidence, but whether in its absence he received a fair trial, understood as a trial resulting in a verdict worthy of confidence." Kyles, 514 U.S. at 434.

In Quinn, Judge Bates earlier this year granted a defendant's Rule 33 motion for a new trial on the ground that the prosecutors had withheld material evidence in violation of Brady. The court ordered a new trial because, after a review of the trial record, it had "grave concerns about the fairness of the proceedings and determine[d] that defendant Quinn did not receive a verdict worthy of confidence." 537 F. Supp. 2d at103.

The same result is appropriate here. The details of the government's misconduct are well known to the Court and will be summarized only briefly. For a more detailed recital of the facts, we refer the Court to Docket Numbers 103, 114, 126, 130, 137, and 142.

A. Knowing Presentation of False Evidence.

In an attempt to prove that Senator Stevens knew the Girdwood renovations were worth more than the $160,000+ that the Stevens family paid, the government presented evidence at trial, in the form of VECO's internal accounting records, that VECO had incurred over $188,000 in unreimbursed labor and material costs. A substantial portion of these costs, if the records were to be believed, was composed of hours worked by two VECO employees, Robert "Rocky" Williams and David Anderson, whom the VECO accounting records portray as working virtually full time on the renovation project throughout its duration.

What the defense did not know – but the government did – at the time the government introduced the VECO accounting records at trial was that Mr. Williams and Mr. Anderson had not worked anywhere near the amount of time on the project that the VECO accounting records reflect. Mr. Williams had told the government, and testified to an Anchorage grand jury, see Grand Jury Tr. (Nov. 7, 2006), at 29–30, that he worked approximately 24 hours per week on the Girdwood project, while the VECO accounting records show him working an average of 60–70 hours per week. Even more remarkably, Mr. Anderson had testified to the Anchorage grand jury that he was in Portland, Oregon during a 2 to 3 month period when the VECO accounting records show him working nearly full time on the project in Girdwood, Alaska. Grand Jury Tr. (Dec. 7, 2006), at 82–83. Three members of the prosecution team were in attendance when Mr. Williams and Mr. Anderson testified before the Anchorage grand jury, and they clearly knew that the VECO accounting records were false. Cover, Grand Jury Tr. (Nov. 7, 2006); Cover, Grand Jury Tr. (Dec. 7, 2006). Yet these same prosecutors presented the false records to the jury at trial as supposedly "reliable" business records under the business records exception to the hearsay rule.

In a clear violation of the Due Process Clause, the prosecution team never informed counsel for Senator Stevens of the fundamental unreliability of the government's evidence. On the contrary, the government took affirmative steps to conceal this information by denying the defense access to Mr. Williams and Mr. Anderson. Mr. Williams, while under a defense subpoena, was in Washington, D.C. for the two weeks prior to trial, but the government sent him back to Alaska on the day of opening statements – the same day the lead prosecutor emphasized to the jury the importance of the VECO accounting records and the $188,000 figure. While government counsel claim they sent Mr. Williams 3,300 miles home to receive medical attention (which apparently was unavailable in our Nation's Capital), the prosecutors instructed Mr. Williams to call defense counsel to discuss his obligations under the defense subpoena only after he got back to Alaska. Similarly, Mr. Anderson was in D.C. in preparation for his testimony, but the government affirmatively refused to disclose his whereabouts or make him available for a defense subpoena until after the Court criticized its conduct with regard to Mr. Williams.

Based on the above information, the Court specifically concluded that the prosecution team had knowingly presented false evidence of VECO's costs relating to the renovations.

> THE COURT: The government knew that Anderson had taken an oath before the grand jury and said, I'm in Portland. I was in Portland during those two or three months. The government reread the records, though, because you did circle the records. Someone circled them. So you know, these are the records. VECO spent a hundred-and-eighty-thousand, plus these are the records. Anderson was there. Williams was there. And all along the government knew that was a lie.

Tr. (Oct. 8, p.m.), at 54 (emphasis added); see also id. at 89.

B. Concealing and Manufacturing Information.

The prosecution team also concealed highly material, exculpatory information from the defense regarding prior statements by the government's star witness, Bill J. Allen. The most critical issue in the trial was Senator Stevens's knowledge and intent regarding the allegedly unpaid home renovations. Unbeknownst to the defense, Bill Allen had for nearly two years told prosecutors that he believed Senator Stevens would have paid bills relating to the renovations if they had been sent to him. Two interview memoranda contain such statements from Allen:

> — "If Rocky Williams or Dave Anderson had invoiced Ted or Catherine Stevens for VECO's work, BILL ALLEN believes they would have paid the bill." Memorandum of Interview (Dec. 11-12, 2006), at 9 (emphasis added); Tr. (Oct. 2, a.m.), at 4.
>
> — "The source [Allen] did not invoice STEVENS for the work that [VECO engineer John] Hess performed; however, the source believes that STEVENS would have paid an invoice if he had received one." Form 302 Interview Memorandum (Mar. 1, 2007), at 2 (emphasis added); Tr. (Oct. 2, a.m.), at 4.

Despite multiple Brady requests, this information was not provided to the defense. Instead, on September 9, 2008, one day before the Court was to hear argument on Senator Stevens's Brady motion, the government re-interviewed Allen by telephone and procured a contrary statement that Senator Stevens would not have paid a VECO bill because it would have been too high. The government that same day sent the defense a purported Brady letter revealing only the new, inculpatory statement and not the prior exculpatory ones.

> — "Allen stated that he believed that defendant would not have paid the actual costs incurred by VECO, even if Allen had sent defendant an invoice, because defendant would not have wanted to pay that high of a bill. Allen stated that defendant probably would have paid a reduced invoice if he had received one from Allen or VECO." Letter from Brenda K. Morris to Alex G. Romain (Sept. 9, 2008) ("Sept. 9 Letter"), at 3, ¶ 17(c).

One week later, on September 16, over the government's vehement objections, the Court ordered the government to produce all Form 302s containing exculpatory information by the next day, September 17. See Tr. (Sept. 16), at 30. On the same day as the hearing, September 16, an FBI agent assigned to this case prepared a Form 302 memorandum reporting on the Allen re-interview of September 9. The Form 302 recited nearly verbatim the very inculpatory statement that had been disclosed to the defense one week earlier, in the government's letter of September 9. The Form 302 reflects that this was the only topic of the September 9 telephone interview.

On September 17, in apparent compliance with the Court's order, the government produced Form 302s purporting to contain all of its Brady material. On the subject of whether Senator Stevens would have paid the bills, the government produced only the new inculpatory statement in its September 16 memorandum and not the two prior exculpatory statements that directly contradicted it. Indeed, one of those prior statements (the one relating to John Hess) was affirmatively redacted from the Form 302 that was provided to the defense; the interview memorandum containing the other statement was simply not provided to the defense at all.

The conclusion is unmistakable. The government intentionally chose to suppress the critical exculpatory information that Bill Allen believed Senator Stevens would have paid VECO bills if they had been sent. The government did so by procuring a new and inconsistent statement from Mr. Allen on the eve of producing Brady material, and then turning over to the defense only the newly created, inculpatory statement while affirmatively redacting and withholding the earlier, exculpatory statements. The government concealed material information, apparently manufactured new information that better suited its theory of the case, and then sought to cover up what it had done.

The Court rejected the government's excuse that the undisclosed information was "cumulative":

> THE COURT: All right. So someone made a conscious effort to shade that information and keep defense counsel from learning of it, and I just reject the answer that that was done because that person believed that the favorable information had already been disclosed to the defendant.

Tr. (Oct. 2, p.m.), at 28.

C. Withholding Critical Evidence and Springing It on the Defense at Trial.

The indictment charged Senator Stevens with concealing a favorable automobile trade in which he received a 1999 Land Rover from Bill Allen in exchange for a 1964½ Mustang and $5,000 ("Mustang transaction"). Rule 16(a)(1)(E) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure obligated the government to produce to defendant prior to trial any documents material to the preparation of his defense.

In opening statements, counsel for the government told the jury that the Mustang transaction was a "sweetheart deal" for the Senator because the Land Rover "was worth $44,000," substantially more than the value of the Mustang. Tr. (Sept. 26, a.m.), at 32, 44. Bill Allen testified to the $44,000 figure on direct examination. Tr. (Sept. 30, p.m.), at 81. On cross-examination, defense counsel inquired at length about the alleged $44,000 price tag and introduced a business record, DX 4001, showing the dealer invoice price for the Land Rover as $37,515. Id. at 53–54. Mr. Allen agreed that he understood the $37,000 figure to represent the dealer price for the specific car he purchased. Id. at 54.

On re-direct examination, government counsel revealed for the first time – and simultaneously to the defendant and his counsel, the Court, and the jury – a check in the amount of $44,339.51 that purported to be evidence of Mr. Allen's payment for the 1999 Land Rover. Tr. (Oct. 7, a.m.), at 87–88; GX 1122. Defense counsel had never seen this check, and after reviewing the government's discovery productions, it became apparent that the check was never produced in discovery. Upon the Court's questioning, government counsel admitted that they had long possessed the check and yet had decided not to produce it to the defense. Tr. (Oct. 8, p.m.), at 26–29. The Court found that the government had intentionally violated the discovery rules and, as a sanction, struck the evidence of the Mustang Transaction.

Although striking the evidence was necessary, it was not sufficient to cure the prejudice to Senator Stevens. The government's use of this undisclosed check unfairly undermined defense counsel's cross-examination of Mr. Allen and bolstered the credibility of the government's most critical witness. Had the check been disclosed prior to trial, the defense never would have conducted this cross-examination or provided this opportunity to the government. The jury was thus left with a more favorable impression of Mr. Allen's testimony across the board, not merely regarding the Mustang transaction. A new trial is required to cure this prejudice.

D. Presenting Mr. Allen's False, Recently Fabricated Testimony.

The prosecution team's misconduct runs much deeper than what it has admitted and what the Court previously found. Bill Allen's most critical testimony, which the prosecutors intentionally elicited, was demonstrably false, and the prosecution team must have known that. The following facts prove the point and warrant a new trial.

The government's theory at trial – that Senator Stevens had no intention of paying for work performed – was directly at odds with (a) the over $160,000 his family paid for the renovations, and (b) the Senator's repeated written and oral requests to Bill Allen, in which Senator Stevens demanded bills for the work performed and, in one instance, reminded Allen of the Senate Ethics Rules. The heart of the defense was Government Exhibit 495, a handwritten note from Senator Stevens to Mr. Allen:

> Dear Bill –
>
> When I think of the many ways in which you make my life easier and more enjoyable, I lose count!
>
> Thanks for all the work on the chalet. You owe me a bill – remember Torricelli, my friend. Friendship is one thing – compliance with these ethics rules entirely different. I asked Bob P[ersons] to talk to you about this so don't get P.O.'d at him – it just has to be done right.
>
> Hope to see you soon.
>
> My best,
>
> Ted

To overcome this exculpatory evidence, the government dramatically elicited the following testimony from Mr. Allen:

> Q: . . . Did you send Senator Stevens a bill or an invoice after you received this note from him?

FBI - Stevens-4917

A: No.

* * * *

Q: Mr. Allen, do you remember having a conversation with Mr. Persons after you got the note from Senator Stevens?

A: Yes.

Q: What did Mr. Persons tell you?

A: He said oh, [B]ill, don't worry about getting a bill. He said, Ted is just covering his ass. . . .

