PREFACE

I

THE project for a Lexicon of Patristic Greek was originally suggested by the Central Society for Sacred Study in the year 1906, when its Warden was Dr. H. B. Swete, then Regius Professor of Divinity at Cambridge. Within three years some eighty clergymen and others interested in patristic study, led by Canon Herbert Moore, then Rector of Acton, Cheshire, had been invited to read the appropriate volumes of Migne's Patrologia Graeca and certain other texts and to assemble material for the work. Canon Moore himself continued, until his death in 1942, to devote his leisure to the collection and transcription of great quantities of slips, and there can be little doubt that but for his energy and perseverance the idea conceived by Dr. Swete would never have been carried out. At about the same time a 'Committee of Direction' was formed, consisting of Dr. Swete himself with Dr. A. J. Mason and Dr. J. H. Srawley at Cambridge, and Dr. T. B. Strong, Dr. William Sanday, and Dr. C. H. Turner at Oxford. It was not, however, until 1915 that the Committee found it possible to appoint an editor, Dr. Darwell Stone, Principal of Pusey House, Oxford, who continued to direct the work until his death in 1941.

In the meantime plans for a new edition of Liddell and Scott had begun to take shape, and its editor, Sir Henry Stuart Jones, had decided to exclude all post-biblical Christian writers from the scope of the work. It thus became clear that, although the aim and methods of the Patristic Lexicon had not yet been precisely determined, it would certainly have to form a supplement, or companion, to the ninth edition of Liddell and Scott, and on that basis the interest of the Delegates of the Oxford University Press was attracted to the project. Thus in the year 1925 Sir Henry Stuart Jones in his Preface explained the relation between the two works:

> Liddell and Scott . . . admitted a number of words from Ecclesiastical and Byzantine writers, for many of which no reference was given except the symbols 'Eccl.' and 'Byz.'. After due consideration it has been decided to exclude both Patristic and Byzantine literature from the purview of the present edition. It would have manifestly been impossible to include more than a small and haphazard selection of words and quotations from these literatures, which would therefore have had to be treated quite differently from the remains of Classical Greek. . . . There is, moreover, in preparation a Lexicon of Patristic Greek (including Christian poetry and inscriptions) under the editorship of Dr. Darwell Stone, which will, it is hoped, be printed when the publication of the present work is concluded.

The fulfilment of this hope has been long delayed. For many years Dr. Darwell Stone worked almost single-handed (though assisted for a time by the Rev. G. L. Marriott and the Rev. F. P. Long as successive sub-editors) at the task of reading texts, receiving and sorting slips sent by Canon Moore and other readers, and writing preliminary drafts of articles on the basis of such material as had by that time been collected. Progress could not, therefore, but be slow. Moreover, since the scope of the work had not been finally determined, it was not clear whether the main concern of the Lexicon was to be linguistic on the one hand, or theological and ecclesiastical on the other, with the natural consequence that whereas most of the readers had been careful to take note of rare words and usages, some of them had omitted to excerpt common theological terms in passages of great importance for the history of patristic thought.

This difficulty had not been fully resolved when, after Dr. Stone's death, the Committee, then under the chairmanship of Dr. N. P. Williams, appointed as Editor Dr. F. L. Cross, then Librarian of Pusey House and subsequently the successor of Dr. Williams in the Lady Margaret Chair of Divinity at Oxford. It had become clear that the primary value of the material so far assembled lay in its interest to students of the development of Christian theological vocabulary and of the ideas which it expressed. A number of published studies, based upon the Lexicon slips, afforded positive evidence that this was the case.[1] The Committee accordingly decided that the work should be more than a mere supplement to Liddell and Scott. It was, however, plainly impossible to consider the production of an encyclopedic theological dictionary, on the lines of Kittel's Theologisches Wörterbuch zum Neuen Testament, to cover the vast range of patristic literature. The object of the work was therefore defined as the provision of as full treatment as possible of all words of special theological or ecclesiastical significance, and, at the same time, the listing of all words occurring in the Fathers which were either not contained in Liddell Scott–Jones or but poorly attested there (such as those cited only from glossaries). With this object in view, new readers were recruited for the study of those texts, particularly the more recently published critical editions, which had not yet been excerpted, a provisional word-list was prepared by Miss H. C. Graef, and a preliminary draft of the list of authors was compiled by the Rev. B. J. Wigan, who had been appointed to assist Dr. Cross. In 1946 the writing of articles was begun by Miss Graef, Miss M. Grosvenor, and the present Editor who succeeded Dr. Cross in 1948.

[1] These include studies by Dr. G. L. Prestige, who spent several years in making a special study of certain doctrinal words for the Lexicon: 'ἀγέν(ν)ητος and γεν(ν)ητός and kindred words, in Eusebius and the early Arians', JTS xxiv (1923), pp. 486–96; 'Hades in the Greek Fathers', ibid., pp. 476–85; 'περιχωρέω and περιχώρησις in the Fathers', JTS xxix (1928), pp. 242–52; 'Clement of Alexandria, Stromata 2. 18, and the meaning of "Hypostasis" ', JTS xxx

Dr. R. H. Lightfoot had become Chairman of an enlarged Committee on the death of Dr. Williams in 1943, and he now devoted much labour to the raising of funds, including many increased contributions from those academic and ecclesiastical bodies and private friends who had supported the work since its early days, in order to make possible the engagement of a larger staff of whole-time assistants. The authorities of the Bodleian Library gave much help to the project in several ways, including the provision of accommodation for the work itself and for the working library which had been built up with the aid of many friends of the Lexicon who lent texts for this purpose. Much reading remained to be done, and the existing material had to be extensively supplemented even when the work of putting it into shape was well advanced. The Editor and his staff have thus found themselves compelled, paradoxically, to work against time in the actual writing of a book whose publication must seem to the general public to have been long delayed. They would have preferred to spend much more time in remedying the deficiencies and imperfections of the Lexicon as it now stands. On the other hand, it seemed their duty rather to bring it forward for publication with the least possible delay, remembering that it is a pioneer work in its particular field (its nearest predecessor is J. C. Suicer's Thesaurus Ecclesiasticus, second edition, 1728), and that there is good hope that, like the rude beginnings of other large dictionaries, this Lexicon may be supplemented and corrected by the expert hands of future revisers and editors.

Many helpers have contributed to the writing of articles. Among those who have spent a considerable amount of time on the work have been Mrs. S. Argyle, Dom G. Bainbridge, O.S.B., Dr. J. E. Bickersteth, Mr. J. Bowman, Miss B. Burns, Miss N. Butler-Wright, Miss M. J. Cunningham, Mr. D. Grensted, Miss T. A. Hart, Miss J. M. Hawkins, the Rev. (now Bishop) Basil Krivocheine, Mr. W. Mitchell, Mr. (now Professor) A. Paap, the Rev. (now Professor) K. J. Woollcombe, together with the Editor's original colleagues Miss Graef and Miss Grosvenor.