Tr. (Oct. 1, a.m.), at 51–52. With this bombshell, the government sought not only to erase Senator Stevens's repeated requests for bills, but also to transform these exculpatory requests, particularly Government Exhibit 495, into further evidence of a scheme to deceive the Senate Ethics Committee.

It is readily apparent that Bill Allen's testimony was false – and that the government must have known that it was false. First, Mr. Allen was interviewed by government agents on more than 20 separate occasions, from the date of his initial contact and agreement to cooperate, August 30, 2006, through at least September 9, 2008 – two weeks before trial. More than 50 government memoranda (including FBI Form 302s and IRS Memoranda of Interview) relating to Mr. Allen were eventually provided to the defense during the trial pursuant to court order. Not one of these memoranda references this purported comment from Bob Persons, or even hints at the existence of such a conversation. On the contrary, as detailed in section B, above, the memoranda provide that Mr. Allen stated that Senator Stevens would have paid the bills.

Second, even as late as September 9, 2008 – a mere two weeks before trial – Mr. Allen provided the FBI with three reasons why he did not send the requested bills to Senator Stevens. None of these reasons had anything to do with the purported comment from Bob Persons or Mr.

FBI - Stevens-4918

Allen's supposed belief that Senator Stevens was "just covering his ass." Instead, Mr. Allen explained that he did not send Senator Stevens the requested invoices because: (1) he "wasn't sure how to produce an invoice"; (2) he "felt that VECO's costs were higher than they needed to be"; and (3) he "simply wanted to do the work for Stevens." FBI Form FD-1023 (memorializing 9/9/08 telephonic interview).

Third, the government actually had to prod Mr. Allen to remember this fabrication during his trial testimony. On direct examination, the government showed Mr. Allen yet another letter from Senator Stevens to Mr. Allen requesting a bill for work done on his home. When asked why he did not send Senator Stevens a bill after receiving this follow-up letter, Mr. Allen responded "I don't know why." Tr. (Oct. 1, a.m.), at 66. Only after being reminded by the government of his alleged "CYA" conversation with Mr. Persons did Mr. Allen alter his recollection to state that he had not sent a bill "[b]ecause I had talked to Bob Person[s] before this but I thought, well, it's the same thing, you know." Id. at 67.

Mr. Allen's testimonial about-face is powerful evidence that the "CYA" conversation never happened. Indeed, it is so powerful that the prosecution team spuriously attempted to prevent the jury from hearing it during the defense's closing argument. The night before closings, the government filed a frivolous motion to prevent counsel from reading portions of transcripts to the jury. See Dkt. 206. This motion was bereft of legal support and utterly vexatious. The Court properly denied the motion. Yet when defense counsel in closing began reading the transcript of Mr. Allen forgetting, then remembering, the fabricated "CYA" conversation, government counsel interrupted the closing argument for a bench conference to repeat its meritless objection to defense counsel's reading Mr. Allen's testimony to the jury. Tr. (Oct. 21, p.m.), at 9–11.

FBI - Stevens-4919

Fourth, although the government relied heavily on this hearsay statement of Bob Persons, it never once asked Mr. Persons whether he made that statement to Mr. Allen. The government had ample opportunity to ask Mr. Persons about this, having questioned him on five separate occasions between August 31, 2006 and June 1, 2007, including two days worth of grand jury testimony and three interviews. When questioned at trial, Mr. Persons adamantly denied ever having made the "CYA" statement, and reasserted that the government never asked him whether he had made it.[10] Tr. (Oct. 15, p.m.), at 44. No lawyer acting in good faith could have failed to make such an inquiry of Mr. Persons before putting this hearsay statement into evidence through the testimony of a convicted felon. The government lawyers in this case are highly experienced. They have access to many FBI and IRS personnel. They had five separate opportunities to ask Mr. Persons this question face to face. They had additional opportunities to speak with Mr. Persons's counsel and ask him to inquire of his client whether he made the "CYA" statement. Had an inquiry been made, it need only have consisted of one simple question: "Did you tell Bill Allen that Ted Stevens was 'just covering his ass?'" That this question was never asked demonstrates the government's eagerness to make use of Mr. Allen's fabricated testimony on this central issue in the case, even though that testimony was obviously false.

E. The Government's Misconduct Was Prejudicial to the Defense.

The government's conduct was not only grievously wrongful, it was severely prejudicial to Senator Stevens. The defense devoted enormous time and resources to its trial preparation based on the presumption – which it was entitled to make – that the government understood its constitutional obligations to refrain from presenting false evidence and to disclose evidence as [10] Similarly, Senator Stevens testified that he never made any statements to Bob Persons that could have led Mr. Persons to believe that he was "just covering his ass." Tr. (Oct. 17, a.m.), at 61.

FBI - Stevens-4920

required by the Due Process Clause, the discovery rules, and the Court's orders. By the time the government's multiple violations became apparent, the defense had already suffered irreparable prejudice due to the government's misconduct. And, while the Court attempted to mitigate the prejudice to defendants by means short of a dismissal or mistrial, its remedies did not suffice to cure that prejudice.

1. The VECO accounting records

Before evidence demonstrating the falsity of VECO's internal billing records came to light, the jury had already heard repeated references to these records and the $188,000 worth of unpaid labor and material costs they supposedly reflected. Significantly, in opening, the government told the jury that "VECO kept track of most of the costs right down to the penny," that "VECO's portion of the work during this period of time and VECO's cost totaled more than $188,000," and that "VECO never got a dime, much less $188,000 as its internal records reflect." Tr. (Sept. 25, a.m.), at 42–43.

The Court's attempts to rectify the government's wrongdoing short of a mistrial were insufficient. Allowing the defense to re-call Cheryl Boomershine was ineffective because she lacked personal knowledge of the information contained in the accounting records. See Tr. (Sept. 29, a.m.), at 49–65. The witness therefore could not testify to the critical facts known to everyone in the courtroom except the jury: that the records contained false information that the government knowingly proffered. Striking "the portions of VECO's accounting records that contain the time records for [David Anderson and Rocky Williams]," along with Ms. Boomershine's testimony "as it relates to Mr. Anderson's and Mr. Williams' timesheets," Tr. (Oct. 9, p.m.), at 62–63, was also an ineffective remedy. Not only were the records redacted in an impermissible fashion, see Section I.B, supra, but the Court's instruction forbade the jurors from allowing the stricken portions of GX 177 to affect their judgment about the reliability of the remaining portions of GX 177.[11] Thus, the Court took away the jury's ability to evaluate the trustworthiness of GX 177, or any other evidence presented by the government, on the basis that portions of that exhibit were demonstrably false and the government knew it. The Court also allowed the government to soften the blow of the stricken evidence by reopening its case to call David Anderson to testify about the work he had done on the Senator's house.

Finally, the Court's admonition to the defense before – and its rulings during – closing argument hamstrung the defense's ability to argue the unreliability of the time records to the jury. Before the defense closing even began, the government raised the issue of the stricken VECO records, stating that it "want[ed] to make sure that counsel is not intending to argue that or to address it at all in his closing." Tr. (Oct. 21, a.m.), at 7. The Court responded:

> I had that concern, but I don't think the reason for the striking should be mentioned. I've already imposed a sanction. I've told them. I struck the evidence and I'm giving an instruction. I think the least said about that the better, and, you know, hint to counsel, advice to counsel: You get too far off I'm going to cut you off. I don't think it's appropriate to resurrect that instruction at all."

[11] The relevant portion of the instruction given to the jury was as follows:

> The government had an obligation to provide certain information to the defendant, and it did not do so. As a result, I am striking the testimony and evidence regarding two matters that you heard testimony about.

Tr. (Oct. 9, p.m.), at 62–63.

Id. This ruling unquestionably chilled the portion of Defendant's closing that discussed the VECO records. Indeed, when defense counsel suggested that the redacted exhibit was "phony" and should be given no weight, the Court sua sponte interrupted that argument. Id. at 97–98.[12]

In sum, after the Court struck portions of the VECO accounting records because they were shown to be false – a remedy which was itself insufficient to cure the prejudice that had already been created – the jury was encouraged to accept the remainder of those records and the defense was prevented from informing the jury of their falsity and unreliability.

2. Bill Allen's exculpatory statements

When the government's intentional concealment of Bill Allen's statements came to light, the Court declined to declare a mistrial, principally on the theory that the defense could still use the information to cross-examine Mr. Allen. This remedy was insufficient in theory and illusory in practice. First, the defense had already prepared for weeks to cross-examine Mr. Allen, and had given its opening statement, without knowing this critical information. Second, the government's misconduct came to light at a crucial juncture in the trial, interrupting the proceedings for days while the government's most powerful piece of evidence lingered in the jurors' minds, see Tr. (Oct. 2, a.m.), at 22–23, 31; Tr. (Oct. 2, p.m.), at 10–11.

Third, the Court's expressed confidence that the defense could effectively cross-examine Mr. Allen about the newly disclosed information, Tr. (Oct. 2, p.m.), at 12, 16, 50; Tr (Oct. 2, a.m.), at 22, 30, proved incorrect. Indeed, the defense's cross-examination on this subject was interrupted by a string of frivolous objections by government counsel. See Tr. (Oct. 6, p.m.), at [12] "THE COURT: Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, let me instruct you that the blacked out portions are redactions pursuant to Court order."

70–78.[13] Most notably, when Mr. Allen claimed he could not remember what he had told the government in the prior interviews, the government objected to the defense's use of FBI and IRS interview memoranda to refresh his recollection. Id. at 71–72. The Court initially sustained that objection and, by the time it later held that "essentially, any document can be used to refresh recollection, whether it was prepared by the person being examined or not," id. at 96, it was too late – the relevant portion of the cross-examination had concluded.

3. Previously undisclosed check

As described above, the Court's remedy of striking the evidence of the Mustang transaction did not cure the prejudice created by the government's intentional concealment of the $44,000 check. By its misconduct, the government was able to bolster Mr. Allen's credibility in the face of a critical attack by the defense. Had the government not intentionally flouted its discovery obligations, the defense never would have given the government an opportunity to enhance its key witness's credibility (and destroy the defense's credibility) in this manner.

4. Mr. Allen's false "CYA" testimony

The false "CYA" testimony was the most critical piece of government evidence at trial. It unquestionably was prejudicial to the defense.

* * * * *

In summary, the government's misconduct was intentional, it was prejudicial, and it was not cured at trial. A new trial, at a minimum, is required.

F. David Anderson's Allegations of Government Misconduct.

After trial, government witness David Anderson sent a letter to the Court, dated November 15, 2008, making startling allegations of government misconduct. Among other [13] This line of questioning was also tainted by Mr. Allen's attorney's signaling of answers to his client. Tr. (Oct. 6, p.m.), at 76.

FBI - Stevens-4924

things, Mr. Anderson accuses government counsel of suborning perjury and making intentionally false statements in disclosures to defense counsel. In a separate motion filed on November 21, Senator Stevens has requested that the Court (a) permit the defense to take discovery into Mr. Anderson's allegations and (b) schedule an evidentiary hearing to consider those allegations and to determine what remedies may be appropriate. See Dkt. 241.