It is impossible, for reasons of space, for the Editor to express his thanks to all those individuals who have contributed to the work. There have been very many valuable helpers at every stage: those who read texts and sent in slips, particularly the late Mr. E. A. Parker, who devoted most of his time to this work during the last years of his life, those who lent books to the working library, in particular the authorities of Cuddesdon Theological College and Pusey House, the sorters of slips, especially parties of theological students from Wycliffe Hall led by Mr. (now Professor) N. Q. King, and the Editor's helpers in the final stages of the revision of the manuscript and the reading of proofs, particularly Miss Janet Rosceveare. Special gratitude is (1929), pp. 270–2; 'ἀγέν(ν)ητος and cognate words in Athanasius', JTS xxxiv (1933), pp. 258–65; and the detailed account of the theological language of the Fathers embodied in his book, God and Patristic Thought (Heinemann, 1936). Other articles of the same kind were published by Dr. Stone: 'Ἀδάμ', JTS xxiv (1923), pp. 473–5; Dr. C. H. Turner: 'χειροτονία, χειροθεσία, ἐπίθεσις χειρῶν', ibid., pp. 496–504; the Rev. E. C. E. Owen: 'St. Gregory of Nyssa: (1) Vocabulary; (2) Style', JTS xxvi (1925), pp. 64–71; 'ἀποτυμπανίζω, &c.', JTS xxx (1929), pp. 259–66; 'δαίμων and cognate words', JTS xxxii (1931), pp. 133–53; 'δόξα and cognate words', JTS xxxiii (1932), pp. 132–50; 'ἐπινοέω, ἐπίνοια, and allied words', JTS xxxv (1934), pp. 368–76; 'ἐπιούσιος', ibid., pp. 376–80; 'αἰών and αἰώνιος', JTS xxxvii (1936), pp. 265–83 and 390–404. The present Editor subsequently published 'βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ, βασιλεία Χριστοῦ in the Greek Fathers', JTS xlix (1948), pp. 58–73, and embodied much of the material for βάπτισμα, σφραγίς, and related words in The Seal of the Spirit (Longmans, 1951).

due to Miss Grosvenor for her devoted work, first as a writer and reviser of articles and subsequently as a Press reader. Although no 'Sub-Editor' has been officially appointed since the early years of the Lexicon, she has in fact done as much as, or more than, an editor could reasonably expect of a colleague with that title.

The Editor records his grateful appreciation of the kindness and encouragement which he has received, sometimes in circumstances of much difficulty, from the successive Chairmen of the Committee with whom he has had the good fortune to work, Dr. R. H. Lightfoot, Dr. Leonard Hodgson, and Dr. E. R. Dodds, and the members of the Committee themselves.

It is, of course, due to the interest shown in this project, and the wise guidance given to it, by the Secretary to the Delegates and other authorities of the Clarendon Press that it has been brought successfully to the point of publication. The manuscript of the Lexicon has presented the compositors and readers with quite exceptional difficulties: a very large work consisting in the main of Greek citations and written in longhand by different hands of various nationalities, repeatedly revised and corrected by yet other hands, confronted the printer with what might seem to be an almost impossible task. The skill and care with which these difficulties have been overcome has been matched by the extraordinary vigilance and accuracy of the Press reader of the page proofs, who has eliminated a great number of minor errors and inconsistencies.

It is not possible to enumerate the many benefactors who have financed this project, or to thank them individually. From the outset regular subscriptions and single donations have been generously given by Oxford and Cambridge Colleges, Cathedral Chapters, and private individuals. During the years 1948 to 1955, when a relatively large paid staff had to be maintained, annual grants to the Lexicon were made by Oxford University. Since that time the completion of the work has been made possible by generous help from the British Academy. Much assistance has been given at various stages by the trustees of the Denyer and Johnson Fund, the Revision Surplus Fund, the Pringle Stewart Fund, and the Hort Memorial Fund, the Jowett Copyright Trustees, the Eric Vincent Educational Trust, and the Committee of Hymns Ancient and Modern, to all of whom, as to the Delegates of the Oxford University Press for undertaking the expenses of publication, the Committee of the Lexicon and the Editor are deeply grateful.

II

The object of this work is primarily to interpret the theological and ecclesiastical vocabulary of the Greek Christian authors from Clement of Rome to Theodore of Studium.

These limits are necessarily somewhat arbitrary. They have been drawn with the object of confining the Lexicon, as far as possible, to the formative period of the history of Christian thought and institutions, beginning in the sub-apostolic age (but excluding any works of that period which are contained in the canon of the New Testament) and embracing the whole era of the Creeds, the Councils down to the Second Council of Nicaea, and the great doctrinal disputes down to the Iconoclastic Controversy. The limits are not absolutely rigid. Some works of uncertain date which may be substantially pre-Christian are included, such as the Confession of Asenath and the Testaments of the XII Patriarchs, and also the Psalms of Solomon which admittedly belong to the Judaism of the first century B.C., but which, having been read, it seemed undesirable to exclude, especially since no existing Greek lexicon treats them fully. At the other end of the period some spurious works attributed to such authors as John of Damascus and Theodore of Studium have been included although they are strictly too late in date, as has also the medieval Christus patiens traditionally included among the poems of Gregory of Nazianzus.

All words illustrating the development of Christian thought and institutions have been treated as fully as possible, with extensive citations of the more important relevant passages. Thus the articles on such words as φύσις or πρόσωπον are intended to explain the history of the terminology of Trinitarian doctrine and Christology; the organization of the Church and its Ministry is illustrated by the articles on such words as ἀπόστολος, ἐπίσκοπος, and πρεσβύτερος; patristic 'spirituality' by those on θεωρία or εὐχή; worship by the entries dealing with liturgical terms; and so on. Many common words, of no theological importance in themselves, have been included because they occur in typological or allegorical interpretations of biblical texts and so may serve to illustrate patristic methods of biblical exegesis; among many others are such commonplace words as ἵππος, ποταμός, and πούς. A few proper names have been included because of their importance in theology (e.g. Ἀδάμ) or exegesis (e.g. Βαβυλών).

This method of treatment has the obvious disadvantage that the history of the use of words (lexicography in the proper sense) has to be combined with the history of theological ideas, liturgy, institutions, canon law, and other matters. It should, however, be borne in mind that this method has been deliberately adopted in order to make the project feasible. The ideal policy would probably involve the production of two entirely distinct works, a lexicon of the language used by the Greek Christian writers on the one hand, and a very large encyclopedic dictionary of patristic theology on the other. Not only would the latter probably require many volumes, but it is the history of Christian doctrine, worship, and institutions which alone justifies the grouping of the authors with whom the Lexicon is concerned into a single class labelled 'patristic'. The authors did not use one peculiar form of the Greek language, and it might well be argued that their exclusion from Liddell Scott–Jones was somewhat illogical, since the ground for it was their religion rather than their vocabulary. Thus Synesius failed to find a place in Liddell Scott–Jones alongside the other Neoplatonist writers of the period because he ended his career as a Christian bishop. The Christian authors, judged by the kind of Greek that they wrote, do not form a single homogeneous group. The 'classical' language of the Cappadocian Fathers is very different from the vocabulary and style of Malalas or the popular Greek of much of the monastic literature. There is too great a difference between the Didache or Clement of Rome, with their strongly 'biblical' language, and such an author as Cyril of Alexandria, to warrant their classification under a single literary label. It is their place in Christian history which holds them together, and consequently this Lexicon, which studies their vocabulary in order to interpret their theology and its broad social and ethical implications, is primarily a theological dictionary of the Greek Fathers. It is in that sense that the original title given to this work by Dr. Swete, 'A Lexicon of Patristic Greek' should, in the first instance, be understood. It is, perhaps, a first step towards the ultimate goal of a full-scale theological dictionary of the Fathers in the manner of Kittel's Theologisches Wörterbuch zum Neuen Testament.

This is to look far ahead. So far as the present work is concerned it must be made clear to the reader that he must not expect to find a thesaurus of patristic language or a concordance to the Greek Fathers. The size of this Lexicon was determined by agreement between the Committee and the Clarendon Press at an early stage in its history. The Press has subsequently allowed those limits to be considerably exceeded; but considerations of space have always had to determine editorial policy, and there could be no question of trying to produce a work in which a reader could expect to find every instance of the use by a particular author of an important theological term, or information about the use in patristic exegesis of every important scriptural text. All that can here be offered is samples of patristic thought and specimens of the way in which biblical words and phrases were interpreted in the homilies and commentaries of the period.

A secondary object of the Lexicon is to give information about all words, whether of any theological importance or not, which are used by these writers but not included in Liddell Scott–Jones. A very large number of such words are listed here, distinguished in each case by an asterisk. Words that are only poorly attested in Liddell Scott–Jones or which are used by the Fathers with different meanings, or with differences of grammatical usage, also appear, whether or not they are relevant to patristic theology.