If a hearing confirms Mr. Anderson's allegations, a new trial – at a minimum – will be warranted. For example, the allegations in Mr. Anderson's letter suggest that the government intentionally suborned perjury by knowingly soliciting statements that were not true while "instructing" him how to "get it swept under the rug during the trial." Such conduct would violate the clear constitutional proscription against knowing presentation of false evidence. See United States v. Iverson, 637 F.2d 799, 801 (D.C. Cir. 1980); Giglio v. United States, 405 U.S. 150 (1972); Napue v. Illinois, 360 U.S. 264, 269-70 (1959). Mr. Anderson's letter also indicates that the government withheld critical exculpatory evidence from the defense – his continued belief that the government had made an agreement with him to protect him from prosecution in exchange for his testimony – that could have been used to impeach his testimony, and indeed that the government lied about this evidence in its September 9 Brady letter to defense counsel. This too would be a flagrant constitutional violation. See Giglio, supra; United States v. Chapman, 524 F.3d 1073 (9th Cir. 2008).

VIII. SENATOR STEVENS WAS UNFAIRLY PREJUDICED BY THE GOVERNMENT'S USE AND EXPLOITATION OF A VAGUE INDICTMENT.

Senator Stevens moved pre-trial to dismiss the indictment for vagueness, or, in the alternative, to require the government to provide the Senator with a bill of particulars, on the ground that the indictment failed to provide the necessary information he needed to mount an adequate defense. Although the indictment repeatedly alleges that Senator Stevens failed to disclose "things of value," it largely fails to identify them. Additionally, the indictment fails to identify whether the things of value were "gifts" or "liabilities." This distinction is crucial, because the monetary threshold for disclosure ranges from a few hundred dollars for gifts, to $10,000 for liabilities.

The Court denied Senator Stevens's motions, agreeing with the government that the indictment sufficiently apprised the Senator of the charges against him. Tr. (Sept. 10), at 78. But as the trial progressed, it became abundantly clear that the indictment did not sufficiently inform him of (1) the items he was accused of receiving but for which he had not settled payment, or (2) the government's characterization of those items (i.e., whether they were alleged to be gifts or liabilities).

First, the government introduced evidence of some alleged "gifts" – guns, gift bags, and a boxing bag – that were not charged in the indictment, as even the government eventually conceded. See Dkt. 170; Tr. (Oct. 18), at 5 ("[I]t's just testimony that's really neither here nor there."); Minute Order granting Senator Steven's Motion To Strike Evidence of Uncharged Alleged Gifts (Oct. 19, 2008). Though the Court ultimately instructed the jury to disregard this highly prejudicial material, the damage was done; the evidence could not be erased from the jurors' minds.

Second, the government introduced evidence of other alleged gifts – the fish statue, the stained glass, and the Brookstone chair – that it contends were charged in the indictment based on its vague terms. Under the government's reading of the indictment, the fish statue is charged in Count III as a "thing of value" from "others"; and the stained glass and the chair are charged in Count II as unspecified gifts from "Person B" and "Person A," respectively. Indictment ¶ 52.[14]

The Constitution and the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure require that an indictment set forth the elements of the offense charged and enough facts to inform the defendant of the nature of the charges. See, e.g., Hamling v. United States, 418 U.S. 87, 117–18 (1974); United States v. Christopher, 700 F.2d 1253, 1257 (9th Cir. 1983). Specifically, the Fifth and Sixth Amendments require that an indictment allege the charges against the defendant with sufficient particularity to "ensure that the prosecution will not fill in elements of its case with facts other than those considered by the grand jury." United States v. Upton, 856 F. Supp. 727, 738 (E.D.N.Y. 1994) (quotations omitted). A vague indictment "requires the defendant to go to trial with the chief issue undefined. It enables his conviction to rest on one point and the affirmance of the conviction to rest on another. It gives the prosecution free hand on appeal to fill in the gaps of proof by surmise or conjecture." Russell v. United States, 369 U.S. 749, 766 (1962).

Rule 7(f) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure authorizes courts to order the government to provide a bill of particulars. "The purpose of a bill of particulars is to apprise the defendant of the charges lodged against him and of the essential facts of the crime." United States v. Espy, 989 F. Supp. 17, 34 (D.D.C. 1997) (emphasis added), aff'd in part, rev'd on other grounds, 145 F.3d 1369 (D.C. Cir. 1998). It is also well-established that a bill of particulars should be ordered to prevent unfair surprise at trial. See, e.g., McMullen v. United States, 96 F.2d 574, 579 (D.C. Cir. 1938).

These Constitutional and procedural concerns came to fruition in this case. The government procured an indictment that did not specify the alleged gifts (or, perhaps, liabilities)

---

[14] The government disclosed the identities of Person A and Person B pretrial, but did not that are the basis for the false statement charges. It would have been simple enough to inform Senator Stevens: "You are charged with failing to disclose as gifts a fish statue, a chair and a piece of stained glass." And had the indictment been sufficiently detailed to inform the defendant of what specifically he was charged with failing to disclose, he would also have been "informed," by their omission, that the boxing bag, guns, and gifts bags were not charged. Instead, the government selected a hide-the-ball strategy in an effort to obscure from the defense the nature of the charges.

The government's vague indictment resulted in surprise and prejudice to Senator Stevens at trial. See Barger v. Indiana, 991 F.2d 394, 397 (7th Cir. 1993); United States v. Cain, 487 F.3d 1108, 1113 (8th Cir. 2007). The chair, the fish statue and the stained glass received significant emphasis in the government's case and in closing argument. Obviously the government knew prior to trial that it would focus on these items, but the defense was not given adequate notice. The government further exploited the vagueness of the indictment and distracted his defense by introducing evidence of the guns, gift bags and boxing bag – evidence that it knew was not even charged in the indictment. As a result, the trial was fundamentally unfair, and a new trial should be ordered.

IX. THE COURT ERRED IN ADMITTING RULE 404(b) EVIDENCE THAT WAS UNFAIRLY PREJUDICIAL.

The government's case prominently featured uncharged conduct that unfairly prejudiced Senator Stevens: evidence that the Senator received a generator from Bill Allen and VECO; evidence that VECO provided employment to one of the Senator's sons and employment training to his grandson; and evidence of payments to another son of the Senator. This evidence should not have been admitted, and a new trial is warranted.

identify the alleged gifts.

FBI - Stevens-4928

A. The Generator Evidence.

The generator was among the most highly touted items in the government's evidence and arguments. Indeed, one who sat through the trial without reading the indictment would have been astonished to learn that Senator Stevens was not charged with an offense based on the generator. Instead, it was noticed and initially admitted as "intrinsic" or alternatively as Rule 404(b) evidence, over the Senator's objections. Tr. (Sept. 26, a.m.), at 5. On October 18, 2008, counsel for the government withdrew its argument that the generator evidence was "intrinsic" to the charged offenses. Tr. (Oct. 18, 2008), at 8.[15] Accordingly, the only question is whether the generator evidence was properly admitted under Rules 404(b) and 403.[16]

Notably, admission under Rule 404(b) is limited by other rules of evidence, including Rule 403 which prohibits the introduction of evidence whose probative value is substantially outweighed by its potential prejudice. United States v. Washington, 969 F.2d 1073, 1080–81 (D.C. Cir. 1992); see also United States v. Long, 328 F.3d 655, 662 (D.C. Cir. 2003) ("admission for a proper purpose under Rule 404(b) does not end the inquiry, because Rule 403 has an independent role to play."). Here, the evidence regarding the generator had little or no probative value, as Senator Stevens's receipt of an item in 1999 does not establish his intent with regard to different items in later years. And in any event, the prejudicial effect of the evidence far outweighs any arguable probative value.

[15] "THE COURT: What do you mean when you say the words – you say it's intrinsic, meaning what? MR. MARSH: Meaning it's part of the conduct that's – We'll withdraw it. It can go in 404(b)." Tr. (Oct. 18), at 18.

[16] The government was correct not to argue for admission of the generator evidence as "intrinsic." Particularly after the Court struck evidence of the Mustang transaction as a sanction for the government's discovery violations, there was no evidence of a "scheme" dating back to 1999 to which the generator possibly could have been intrinsic. See Dkt. 182, 189. Even if the Mustang evidence had not been stricken, the generator evidence was not intrinsic to the alleged scheme. See Dkt. 33, 45.

FBI - Stevens-4929

"The intent of Rule 404(b) is to prevent the admission of evidence of other crimes for the purpose of demonstrating the bad character of the defendant by prejudicially revealing bad acts that have no evidentiary consequence to the criminal charges at issue." United States v. Gray, 292 F. Supp. 2d 71, 77 (D.D.C. 2003). The generator evidence invited the jury to conclude that, because Senator Stevens allegedly received an improper gift on one occasion, he must have received and failed to report other such gifts. This is exactly what Rule 404(b) forbids.

In addition, the generator evidence likely confused the jury to conclude that it was among the things of value for which Senator Stevens was charged. Two of the government's first three witnesses focused almost exclusively on the generator, and the generator was mentioned many times throughout the government's case. Under these circumstances, it is impossible to conclude that the jury understood that it could not convict Senator Stevens based on the generator.

B. The Evidence Relating to Walter Stevens and John Peter Covich.

In addition to the generator, the government also introduced, over objection, uncharged evidence concerning employment benefits VECO allegedly provided to Walter Stevens, the Senator's son, and John Peter Covich, the Senator's grandson. This evidence was irrelevant and unfairly prejudicial. Fed. R. Evid. 401, 402, 403.

Senator Stevens was charged with improperly receiving and failing to report certain gifts or liabilities. The relevant reporting rules required the Senator to report gifts and liabilities received or incurred by the Senator, his wife, or any minor child. See GX 884. It is undisputed that any gifts or liabilities received or incurred by either Walter Stevens, the Senator's adult son, or John Peter Covich, the Senator's grandson, would not have triggered a reporting obligation during the relevant time period, even if the government's allegations were true. As such, these acts were probative of no element of any of the charged offenses and their admission only served to compel a defense against unfounded suggestions of impropriety that played upon the most base assumptions and prejudices that citizens often have of their elected officials.[17]

A new trial is appropriate when the defendant is prejudiced by introduction of improper evidence pursuant to Rule 404(b). See United States v. Foskey, 636 F.2d 517, 526 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (The [404(b)] evidence [] was not relevant to any issue in the case, was extremely prejudicial because it tended to prove only the defendant's criminal predisposition, and was not even necessary to prove the prosecution's case. We therefore hold that the evidence was inadmissible under both Rules 404(b) and 403. . . . Because we hold that admitting the evidence of the prior arrest was prejudicial error, we reverse appellant's conviction and remand for a new trial.")). Similarly here, because this extremely prejudicial evidence should not have been admitted, a new trial is appropriate.

C. Evidence Relating to Ben Stevens

Although the government never provided the defense with notice that it would introduce Rule 404(b) evidence relating to Ben Stevens, it nevertheless attempted to do just that.

During the government's cross-examination of character witness Donna de Varona, the government – over repeated defense objections – was permitted to ask Ms. de Varona about significant sums Ben Stevens allegedly received as the Executive Director for the 2000 Winter Special Olympics held in Anchorage and as a consultant to the National Special Olympics thereafter. Tr. (Oct. 15, a.m.), at 60–61. The prosecution pursued a similar line of questioning

---

[17] Indeed, the government was so anxious to offer evidence of VECO's alleged largesse to Senator Stevens's family that it improperly introduced the testimony through a witness with no personal knowledge. Government witness Cheryl Boomershine identified John Peter Covich as Senator Stevens's relative in response to a leading question lacking foundation. After a defense objection to the question, it transpired that Ms. Boomershine did not know that John Peter Covich was related to the Senator. Tr. (Sept. 26, p.m.), at 49–51.