The dual object of the Lexicon necessitated the adoption of a format similar to that of Liddell and Scott, to which it is in part a companion. This is not ideally suited to a dictionary whose primary interest is theological, for it usually involves separate treatment for cognate words which, in a purely theological dictionary, would normally be discussed under one heading. The reader must therefore be warned that if, for example, he wishes to study the thought of the Fathers about the subject of apostleship he will have to turn to the separate articles on ἀποστέλλω, ἀποστολή, ἀποστολικός, and ἀπόστολος. The disadvantages of this method have been mitigated as far as possible by the provision of cross-references between the various articles concerned with a single main subject, and occasionally, where no difference in the actual meaning of two associated words occurs, they are treated together in one article (e.g. εὐχή and προσευχή).

Those articles which trace the history of an idea or an institution are arranged according to the logic of their subject-matter rather than strictly lexicographically. Thus the divisions of such an article correspond to the use of the word in Trinitarian doctrine, Christology, ecclesiology, anthropology, and so on, rather than to the use of the word (if a verb) in the active, middle, and passive voices, transitively or intransitively, &c. Grammatical usage, especially if it is markedly different from that of classical Greek, is illustrated in such articles by the citations rather than by section headings. In the case of 'non-theological' entries the arrangement is more often determined by linguistic considerations.

The relation of this work to Liddell Scott–Jones demands special attention. No word which is well attested in the latter and has no particular interest for the reader of the Fathers is included in this book. The absence of a word must on no account be understood as an indication that it is not used by the patristic authors. In order, too, to make more space available for articles of major interest, the common meanings of any word, already noted by Liddell Scott–Jones, are not repeated here unless they are of significance for patristic study. Thus a common word to which Liddell Scott–Jones devote a long article may appear in this Lexicon with only one, and that an unusual, meaning. It must again on no account be supposed that the ordinary senses of such a word are absent from these authors and have been replaced by another. In all such articles the corresponding entry in Liddell and Scott is, as it were, taken as read and this Lexicon merely adds certain new information to it. The user of this work is, in fact, assumed to have Liddell and Scott by its side.

Limitations of time and space have prevented this Lexicon from taking account of biblical words or usage, except in so far as the writers of the patristic period may illuminate them by their own comments. A word treated here may have already had an interesting history in the Septuagint and the New Testament, but this cannot be described here and the reader must refer to a biblical dictionary for the scriptural antecedents of our subject-matter. Nor can this Lexicon find room for the contribution which contemporary pagan authors, especially in the field of philosophy, would sometimes make to the study of Christian thought, or for reference to the writings of Philo, of which the Fathers, particularly at Alexandria, made so much use. It has had to leave many such studies, and the light which they can throw upon the thought of the Fathers, to other existing and projected dictionaries and encyclopedias, and to confine itself strictly to the field of the Greek Fathers themselves, together with such material from Christian papyri and inscriptions as can help to illustrate their language and ideas. Those writings of the Greek Christian authors which survive only in non-Greek languages have been, for the most part, excluded, although when an article on the use of an important theological term would be seriously incomplete without reference to some work or works of a Greek author which exist only in translation, citations are given from these, preceded by 'cf.'. Such writings include those works of Origen that have come down to us only in the Latin of Rufinus or Jerome, the Latin or other versions of the Apostolic Tradition of Hippolytus (cited either in Latin or in English translation from the oriental versions), and Nestorius' Book of Heraclides (cited from F. Nau's French translation of the Syriac text).

The List of Authors and Works is not intended as a patrology, but as an indication of those works to which reference is actually made in the Lexicon, and the editions which have been used. Migne's Patrologia Graeca has been used in all cases where there is no critical text available, except in the case of certain authors, such as Chrysostom, Cyril of Alexandria, and Theodoret, where older editions, used by Migne, furnish a more accurate text and their book, chapter, and section numbers (where they exist), together with their page numbers, are reproduced by Migne, so that the reader who uses Migne has no difficulty in finding the references.