FBI - Stevens-4931

during its cross-examination of Senator Stevens, inquiring about Ben Stevens's work for both VECO and the Special Olympics:

> Q. Now, sir, directing your attention to that e-mail, when it says "Ben and Elizabeth," it's referring to Ben Stevens, your son, correct?
>
> A. That is correct.
>
> Q. And his wife?
>
> A. Yes.
>
> Q. And Ben Stevens is the same Ben Stevens who worked as a consultant for VECO and received over $240,000 worth of consulting fees, isn't that correct?
>
> A. He worked for VECO. I don't know how much money he got.
>
> Q. And that's the same Ben Stevens who worked for the Special Olympics and got over $715,000 in consulting fees, isn't that correct?
>
> A. He was the chairman and president of Special Olympics worldwide, held in Anchorage. I don't know how much money he got.

Tr. (Oct. 20, a.m.), at 17–18.

Such evidence had absolutely no relevance to any issue in this case and could have only served to impugn Senator Stevens by suggesting that he somehow provided his son with these positions or, as discussed in detail in Section V, supra, to inflame class prejudice against the Stevenses by gratuitously—and misleadingly—referencing their income. Even if the evidence had any relevance, moreover, the government failed to provide "reasonable notice in advance of trial" of such evidence. See Rule 404(b).

The government's questioning was particularly inappropriate in light of this Court's prior order forbidding any reference to Bill Allen's alleged attempts to bribe Ben Stevens. Tr. (Sept. 30, p.m.), at 4. That order reflected the widely recognized rule that it is reversible error to permit evidence concerning the misdeeds or acts of a defendant's family members in an attempt

AFFIDAVIT IN SUPPORT OF GOVERNMENT'S OPPOSITION TO DEFENDANT'S MOTION TO MOTION FOR DISQUALIFICATION

CHAD JOY, having been duly sworn, deposes and states as follows:

1. I am a Special Agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation ("FBI"), United States Department of Justice. I have been employed as a Special Agent of the FBI since August 2003. For approximately the past four and a half years, I have been assigned to the FBI Anchorage Division. Since approximately early 2004, the government has been involved in an ongoing federal investigation into corruption within the State of Alaska. Much of the investigation has related to Bill J. Allen, the former Chief Executive Officer and principal owner of VECO Corporation, and Richard L. ("Rick") Smith, the former Vice President of Community and Government Affairs for VECO. As a Special Agent with the FBI, I have been involved in an on-going investigation of corruption within the State of Alaska. I am familiar with most aspects of this investigation, including that portion of the investigation as it relates to defendant.

2. I am an "investigative or law enforcement officer" within the meaning of 18 U.S.C. § 2510(7), that is, an officer of the United States who is empowered by law to conduct investigations and to make arrests for offenses enumerated in 18 U.S.C. § 2516.

3. This affidavit is submitted in support of the United States' opposition to defendant's motion to dismiss the indictment or for a mistrial.

4. It is my understanding that the government listed Robert "Rocky" Williams as a potential trial witness during the government's case-in-chief. The government brought Mr. Williams from Alaska to Washington, D.C. for purposes of trial preparation. It is also my understanding that, at the time Mr. Williams was subpoenaed, the government anticipated that he would be one of the first witnesses in the government's case-in-chief.

5. The government met with Mr. Williams shortly before he traveled from Anchorage, Alaska to Washington, D.C. At that time, it appeared to the government that Mr. Williams had health-related issues. We suggested to Mr. Williams at the time that he contact his doctors to determine whether he was fit enough to travel. Mr. Williams assured us that he was interested in testifying, was looking forward to walking around Washington, D.C. to see the tourist attractions. However, he did not subsequently advise the government whether he had contacted his physicians.

6. When Mr. Williams arrived in Washington, D.C. and met with the government to prepare for his testimony, it was apparent to the government that Mr. Williams' health had deteriorated considerably and that his health-related issues warranted medical attention. Between late 2006 and the present, Mr. Williams appeared to have lost weight, his abdomen was distended (and had been previously drained of excess fluid), he appeared jaundiced, his face was gaunt, he had substantially aged, he had chronic coughing spells, and he was frequently short of breath. In addition, Mr. Williams told me that he lacked energy and was unable to walk around the city as he had originally hoped.

FBI - Stevens-4938

7. The government attempted to prepare Mr. Williams for his testimony. It became apparent, however, that Mr. Williams needed to attend to his medical issues. Mr. Williams advised us that he was under the care of physicians in Alaska, and he further advised us that his doctors were calling him because he had missed scheduled, follow-up appointments for blood work and other tests. The government informed Mr. Williams that he should return to Alaska to attend to his health and to meet with his doctors. We informed Mr. Williams that we would be in contact with him to see if he would be able to testify or not.

8. The government also told Mr. Williams that, because he was under subpoena with defense counsel, he should contact defense counsel and inform them that he was returning to Alaska.

9. Prior to leaving Washington, D.C., Mr. Williams informed me on September 24, 2008, that he had contacted defense counsel by telephone and left a message for them that included his cellular telephone number and the hotel where he was staying. According to Mr. Williams, defense counsel did not return his call.

10. Mr. Williams also informed me on September 26, 2008, that he had low energy, he felt somewhat better after he had arrived back in Alaska. Mr. Williams also told me that he understood the government's concern about his health-related issues.

11. On September 28, 2008, I contacted Mr. Williams by telephone. Mr. Williams told me that a physician who is a specialist wanted to conduct a follow-up appointment with him to run another series of tests. Mr. Williams advised me that, although he did not feel bad, he had shortness of breath, needed to gain at least 10 pounds, and that he might need to get intravenous solutions and vitamin B shots if necessary. He further stated that he felt, "90 years old instead of 58." Mr. Williams had a pervasive cough throughout this conversation. I asked him if it was possible for him to come back to Washington, D.C. to testify after he met with his physicians. Mr. Williams did not respond to this question, but did refer to additional tests that needed to be done and that he needed to take care of these appointments.

I declare under the penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,	)
v.	)	Criminal No. 08-231(EGS)
THEODORE F. STEVENS,	)
Defendant.	)

MEMORANDUM OPINION & ORDER

Pending before the Court is (1) the government's motion to file ex parte an unredacted "self-styled whistleblower complaint" ("complaint") written by a federal employee, which raises allegations of misconduct related to the investigation and trial in this case; and (2) the government's motion to file a redacted version of the complaint under seal. The government provided the redacted version to the defense with its motion to seal and seeks a protective order related to that production. The defendant opposes both motions, arguing that both the defendant and the public should have access to the unredacted complaint. The employee who authored the complaint, and who is represented by counsel, is opposed to the complaint being made public. Upon consideration of the pleadings filed by the parties, oral arguments on the pending motions heard in a sealed hearing on December 19, 2008, and the relevant law, and for the reasons set forth herein, the Court (1) DENIES the motion to file ex parte and directs the government to provide an unredacted copy of the complaint to the defense, subject to a protective order; and (2) GRANTS IN PART AND DENIES IN PART the government's motion to file the complaint under seal. Accordingly, the Court will provide counsel with a copy of the Court's final redacted complaint by no later than 4:00 p.m. on December 20, 2008. At 4:00 p.m. on Monday, December 22, 2008, the Court will post the redacted copy of the complaint on the public docket. All other pleadings and transcripts associated with the pending motions shall remain sealed pending further order of the Court.

FBI - Stevens-4942

I. Background

Senator Ted Stevens was charged in a seven-count indictment with making false statements in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1001(a)(1) and (2). Specifically, the defendant was charged with failing to report on his Senate Financial Disclosure Forms a number of gifts he received from Bill Allen, the CEO of VECO Corporation, and others, including renovations on his home in Girdwood, Alaska. The Federal Bureau of Investigation's ("FBI") investigation into the defendant's conduct was based in Alaska and was part of an ongoing federal investigation into corruption in the State of Alaska. That investigation involved VECO, Bill Allen, and a number of public officials. Some of these individuals, including Bill Allen, pled guilty or were convicted after trial in Alaska based on charges that resulted from the government's corruption investigation. Those cases, as well as this one, were prosecuted by attorneys from the United States Attorney's Office in Alaska and attorneys from the Department of Justice's Public Integrity Section.

After three days of voir dire, a jury trial in this case commenced before this Court on September 25, 2008, in Washington, D.C. Bill Allen testified as a government witness against the defendant. Before and during the trial, a number of allegations of discovery violations and prosecutorial misconduct were raised by the defense and the defense filed several motions for mistrial and/or to dismiss the case based on these allegations. On at least one occasion, the Court briefly adjourned the trial in order to consider briefing and hear arguments on these motions. Based on the information presented to the Court at that time, the Court made findings and took steps to address and remedy certain discovery violations and the prosecution's misconduct, including but not limited to, ordering the government to produce all grand jury transcripts and unredacted FBI 302 forms, striking certain evidence from the record, instructing the jury as to certain evidence, and striking portions of the indictment. The Court denied the motions to dismiss the case or declare a mistrial. On October 27, 2008, the jury returned verdicts of "guilty" on all seven counts in the indictment.

FBI - Stevens-4944

On the afternoon of December 11, 2008, the government filed a "Sealed Memorandum" ("Memorandum") accompanied by a motion to seal, pursuant to Local Criminal Rule 49.1(h), and for a protective order. The Memorandum notified the Court that the government's attorneys in this case had received a copy of a "self-styled whistleblower complaint" on December 2, 2008. A redacted version of the complaint was attached to the Memorandum. The government also filed a motion to file ex parte an unredacted copy of the complaint, which is authored by a federal employee with extensive knowledge of the investigation and trial in this case. The complaint alleges that at least two federal employees intentionally violated policies, procedures, discovery and other legal obligations associated with the government's investigation in Alaska and Senator Stevens' trial. Some of the allegations in the complaint specifically address matters that were litigated during the trial and were the source of the defendant's motions to dismiss and/or to declare a mistrial. For example, the complaint alleges that a law enforcement officer who worked closely on the investigation and trial had inappropriate contacts and communications with key government witnesses and sources and intentionally withheld Brady information from the defense "to fit the Brady/Giglio letter that had been previously provided to the defense." The complaint also alleges that a member of the prosecution team schemed to relocate a witness in order to keep him from testifying and sought to conceal Jencks and/or Brady information from the defense.

The defendant filed oppositions to both the motion to seal the redacted complaint and the motion to file the unredacted complaint ex parte. Recognizing the important and competing interests at issue, including the defendant's constitutional rights, the public's constitutional rights, the complaining employee's privacy interests and the privacy interests and due process rights of the individuals named in the complaint, the Court held a sealed, on-the-record conference call with counsel for the parties on December 15, 2008, and directed the government to file a response to the defendant's opposition to the motion to seal and the motion to file ex parte. The Court, over the defendant's objection, also directed the government to provide the complainant with copies of the pleadings and inform the complainant that the Court was considering denying the motion to seal and releasing a redacted version of the complaint to the public. The government was further directed to ascertain (a) whether the complainant had an attorney; (b) if not, whether the complainant wished to have an attorney appointed by the Court; and, (c) what, if any, position the complainant had taken with respect to the complaint being made public. The Court scheduled a sealed hearing on the motions for December 19, 2008 at 9:30 a.m.

FBI - Stevens-4946

In response to the Court's Order, the government informed the Court on December 17, 2008, that the complainant was represented by counsel, did not wish to have the Court appoint counsel, and was opposed to the complaint being released to the public. Following a second sealed, on-the-record conference call with the parties on December 17, 2008, the Court ordered that complainant's counsel could participate in the sealed hearing and could file a sealed pleading with respect to his client's position on the pending motions.

On December 19, 2008, the Court heard argument on the motion to file ex parte and the motion to seal. Counsel for the government reiterated its position that the information in the complaint does not impact the integrity of the trial or the verdicts in this case and should be sealed. Counsel for the government also urged the Court to seal the complaint because of the privacy interests involved, particularly the privacy interests of the author and the primary subject of the complaint.

Defense counsel argued that the defendant has important constitutional rights at issue and that the defendant cannot adequately address the allegations in the complaint and any impact on the verdicts in this case unless the complaint and any proceedings that result from this complaint are open to the public.

Counsel for the complainant objected to any public disclosure of the complaint. He argued that the complainant would not have filed the complaint, at least in the form it was filed, had the complainant known that it might be made public. Counsel for the complainant also stated that the complainant never intended the complaint to be disclosed. Complainant's counsel stressed the important policy considerations underlying whistleblower protections and noted the potentially significant negative ramifications for his client if the complaint is made public. When asked by the Court, however, complainant's counsel acknowledged that he was aware of no statutory or legal authority on point that addresses these unique circumstances and that would support elevating his client's privacy interests above the interests of a criminal defendant in a situation such as the one now before this Court.

At the conclusion of the hearing, the Court informed the parties that the motion to file ex parte would be DENIED. In response to an inquiry by the Court, the government did not request a stay of the Court's Order on that motion. The Court then provided counsel for the defendant with a copy of the unredacted complaint. Further, in accordance with the Court's ruling that it would file on the public docket a copy of the complaint with appropriate redactions to protect, to the extent possible, the privacy interests of the individuals named in the complaint, the Court distributed to all counsel its proposed redactions and invited objections and suggestions.

FBI - Stevens-4948

Counsel for the complainant requested an opportunity to consult with his client regarding any redactions and asked to submit any objections or requests for additional redactions through government counsel. The Court granted that request and directed the government to file its objections and/or proposed redactions and any objections or proposed redactions from the complainant by 2:00 p.m. on December 19, 2008.

The defendant objected to any redactions and specifically objected to two areas of concern to the defense. In response to the government's proposed redactions, the defendant raised additional objections.

Having considered the parties' respective objections and requests regarding appropriate redactions to the complaint, the Court will provide counsel with a copy of the Court's final appropriately redacted complaint by no later than 4:00 p.m. on December 20, 2008. At 4:00 p.m. on Monday, December 22, 2008, the Court will post the redacted complaint on the public docket.

The Court informed the parties at the conclusion of the sealed hearing on December 19, 2008, that a Memorandum Opinion and Order would be issued later that day. This Memorandum Opinion and Order articulates the Court's attempt to balance and protect the competing rights and interests implicated by the government's motions and discusses the legal authority for the Court's resolution of those motions.

FBI - Stevens-4949

II. The Government's Motion to File the Unredacted Complaint Ex Parte

The government seeks leave to file the unredacted complaint with the Court ex parte in order for the Court to determine what has been redacted from the version provided to the defense. The government maintains that the ex parte filing is necessary "because certain information, if disclosed, could threaten or impede ongoing investigations, the rights of innocent third parties, and the privacy interests of individuals and entities." The government further contends that a sealed record is warranted given the confidential and sensitive nature of the information in the submission.

In urging this Court to exercise its discretion to limit public disclosure of confidential documents, the government cites Willingham v. Ashcroft, 355 F. Supp. 2d 390, 391 (D.D.C. 2005), and Johnson v. Greater Southeast Community Hospital, 951 F.2d 1268, 1277 n.14 (D.C. Cir. 1991). As discussed in the following section, however, the analysis in those cases is relevant to the government's motion to seal the complaint, not to whether defense counsel should receive an unredacted version of the complaint. The only reason offered by the government for redacting the complaint produced to the defendant appears to be based on the government's position that a number of the allegations "relate to sources, events, or materials that bear no relationship whatsoever to the Stevens prosecution." The government therefore claims it has redacted "only plainly irrelevant material."

The Court flatly rejects the government's position. Having compared the redacted and unredacted complaints, there are several instances where information that is arguably directly relevant to the investigation and/or trial in this case was redacted by the government. For example, the government redacted an allegation that one employee working on the investigation "accepted multiple things of value" from sources cooperating with the investigation, including artwork and employment for a relative. Surely the Court does not need to remind the government that the defendant in this case was convicted for failing to disclose that he had accepted multiple things of value and, in fact, the trial included testimony about his receipt of artwork and employment for a relative. Whether the allegation in the complaint is true and, if true, whether it bears on the outcome of the trial remains to be seen, but it can hardly be argued that this information is "plainly irrelevant" to the investigation and prosecution of the defendant. Likewise, allegations of misconduct by an individual in a related investigation or trial may be highly relevant to the role that individual played in this investigation or trial.

In a footnote in its reply brief in support of its motion to seal, the government says only, "[a]ssuming arguendo that the information contained in the Complaint is exculpatory, there is simply no requirement that all Brady material be publicly available." Similarly, in response to repeated questioning from the Court during the sealed hearing, government counsel refused to answer whether in the counsel's view this information was relevant, whether it was favorable and even whether, hypothetically, if counsel were a defense attorney, that attorney would want this information. The government's refusal to acknowledge the information in the complaint as exculpatory, and therefore subject to disclosure under Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83 (1963), blinks at reality. Whether they are true or not, there can be little doubt that the allegations in the complaint are exculpatory, that is, favorable to the accused.[1] See United States v. Andrews, 532 F.3d 900, 905 (D.C. Cir. 2008).

Finally, as noted by the defendant, ex parte communications between prosecutors and the trial judge "are greatly discouraged and should only be permitted in the rarest of circumstances." See United States v. Rezaq, 899 F. Supp. 697 (D.D.C. 1997) (citing United States v. Napue, 834 F.2d 1311, 1316 (7th Cir. 1987), and United States v. Presser, 828 F.2d 330 (6th Cir. 1987)). This Court firmly agrees that such ex parte

---

[1] Obviously, a statement may be exculpatory and subject to disclosure to the defense, even if the government believes the statement is untrue and even if it later proves to be untrue. For example, if a witness is interviewed by the police and provides an alibi for a suspect, that statement must be produced, even if the government suspects the statement is untrue and, indeed, even if it later proves to be untrue.

FBI Stevens 4952

communications should be rare and used only in exceptional circumstances. These circumstances, while perhaps unusual, are not the exceptional circumstances that should condone what are otherwise "greatly discouraged" ex parte communications between prosecutors and the trial judge. Therefore, the Court DENIES the motion to file ex parte and directs the government to provide an unredacted copy of the complaint to the defendant forthwith, subject to the terms of an appropriate protective order.

III. The Government's Motion to File the Redacted Complaint Under Seal

The government also asks this Court to exercise its discretion and seal the complaint and all related pleadings from public disclosure. The government characterizes the complaint as "merely discovery" and maintains that neither the Sixth Amendment's guarantee of a public trial, the public's First Amendment right to access judicial proceedings, nor the common law right of access mandate disclosure of the complaint. The government also contends that even if these rights do apply, the complaint should nevertheless be sealed because of the overriding interests at issue here, namely "disclosure of sensitive information, encroachment on individual rights, and interference with ongoing internal investigations."

The defendant strongly opposes sealing the redacted complaint, arguing that the complaint must be made public based on the defendant's right to a public trial guaranteed by the

FBI - Stevens-4953

Sixth Amendment and the public's right to access judicial proceedings guaranteed by the First Amendment. In addition, or in the alternative, the defendant contends that the complaint should be made public under the common law's right of public access to judicial proceedings. As discussed below, the Court agrees with the defendant on both counts: the constitutional and common law rights to public access in this case require disclosure of the complaint, subject to limited redactions to protect the privacy and other interests implicated by the disclosure.

A. Constitutional Rights Implicated by the Government's Motion to Seal

The Sixth Amendment guarantees a criminal defendant the right to a "public trial." U.S. Const. amend. VI. The First Amendment guarantees the public access to criminal trials, see, e.g., Globe Newspaper Co. v. Superior Court for Norfolk County, 457 U.S. 596 (1982); Richmond Newspapers, Inc. v. Virginia, 448 U.S. 555 (1980), and the courts have extended that right to proceedings beyond the actual trial, see, e.g., Waller v. Georgia, 467 U.S. 39, 48 (1984) (suppression hearings); Wash. Post v. Robinson, 935 F.2d 282, 288 (D.C. Cir. 1991) (plea agreements).

The government first argues that because this proceeding is not at the trial stage, the defendant's Sixth Amendment right is not implicated by the motion to seal the complaint. Next, the government asserts that the defendant incorrectly relies on Waller to argue that his Sixth Amendment right is co-extensive with the public's right of access to criminal trials. The government seeks to distinguish Waller, in which the Supreme Court held that the defendant's Sixth Amendment right to a public trial was not limited to the trial itself, but also extended to a suppression hearing. This Court, however, is not persuaded by the government's argument. Rather, the Court finds that under the reasoning of Waller, the defendant's Sixth Amendment right to a public trial extends to the current circumstances and supports disclosure, especially where, as here, the allegations in the complaint will be relevant to the post-trial, presentence litigation currently underway in this case.

The issue in Waller was "the extent to which a hearing on a motion to suppress evidence may be closed to the public over the objection of the defendant consistently with the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendment right to a public trial." 467 U.S. at 40-41. Citing a number of cases where the Court found a qualified First Amendment right to attend criminal proceedings, the Court noted that > [i]n each of these cases the Court has made clear that the right to an open trial may give way in certain cases to other rights or interests, such as the defendant's right to a fair trial or the government's interest in inhibiting disclosure of sensitive information. Such circumstances will be rare, however, and the balance of interests must be struck with special care. We stated the applicable rules in Press-

FBI - Stevens-4955

Enterprise [Co. v. Superior Court of California, 464 U.S. 501, 510 (1984)]:

> The presumption of openness may be overcome only by an overriding interest based on findings that closure is essential to preserve higher values and is narrowly tailored to serve that interest. The interest is to be articulated along with findings specific enough that a reviewing court can determine whether the closure order was properly entered.

Waller, 467 U.S. at 45 (other internal citations omitted).

Recognizing that it was largely referencing cases deciding the public's First Amendment right to access proceedings, rather than a defendant's Sixth Amendment right to a public trial, the Court concluded, > there can be little doubt that the explicit Sixth Amendment right of the accused is no less protective of a public trial than the implicit First Amendment right of the press and public. The central aim of a criminal proceeding must be to try the accused fairly, and "[o]ur cases have uniformly recognized the public-trial guarantee as one created for the benefit of the defendant."

Id. at 46 (quoting Gannett Co. v. DePasquale, 443 U.S. 368, 380 (1979)).

Finally, it is important to emphasize the reasoning underlying the Waller Court's decision to extend the Sixth Amendment right to the context of a suppression hearings. As the Court explained:

> The need for an open proceeding may be particularly strong with respect to suppression hearings. A challenge to the seizure of evidence frequently attacks the conduct of police and prosecutor. . . . The public > in general also has a strong interest in exposing substantial allegations of police misconduct to the salutary effects of public scrutiny.