Many critical editions are scarce even among good libraries; for the convenience of the ordinary reader of the Fathers, therefore, Migne references have been given in addition to those to modern editions. In some cases, where the Migne enumeration of chapters or sections differs from that of the critical text, the Migne number has been given within the bracket that contains the page and line of the edition and the Migne volume and column: e.g. Or. Jo. 1. 38 (42; p. 49. 8; M. 14. 100A), where 42 is the chapter number in Migne, p. 49. 8 indicates the page and line of the critical edition (in which the same chapter is numbered 38) and the volume and column of Migne follow.

Works are usually cited by books, chapters or sections, where these exist, according to the critical text, if any, rather than Migne, unless the contrary is expressly stated. Critical texts are usually cited by page and line of the edition, except in the case of verse or where the sections of the work are very short. In a few cases, where the sections are short and very easily found either in a modern edition or in Migne, no reference at all is given in addition to the book (if any), chapter and section (e.g. 1Clem. 42. 4). Sometimes, as in the case of Irenaeus or Cosmas Indicopleustes, the Migne reference suffices for finding a passage in the critical edition. In all such cases the Migne reference alone appears, though the critical text is, of course, always followed.

Where numbers are attached to works, such as homilies with identical titles by the same author, which are not numbered in the editions, these numbers have no bearing on chronological order but are introduced merely for convenience of reference. If chapters and sections are numbered concurrently in the editions, the sections alone are cited. The exegetical works of each author are listed in biblical order under the heading 'Exegetica'. They are normally cited by the enumeration of the edition, but if this is lacking they are cited by biblical chapter and verse. All biblical references are given with a colon between chapter and verse.

Alternative forms of a key-word are combined in one entry if they are not materially different and would be adjacent in alphabetical order. In any quotation or reference the form of the key-word first printed is to be assumed unless otherwise specified; but common variants such as -εια -ια, -ιον ιν, and -σσω -ττω are not separately noted.

Lower-case is the rule for nouns generally but a capital has been substituted in particular instances: resurrection (general) but Resurrection (of Christ); the gospel but, in the liturgy, the Gospel; and in lieu of the addition of 'the' in such cases as apostle (generally) but Apostle (=S. Paul); creation (created world or any act of creation) but Creation (of the world); Cross for the cross of Christ and as denoting the Christian religion; church (building) but Church (universal); and so for Fall, Law, Temple, Incarnation, etc.

It is the misfortune of the Editor of such a work as this at the present time that critical editions of the Fathers are appearing in large numbers and with great frequency. Since the manuscript was completed several important works which had to be cited from old editions reproduced by Migne have been edited, too late for the purposes of this book. It has been no part of the duty of the writers of this Lexicon to edit the texts which they used, although some particularly dubious readings have been prefaced by 's.v.l.' (si vera lectio) or in a few cases an obvious correction has been indicated. There can be no doubt, however, that the progress of the work of critically editing the Fathers will necessitate many corrections to this Lexicon and the deletion of certain entries. The opinions of patristic scholars about the authorship and dating of texts are also liable to rapid change. In the List of Authors and Works the findings of B. Altaner in his Patrology (Freiburg i. Br., 1950) and of O. Bardenhewer in his Geschichte der altkirchlichen Literatur (Freiburg i. Br., 1902–32) have guided the attribution of works to authors and the marking of works as dubious or spurious.

ADDENDA ET CORRIGENDA

I. AUTHORS AND WORKS

Note. The additional material in the following pages consists of further words found in Patristic authors but not attested, or poorly attested, in LS; second or third examples of words not listed in LS, of which only one or two examples have hitherto been given; instances, earlier than the first instances hitherto cited, of words not contained, or poorly attested, in LS; additional definitions and usages of words already treated in this Lexicon; words which are well attested in LS but have some theological or exegetical interest and which have not been included in the body of this work; and material supplementary to the existing articles, partly drawn from works which had not been published at the time when the publication of this Lexicon began.

Of the many new critical editions which have appeared since the completion of the manuscript of this Lexicon (see Preface, p. x) only those are now added to the list which have been consulted for the purpose of corrections and additions to the entries.