Id. at 47 (emphasis added). Here, the content of the complaint "attacks the conduct of police and prosecutor" in a highly publicized trial and addresses many of the very same issues of misconduct that were raised during that trial. This Court finds that under the reasoning of Waller, the defendant has a Sixth Amendment right and the public has a First Amendment right to disclosure of the complaint. As a result of this conclusion, any order to seal the complaint must meet the Press-Enterprise test: "The presumption of openness may be overcome only by an overriding interest based on findings that closure is essential to preserve higher values and is narrowly tailored to serve that interest." Press-Enterprise, 464 U.S. at 510.

Similarly, in Washington Post v. Robinson, 935 F.2d 282 (D.C. Cir. 1991), the D.C. Circuit upheld a First Amendment challenge to the trial court's order sealing portions of a plea agreement. The appellate court began its analysis by stating that the First Amendment "guarantees the press and the public a general right of access to court proceedings and court documents unless there are compelling reasons why it cannot be observed." Id. at 287 (emphasis added). In deciding that such access extends to plea agreements, the court referred to the Supreme Court's two-part test articulated in Globe Newspaper and determined that: "Under that test, the first amendment protects public access to an aspect of court proceedings if such access has historically been available, and serves an important function of monitoring prosecutorial or judicial misconduct." Id. at 287-88 (emphasis added) (citing Press-Enterprise, 478 U.S. at 8; Globe Newspaper, 457 U.S. at 605-07 ("Where . . . the State attempts to deny the right of access in order to inhibit the disclosure of sensitive information, it must be shown that the denial is necessitated by a compelling governmental interest, and is narrowly tailored to serve that interest.")).

This Court finds, in accordance with Robinson, that the two-part test is satisfied in this case and that therefore the First Amendment protects the public's access to the complaint. First, the public certainly had access to the defendant's trial, which was widely covered by the national media. Second, access to the complaint and any resulting proceedings are likely to serve the important function of monitoring prosecutorial misconduct, especially where, as here, motions made during the trial raised such allegations and the complaint specifically includes allegations of such misconduct.

Having found that both the Sixth and First Amendments ordinarily afford the public a right to access under these circumstances, the Court will only seal the complaint if the Press-Enterprise test is satisfied. The government's motion to seal does not satisfy that test.

In Press-Enterprise, the Supreme Court articulated the test for when the Sixth and/or First Amendment rights to public access must yield to other interests:

> The presumption of openness may be overcome only by an overriding interest based on findings that closure is essential to preserve higher values and is narrowly tailored to serve that interest. The interest is to be articulated along with findings specific enough that a reviewing court can determine whether the closure order was properly entered.

Press-Enterprise, 464 U.S. at 510.

The government argues that even if the Court finds, as it has, that the First and Sixth Amendment rights to public access apply to the motion to seal the complaint, the Court should nevertheless grant the motion to seal based on "overriding interests." Specifically, the government maintains that (1) the complaint contains sensitive information; (2) "most importantly, [the complainant] did not intend for [the] document to be made publicly available and requests that it remain confidential"; (3) the allegations in the complaint are under investigation by the Department of Justice's Office of Professional Responsibility ("OPR") that may be impeded or tainted by disclosure; and (4) this is a "sensitive, internal matter with personal and professional implications for multiple civil servants who are entitled to due process and their administrative rights."

FBI - Stevens-4959

While the Court recognizes the competing interests at issue and the sensitive nature of the information, it cannot be said that these interests represent "higher values" than the defendant's and the public's rights previously discussed. The complainant and the individuals named in the complaint may have legitimate and significant privacy interests and due process rights at stake, but those rights and interests do not trump the defendant's rights under these circumstances to challenge his conviction with exculpatory evidence provided in the complaint.[2] This is especially true where the complainant and the named individuals are not strangers to these proceedings, but rather were significantly involved in the investigation and prosecution of the defendant.

Similarly, it would be patently unfair to curtail the

[2] An Order sealing the complaint would hamper the defendant's ability to thoroughly investigate the allegations in the complaint and effectively argue to the Court the relevance of those allegations. For example, the defendant would not be able to question other individuals who may have relevant information regarding the allegations in the complaint, in an effort to determine whether and to what extent the allegations are true, and, if true, whether they tainted the investigation and trial in this case. Moreover, where, as here, the defendant has repeatedly made allegations of discovery abuses and prosecutorial misconduct and has indicated an intent to seek additional relief - including a motion to dismiss the indictment and/or for a new trial - those pleadings and all related proceedings would have to be sealed. That would not only frustrate the public's significant interest in these proceedings, but would provide the public with only a part of the picture. Finally, at the end of what could be protracted sealed proceedings, the Court would be left in the untenable position of ruling on what could be very significant factual and/or legal issues without providing the public with any information regarding the reasons for those rulings.

FBI Stevens-4960

defendant's ability to challenge his convictions based on alleged prosecutorial and law enforcement misconduct simply because that conduct is under investigation by the Department of Justice. Moreover, the Court notes that it was the investigating office that apparently recognized the relevance of the complaint to these proceedings; the Court's understanding based on the government's representations is that OPR brought the complaint to the Public Integrity Section's attention. Over the following nine days, attorneys in that section received "additional information, guidance and advice to satisfy [themselves] that any possible statutory and regulatory confidentiality concerns surrounding a request for whistleblower protection had been fully explored and addressed, and would not prohibit a disclosure to the Court at a minimum."

In an effort not to impede OPR's investigation, however, and to protect the individuals' privacy and due process rights to the extent possible without interfering with the defendant's and the public's constitutional rights, the Court will redact from the publicly disclosed complaint the names and identifying information of both the complainant and the subjects of the complaint.

B. The Court Will Not Exercise Its Discretion to Seal the Complaint Under the Circumstances in this Case

FBI - Stevens-4961

Finally, the government argues that notwithstanding any constitutional rights, the Court should exercise its discretion and grant the motion to seal the complaint. In addition to the arguments articulated in the preceding section, such as the privacy and due process rights of the individuals named in the complaint and the ongoing investigation, the government also argues that the Court should exercise its discretion and seal the complaint because the complaint does not contain any information that "actually affects the integrity or the result of the defendant's trial." Specifically, the government contends that the allegations are irrelevant because (1) the individuals named in the complaint did not testify at trial; and (2) the issues raised in the complaint, such as the Brady violations and the witness relocation, have already been litigated and remedied or addressed by the Court.

The government entirely misses the mark. To say that misconduct by law enforcement officers would not affect the integrity or result of a trial simply because the officers did not testify at trial is baseless; if that were the case, the government would be free to engage in rampant misconduct without risk or ramification, provided the prosecution took care not to call any of the violators as witnesses. Moreover, misconduct by law enforcement officers during the investigation, such as that alleged in the complaint - for example, inappropriate contacts with cooperating sources who did testify for the government and intentional withholding of Brady material - could have an impact regardless of whether the officers testified.

The government's assertion that the issues in the complaint do not bear on the integrity or result of the trial merely because the Court already considered and addressed those issues is similarly unavailing. The issues were litigated and addressed based on the information before the Court at the time, including, importantly, representations by the complainant and individuals named in the complaint. If the complaint provides information that was not available to the Court at the time, and/or information that contradicts the government's representations to the Court at the time, that information could obviously bear on the integrity or result of the trial.

Even if the First and Sixth Amendments did not mandate disclosure of the complaint, it would be inappropriate to seal the complaint under these circumstances, based on the six-part analysis for determining whether information should be sealed from public disclosure. See United States v. Hubbard, 650 F.2d 293, 317-21 (D.C. Cir. 1981).

1. The Hubbard Factors Weigh in Favor of Disclosure

In Hubbard, the trial court released to the public multiple documents that had been seized from a third party nondefendant. 650 F.2d at 295. The documents had been introduced in the trial court only "under seal [and] only in a pretrial suppression hearing and only for the purpose of showing that the search and seizure were unlawful." Id. While recognizing the "common law tradition of public access to records of a judicial proceeding," the D.C. Circuit noted that the tradition was not without exceptions. Id. at 314-315.

First, the Court notes that the exceptions to public access cited in Hubbard, for example closing court proceedings or documents to protect trade secrets, the privacy and reputation of crime victims, national security interests, and to reduce the danger of an unfair trial by adverse publicity, id. at 315-16, are far different from the interests articulated by the government in its motion to seal the complaint. An ongoing internal investigation of the government officials named in the complaint and involved with the investigation and trial, and those individuals' privacy rights, as well as the complainant's privacy rights where the complainant was also extensively involved in the investigation and trial, do not rise to the level of trade secrets, crime victims' privacy interests, national security concerns, or the danger of an unfair trial due to adverse publicity.

The six factors set forth in Hubbard for determining when an exception to the common law's tradition of open proceedings is justified are: (1) the need for public access to the information; (2) public use of the information; (3) fact of objection and identity of those objecting to disclosure; (4) strength of the generalized property and privacy interests asserted; (5) possibility of prejudice; and (6) the purposes for which the documents were introduced. Id. at 317-21.

i. The need for public access to the information

Significantly, the court in Hubbard noted that the case before it did not involve "access to the courtroom conduct of a criminal trial," or "access to documents which have been introduced as evidence of guilt or innocence in a trial, nor even documents whose contents have been discussed or insofar as we can determine relied upon by the trial judge in his decision on the defendants' motion to suppress." Id. at 317.

In contrast, the allegations in the complaint at issue here clearly involve access to courtroom conduct and access to documents which were introduced as evidence of guilt or innocence at trial and information that was relied upon by the Court in decisions on various issues raised during the proceedings. To seal the complaint would be to deprive the public of information that directly addresses courtroom conduct, documents that were introduced at trial, and information that was relied upon by the Court for various decisions throughout the proceedings. This factor weighs in favor of disclosure.

ii. The extent to which the public previously had access to the information

FBI - Stevens-4965

To say that the public's interest in this case was and is significant would be an understatement. In fact, even post-trial, the media has had an interest in the case.[3] As the defendant points out, the government previously went to great lengths to provide the public with access to evidence and documents introduced at trial, including creating a website on the Department of Justice server, and distributing copies of all wiretaps introduced at trial.

Given the public interest in and access to the pre-trial and trial proceedings and the indication of public interest in the post-trial proceedings, this factor clearly weighs in favor of disclosure.

iii. Fact of objection and identity of those objecting to disclosure

In Hubbard, the court emphasized that the defendants and the third-party nondefendant had timely and strenuously objected to disclosure. Here, the complainant objects to disclosure,[4] as does the government on behalf of the investigating authority and the individuals named in the complaint. This factor is

[3] See, e.g., Del Quentin Wilber, Hearing Set Into Letter by Witness in Stevens Trial, Wash. Post, Nov. 26, 2008, at A2; Richard Mauer, Letter Adds New Twist to Stevens Conviction, Anchorage Daily News, Nov. 22, 2008, at A1.

[4] In Hubbard, the D.C. Circuit said that "the strength with which a party asserts its interests is a significant indication of the importance of those rights to that party." Id. at 319. The Court notes that the complainant's attorney was given an opportunity to file a pleading addressing the motion to seal and chose not to do so. The attorney did, however, argue against disclosure at the December 19, 2008 hearing.

FBI - Stevens 4966

significant and could weigh against disclosure. The Court recognizes that the complainant has a strong privacy interest, and as a general matter both that interest and the policies underlying the whistleblower protections under which the complainant has sought refuge counsel against public disclosure of the complaint. See, e.g., Haley v. Retsinas, 138 F.3d 1245, 1250 (8th Cir. 1998) ("Laws protecting whistleblowers are meant to encourage employees to report illegal practices without fear of reprisal by their employers."); Wren v. Merit Sys. Prot. Bd., 681 F.2d 867, 872 (D.C. Cir. 1982) ("Whenever misdeeds take place in a Federal agency, there are employees who know that it has occurred, and who are outraged by it. What is needed is a means to assure them that they will not suffer if they help uncover and correct administrative abuses." (quoting S. Rep. No. 95-969, at 8 (1978) (discussing whistleblower provision of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978))). The Court is also aware that, as a practical matter, the public disclosure of the complaint may have an adverse impact on the complainant. See Mgmt. Info. Techs., Inc. v. Alyeska Pipeline Serv. Co., 151 F.R.D. 478, 481 (D.D.C. 1993) (recognizing that "[t]he case law, academic studies, and newspaper accounts well document the kind of treatment that is usually visited upon public and private employees who speak out as a matter of conscience on issues of public concern"). This factor is somewhat mitigated, however, by the Court's decision to redact the individuals' names and identifying information, including that of the complainant, and by the individuals' involvement in and relationship to the investigation and trial in this case.

FBI - Stevens-4967

iv. The strength of the property and privacy interests involved

Again, while the privacy interests of the individuals involved and the integrity of the OPR investigation are not insignificant, they do not trump the defendant's interest in having the allegations in the complaint openly litigated. Moreover, as the defendant points out, the subjects of the OPR investigation, as well as a number of other people involved, already know of the allegations in the complaint. Finally, as stated above, this factor is mitigated by the redactions made to the complaint.

v. Possibility of prejudice

The possibility of prejudice to both sides is significant. If the allegations are unfounded, the individuals' reputations and careers could nonetheless be negatively impacted. On the other hand, the defendant has been the subject of extensive negative publicity as a result of the trial, has been convicted and is facing sentencing, and has a liberty interest at stake. If he is not able to disclose this information and, if appropriate, use it to openly and systematically challenge his conviction, the prejudice to him is severe. Therefore, this factor weighs in favor of disclosure.

vi. The purpose for which the documents were introduced

This was the "single most important element" in the Hubbard court's conclusion that the documents should not have been disclosed. Id. at 321. The reason for that conclusion, as the court emphasized, was that the documents "were not determined by the trial judge to be relevant to the crimes charged; they were not used in the subsequent 'trial;' nor were they described or even expressly relied upon by the trial judge in his decision on the suppression motion." 650 F.2d at 321.

In contrast, the allegations in the complaint are "relevant" to the trial and in some instances relate to information expressly relied upon by the Court in its rulings on the various discovery disputes and on several of the defendant's motions. Moreover, as the defendant points out, this complaint was - or should have been - produced as part of the government's ongoing Brady obligations. For all of these reasons, this factor weighs in favor of disclosure.

IV. Conclusion

As the Hubbard court explained, "[a]ccess to records serves the important functions of ensuring the integrity of judicial proceedings in particular and of the law enforcement process more generally." Id. at 314-15. If ensuring the integrity of judicial proceedings and of the law enforcement process are the "important functions" served by providing public access, it seems abundantly clear that providing public access to this complaint, which raises issues that question both the integrity of the proceedings and the law enforcement process in this case, is appropriate and, indeed, required.

For the foregoing reasons, the Court (1) DENIES the motion to file ex parte and directs the government to provide an unredacted copy of the complaint to the defense, subject to a protective order; and (2) GRANTS IN PART AND DENIES IN PART the government's motion to file the complaint under seal. Accordingly, the Court will provide counsel with a copy of the Court's final redacted complaint by no later than 4:00 p.m. on December 20, 2008. At 4:00 p.m. on Monday, December 22, 2008, the Court will post the redacted copy of the complaint on the public docket. All other pleadings and transcripts associated with the pending motions shall remain sealed pending further order of the Court.

SO ORDERED.

MOTION OF THE UNITED STATES TO SET ASIDE THE VERDICT AND DISMISS THE INDICTMENT WITH PREJUDICE

In February 2009, the Acting Assistant Attorney General for the Criminal Division appointed undersigned counsel to conduct the post-trial litigation in this matter. In preparing to respond to defendant Theodore Stevens' various motions and in preparation for a possible evidentiary hearing, undersigned counsel began collecting and reviewing documents and interviewing potential witnesses. As the Court is aware, the Government has voluntarily provided to the defense documents and summaries of witness interviews.

The Government recently discovered that a witness interview of Bill Allen took place on April 15, 2008. While no memorandum of interview or agent notes exist for this interview, notes taken by two prosecutors who participated in the April 15 interview reflect that Bill Allen was asked about a note dated October 6, 2002, that was sent from the defendant to Bill Allen. The note was introduced at trial as Government Exhibit 495 and was referred to as the "Torricelli note." The notes of the April 15 interview indicate that Bill Allen said, among other things, in substance and in part, that he (Bill Allen) did not recall talking to Bob Persons regarding giving a bill to the defendant. This statement by Allen during the April 15 interview was inconsistent with Allen's recollection at trial, where he described a conversation with Persons about the

194A-AN-13620-TStevens

Torricelli note. In addition, the April 15 interview notes indicate that Allen estimated that if his workers had performed efficiently, the fair market value of the work his corporation performed on defendant's Girdwood chalet would have been $80,000. Upon the discovery of the interview notes last week, the Government immediately provided a copy to defense counsel.

Defendant Stevens was not informed prior to or during trial of the statements by Bill Allen on April 15, 2008. This information could have been used by the defendant to cross-examine Bill Allen and in arguments to the jury. The Government also acknowledges that the Government's Opposition to Defendant's Motion for a New Trial provided an account of the Government's interviews of Bill Allen that is inaccurate. See Opposition at 42-43 (Dkt. No. 269).

Given the facts of this particular case, the Government believes that granting a new trial is in the interest of justice. See Fed. R. Crim. P. 33(a). The Government has further determined that, based on the totality of circumstances and in the interest of justice, it will not seek a new trial. Accordingly, pursuant to Fed. R. Crim. P. 48(a), the Government moves to set aside the verdict and dismiss the indictment with prejudice.

Further, as the Court is aware, certain matters in this case previously have been referred to the Office of Professional Responsibility of the Department of Justice. The Government has supplemented the referral to include the facts concerning the April 15th Bill Allen interview. Once the inquiry into this matter is completed by the Office of Professional Responsibility, the Government will share the findings of that inquiry with the Court.

Source Reporting:

Source continues to be concerned about [redacted] the Alaska Permanent Fund (APF). Source advised [redacted] APF used to provide the public with annual financial statements that were meaningful. In more recent years, the publicly available financials became simple, colorful graphs and charts that were fairly meaningless and allowed for no public accountability.

Source was also concerned about the current fishing industry issue involving pollock fishing and how salmon were being incidentally caught. This issue becomes an Alaska Native versus industry issue. The six Community Development Quota (CDQ) groups receive large amounts of money from pollock fishing. Source was concerned that decisions about the salmon issue should be based on science and testing instead of money and politics. Source was concerned about this issue and whether illegal activity may be occurring in this decision-making process.

A friend told Source that Ted Stevens became so influential and arrogant that Stevens was told by Former Vice President Dick Cheney that Stevens needed to rein in his arrogance or he might be criminally investigated. Stevens told Cheney he would do what he wanted to do. Cheney was offended and that's what led to Stevens being indicted.

The subject was the [redacted] for Senator Theodore F. "Ted" Stevens (R-AK). Senator Stevens was indicted, convicted, and later had the case dropped against him. The charges pertained to the preparation of fraudulent Annual Disclosure Forms for the Senator and substantial gifts received by the Senator that were not reported on these forms.

As part of the investigation, the subject was interviewed by agents from the Washington Field Office and attorneys from the Department of Justice and United States Senate on March 27, 2008. The subject started with Sen. Stevens' office as a [redacted] b6 b7C

The subject was asked about the preparation of Sen. Stevens' Annual Financial Disclosure Forms. He stated that other staff members handled the preparation of these forms. They worked with Sen. Stevens [redacted] on the completion of these forms. After their completion, the forms would go to the Ethics Counsel for review and then the subject [redacted] prior to going to the Senator for signature. [redacted] he was unaware of how involved the Senator was in the process of completing and reviewing the Annual Financial Disclosure Form.

The subject advised that he was unaware of the types of documents that were used to support and complete Sen. Stevens' Annual Disclosure Forms. The subject assumed that there would be emails regarding the completion of the forms.

The subject advised that his office conducted a number of document retrieval requests pertaining to Department of Justice (DOJ) requests to include renovation work done to the Senator's home in Girdwood, Alaska after this residence was searched by FBI and IRS agents. The subject assisted in assembling the results and weeding out irrelevant items.

The subject said that there were eight (8) staffers working on document retrieval after Sen. Stevens' residence was searched. He spent approximately a couple of hours a day for approximately two weeks working on document retrieval.

Re: 62F-HQ-C1039976, 07/29/2010

The subject advised that he had nothing to deal with Sen. Stevens' personal financial matters as they were handled by another person.

The subject was asked about the "Chair". He located one email between the Senator and [redacted] regarding the delivery of the chair. The subject did not recall any other details regarding the delivery of the chair nor any email discussing payment of the "Chair". He did not recall seeing any dark brown massage chair at Sen. Stevens' residence in Washington, DC.

The subject was aware that Sen. Stevens renovated his residence in Alaska, but he thought that the renovations were complete when he returned to working for Sen. Stevens after [redacted]. The subject did not pay much attention to the house renovation and did not recall hearing Sen. Stevens' talking about renovations being done.

The subject's first time to Sen. Stevens' residence in Girdwood was in [redacted] the residence was already renovated, as it was changed to a two story residence, as the lower level was finished. [Writer's note: This residence is actually considered to have three stories.] The subject did not recall any construction going on and did note that decks had been added to the first and second stories. He had been to Sen. Stevens' house [redacted]

The subject advised that there was a folder/file maintained in the back-office (general area) in Sen. Stevens' office, that was titled "House Renovations". He had seen the file/folder but did not know what the file consisted of as he had never gone through it. He believed that there were checks to companies for work performed on the house but did not know the specifics of the checks.

The subject was asked whether he had seen any checks from Sen. Stevens to VECO, an oil services company whose leadership were involved in this political corruption probe. The subject said that Sen. Stevens paid every bill that he received as it pertained to renovations on his residence and had records for work performed on the house. He said that Senator and [redacted] set up a separate checking account to pay the bills for the renovation.

The subject was asked about a firearm presented to Sen. Stevens at the Kenai River Classic in Alaska. During this event, Sen. Stevens was presented with a firearm. Because the National Sportsmen Foundation was a 501(c)(3) non-profit organization, the subject was under the impression that Sen. Stevens did not have to report awards for service and recognition. The subject believed that the [redacted] that the firearm was a public service award and did not have to be reported on the form. When the subject learned that their interpretation was incorrect, they amended Sen. Stevens' Annual Financial Disclosure Form and report the receipt of the firearm as a gift. The subject called it a "staff error" on their part.

The subject was asked, hypothetically, if Sen. Stevens had reported gifts from 501(c)(3) non-profit organizations on Financial Disclosure Forms in the past, if the Senator would have been aware that gifts from charities that exceeded a certain value would have been required to be reported. The subject believed that the Senator would have been aware of the rules regarding gifts from charities if he disclosed them on past Annual Disclosure Forms. b6 b7C

The subject was asked when they decided to amend Sen. Stevens' Annual Disclosure Forms. The subject believed it was last year (2007), around the time of the filing of the last Annual Financial Disclosure Form (2006). He stated that there was a press inquiry or letter from DOJ regarding the firearm. [redacted] the Senate Disclosure Rules and conferred with others and the Senate Ethics Committee regarding the firearms. After they determined the firearms needed to be reported, [redacted] staff amend the Annual Disclosure Forms and report the firearms. He did not know the value of the firearms, but just knew they were valued at more than the allowable gift rule amount. They did not list the value of the firearms on the forms.

The subject recalled that Sen. Stevens bid on two Alaskan sled dogs during the auction at the Kenai River Classic. He could not remember if Stevens won the dogs but did know that the Senator had sled dogs at his Washington, DC residence for a period of time. He believed the dogs were shipped up and did not know who paid the shipping costs. Staffers would sometimes housesit the dogs while the Stevens was out, but the Senator would reimburse the staffers.

The subject advised that the Senator had a three prong salmon bronze sculpture displayed outside of his house in Girdwood. The sculpture was a donation from the National Sportsmen Foundation to the Ted Stevens Foundation, and that when the building for the foundation is built that the sculpture would be placed there. All of Sen. Stevens' Senate archives will be housed at the foundation. The subject did not know when the building would be built or where it would be built but believed the foundation had a board of directors and was formed about eight years ago. He had not seen any plans for the building.

b7C

The subject was asked about access to the back-office in Sen. Stevens' Senate Office. He advised that this area was a general area and was accessible to all personnel. The back-office was just beyond Stevens' office, and there were four desks there. The Scheduler and Staff Assistant sat in the back office. There were file cabinets in the back office which were kept unlocked.

The other documents pertaining to the subject in this subfile pertained to interviews of persons involved with the Senator and covered roughly the same information above.

[redacted] was described as a white male, [redacted] born [redacted] His mailing address was listed as [redacted] as of March 4, 2010; and his residential address was listed as [redacted] as of the same date.

believed that the Senator would have been aware of the rules regarding gifts from charities if he disclosed them on past Annual Disclosure Forms.

The subject was asked when they decided to amend Sen. Stevens' Annual Disclosure Forms. The subject believed it was last year (2007), around the time of the filing of the last Annual Financial Disclosure Form (2006). He stated that there was a press inquiry or letter from DOJ regarding the firearm. [redacted] the Senate Disclosure Rules and conferred with others and the Senate Ethics Committee regarding the firearms. After they determined the firearms needed to be reported, [redacted] staff amend the Annual Disclosure Forms and report the firearms. He did not know the value of the firearms, but just knew they were valued at more than the allowable gift rule amount. They did not list the value of the firearms on the forms. b6 b7C

The subject recalled that Sen. Stevens bid on two Alaskan sled dogs during the auction at the Kenai River Classic. He could not remember if Stevens won the dogs but did know that the Senator had sled dogs at his Washington, DC residence for a period of time. He believed the dogs were shipped up and did not know who paid the shipping costs. Staffers would sometimes housesit the dogs while the Stevens was out, but the Senator would reimburse the staffers.

The subject advised that the Senator had a three prong salmon bronze sculpture displayed outside of his house in Girdwood. The sculpture was a donation from the National Sportsmen Foundation to the Ted Stevens Foundation, and that when the building for the foundation is built that the sculpture would be placed there. All of Sen. Stevens' Senate archives will be housed at the foundation. The subject did not know when the building would be built or where it would be built but believed the foundation had a board of directors and was formed about eight years ago. He had not seen any plans for the building.

The subject was asked about access to the back-office in Sen. Stevens' Senate Office. He advised that this area was a general area and was accessible to all personnel. The back-office was just beyond Stevens' office, and there were four desks there. The Scheduler and Staff Assistant sat in the back office. There were file cabinets in the back office which were kept unlocked.

The other documents pertaining to the subject in this subfile pertained to interviews of persons involved with the Senator and covered roughly the same information above.

[redacted] was described as a white male, [redacted] born [redacted]. His mailing address was listed as [redacted] as of March [redacted], 2010; and his residential address was listed as [redacted] as of the same date.

DOB: [redacted]
SSN: [redacted]

- [redacted] VECO
  - was a [redacted]
  - started w/ VECO in [redacted]
    - worked with them and other companies in [redacted]
  - offered Fab Shop [redacted]
  - [redacted]
    - → worked his way up to construction [redacted]

b6
b7C

- Currently: [redacted]

VECO Fab Shop

[redacted] ARCO, Conoco Philips

- prefab/modules/ etc.
- built modules from the ground-up
- maximized profit → make sure things came in on time
- start with an estimate → all competitive bids
  - there included scopes of work (electrical, structural, etc)
    - → from that you develop the man-hours (forecasted)
- man-hours built into the bid.
- overhead for the fab shop would be applied as a certain $/hr against each man-hour, estimated over a year and pro-rated toward projects.
- each discipline supervisor, daily, would report what hours were worked and on what job number.
  - → supervisior filled out the time sheet for each employee.
    - under the job # you'd have a sub-cost code.

- sub-job cost codes were to track progress/time of the disciplines (and the project in totality).
- "an hour burned is not an hour earned"
  - → customers were very, very interested in the progress of the work → they want to use it to get oil.
  - → very concerned with time

- if a job was relatively small, might only be a couple job #s.
  - → not efficient administratively.
  - a big job may have 100's in order to more closely track the progress of that project.

FAB Shop Jobs

- instrumentation guys - tubing, guages, etc.
- electricians - journeyman, apprentice (helper)
- iron workers
- carpenters

b6
b7C

[redacted]

Fab shop - ~~busy~~ ~~work temps~~ work years

- [redacted] @ the fab shop
- [redacted]
  - field engineering and QA people
  - cost schedulers.
    - → client representative would sit in the office with them ~~dep~~ for their weekly/daily status report

Last assignment in VECO [redacted] was in [redacted] - overseas ~~[redacted]~~ [redacted]

Fab Shop Personnel

- [redacted]

→ Field engineer puts together the theory behind the estimate and the figure out how to build the project → make the estimate.
→ sort of the Quarter back making sure the right people were there to do the job.
→ materials & people.

b6
b7C

Special Projects

- a lot of people @ the Fab shop → some family members of higher ups → typically higher ups would call directly to the people they needed (ie. tool room [redacted] or rolling stock)
: depend on what they wanted. [redacted] LNU

- if [redacted] wanted a window replaced @ his house he would call [redacted]

- [redacted] did all kinds of things for [redacted] never counted on [redacted] being there for Fab shop business → had a cell phone, it would ring and it would be gone.

- [redacted] was on the UECO Fab shop time sheets.
→ ~~did not~~ [redacted] could not afford to absorb costs.

[redacted] knew it was a den of "relatives".
→ When VECO hired him → he told them he would have to let people go who were near & dear to some higher-ups
• if [redacted] got a call friend made sure it went to a job number.

[redacted] house remodel
• made a structural platform → for a jacuzzi → refurbished the house.
[redacted] an "other relatives" worked on it for a couple months.

Girdwood
[redacted] does not remember the Girdwood job.
• heard it was Ted Stevens lodge.
[redacted] was worried about real business.
→ "did not have time or energy to worry about that crap"
• caught [redacted] drinking @ work
→ happier when [redacted] wasn't there at work
• possible [redacted] might grab people of the floor → [redacted] wouldn't necessarily know if [redacted] did that.

b6
b7C

• There were times when [redacted] would have an emergency and need people, but nobody was available.

[redacted]
[redacted] the engineering group.
→ possible [redacted] might have had a problem with [redacted] pulling people...

[redacted]

5

- built a deck → prefabbed in the shop then installed
  - depending on how busy they were it would have been a problem - if they weren't busy → no problem.

- an account in arrears → might come to his attention?
  - what about [redacted] house / Girdwood.
    "I wasn't in the collection business."
    → but was working with customer representatives.
    - if it was an internal job #, it wasn't any of his business.
    →

b6
b7C

Accounting

- they do collate and transfer the #'s to corporate.
- worked for VECO Alaska / Construction.
  → Accounting was in the A Street office.
- ~~if they had~~ if employees had a problem with their paycheck ~~would have~~ they would deal with it in the fab shop / Accounting → limited connectivity w/ Accounting.
- VECO Alaska reports all costs via job #s to Corporate.
  → [redacted] for VECO Alaska office.

Plans

- customers often had their engineering done through bid work.
- put together some basic module design packages → engineering office on 36th
  - 20 ft bags → stay w/in limits → truckable
- standard off-the shelf designs.

~~Here~~

saved money because the customer does not need to do the engineering.

→ [redacted]

→ [redacted]

→ sketches and such had to be done for permits in Anchorage.

Names

- Rocky LNU → expiditer → same vein as [redacted]
  - ↳ filled in running parts & getting materials
    - → usually to fill in for a material group.

b6
b7C

Materials

- Very likely they would walk into the material manager, and charge it to a job #

→ [redacted]

→ filled out a material requisition

→ which would be used to create a purchase order.

→ [redacted] was concerned with stuff on the shop floor

Cont'd

Materials

- as long as the bill is going to a paying client, [redacted] did not care what was billed.
- 80-90 fab shop workers.

Job #'s or Cost codes

- at the end of the month they would do a review of time worked + safety stats

Rocky LNU

↳ realized that he was thinking about someone else.
→ in reality Rocky was a maintanence guy → did work for [redacted], never worked @ the fab shop.
→ worked outside.

b6
b7C

[redacted] came by the shop once a week - talk casually about what he wanted to do.
→ [redacted] always ran stuff for [redacted]
→ mostly [redacted] in Anchorage.

- [redacted] → [redacted] and a "tracked" snow vehicle - not very big.
- [redacted] is involved in fund raisers → self made man;
  [redacted] supported local politics → stayed involved.
  [redacted] went on a fund raiser for Lisa Murkowski;
  · went for personal reasons, knew her whe she worked on the north slope when she was 20.
  → when she was running for senate (around then).
- [redacted] did not request guys from the fab shop.
- [redacted] was the [redacted] took over where [redacted] left

- [redacted]
- [redacted] → [redacted]
  - as time went on, [redacted] did more and more outside the fab shop.
  - → worked for [redacted] 35% of the time @ the beginning
  - [redacted]

Billing for [redacted]

- Corporate job #
  - [redacted] is not the [redacted]
  - [redacted]
  - [redacted]
- ~~123 VECO Alaska~~ There's a difference in the job #s from VECO alaska and VECO corporation.
- [redacted] would spot check time sheets to verify supervisors, etc.
  - make sure they were ~~of~~ billing correctly for ~~the~~ what he saw on the floor.
- Was not aware of a seperate job # for work @ Girdwood.
  - know [redacted] ~~friend~~ house, but not Girdwood.

Reports

- Go to the accounting office and submit a request based on employee number and they should be able to produce their hours for the entire time they worked @ the company.
  - or by name.

→ all the names mentioned → VECO ~~corp~~ Alaska
- no idea did VECO corporation payroll

- [redacted] (phonetic).

b6
b7C

- receive a time sheet from a supervisor → if she had a question she'd go back to that supervisor → then just key it in
  - → some issues with specificity on the job #'s (supervisors ~~by~~ ~~mention~~ cite similar work accomplished, not actual → worked on one panel vs. another)
- from a cost and scheduling perspective → important

Names

[redacted]

- if [redacted] wanted a [redacted] he'd go to [redacted] would give it to [redacted] would have gone straight to [redacted] ~~by~~ other [redacted] individual.
